"It's a little feedback, but it's not so much an end result," he said. "We're doing some things nicely, which are showing in the stats, but that is not where our goals are."

FAN FORUM

New fan pleased

Sports Editor,

No true Catbacker viewing the spectacle last Saturday in KSU Stadium went home disappointed. I was truly impressed with the 1990 team's spirit and determination. Being in the end zone seats, however, does offer a different perspective on things.

I'm from Michigan; more specifically, the University of Michigan, where football is a religion and over 105,000 maize- and blue-clad worshippers offer prayers, tailgate picnics, and tales of greatness.

Tickets for each Michigan home game are sold out before the season begins, and scalpers make a good, but legal, buck on the streets around the stadium every Saturday. And it's much like trying to find a legal parking place around the K-State campus lots on a weekday: a parking place in Ann Arbor on a home-game Saturday? Forget it!

Why am I relating this to you? Well, there are some observations I've made that I would like to pass on which may be helpful, or which I give you full license to laugh off as warped humor.

Our cheerleaders are great! Both the guys and gals are exemplary of great Wildcat spirit. The flipcard cheer started by Willie — "Go" and "Cats" — was an effective example of how much fun cheering can be. And by holding the sign upside down, it demonstrates how creative cheerleading can be!

We've got a marching band to be proud of here at K-State, and when the band fires up, everyone hears it. But I'd like to propose carrying it a step further — how about a "pep" band?

At Michigan, several volunteers carry the music to the fans, traveling around the stadium, stopping wherever the fans yell the loudest, playing a short, "fire up" piece to pump up the fans.

Let's get out of the losing spirit here at K-State. We've got a winning team, and when Nebraska and Iowa State come to town, this year they're going to know they're up against some winners (and some fans who really believe it)! When we go to KU this year and they come here next year, there's going to be more than in-state rivalry, there's going to be a dominating spirit that spells victory for our Wildcats.

Back in Michigan, win or lose, the Wolverines are a great team. And part of what makes the Wolverines great is the support and spirit of the fans. Here in Kansas, the K-State basketball team is great. And yes, I say, our football team is great, and has the potential of winning more games this season if the fans' spirit is behind them.

K-State pride runs deep. All we need is to bring it to the surface, expose it, shout it, and let the opposition know that when they come to K-State, they're in for lots of noise and a battle.

I left the stadium hoarse Saturday night, and feeling like punching out anyone who didn't hold the confidence and team spirit for the Wildcats after their 27-6 shellacking of the Leathernecks. Some people booed when the Leathernecks scored their points. Spectators hated to see those six, but I was looking at the 27 points on the other side of the board.

Let's all get behind our team and cheer loudly.

And everyone on our Wildcat team better know that everyone in those bleachers is behind you, pushing you, opening those holes, cussing out the referees for bad calls, and holding you high about their heads for every great play.

You guys are winners. The Wildcats are all winners. And I'm one football fan from Michigan who will expect more victories, more team spirit, more noise and cheers, and 25,000-plus Catbackers in KSU Stadium this Saturday afternoon at 1:10.

Small businesses show Kansas pride

By Paul Noel
Staff Reporter

The Kansas Entrepreneurial Showcase Lecture Series honored its first Kansas entrepreneurs for the year Thursday night in the Union Little Theatre.

The lecture, titled "What is an Entrepreneur," was sponsored by the Kansas Rural Enterprise Institute and the K-State Association of College Entrepreneurs.

"Many things can happen that are not planned in a business," said Bernie Hansen, president of Flint Hills Foods Inc. "One must be flexible and learn to adjust and address to any situation when it arrives."

Hansen said there are many benefits to working with a small business, but that flexibility is the most important aspect that any small company can have.

A small company can give a vast array of job and work experiences to its employees and a more personalized service to its customers, he said.

"I think Kansas has one of the most outstanding futures in the entrepreneurial field because we have the raw product to export," Hansen said.

But that raw material must be developed into a different line of products, he said. As consumers' tastes change, those changes must be addressed.

"It's a microwave nation. There is simply no demand for a large meal network and we address that factor," he said.

Being involved with the community is something Hansen said he has always tried to do.

"Small businesses are the lifeblood of rural Kansas," he said. "Anything you do in the development of a company has a positive effect on the community."

Tom and Marcella Ryan, two of the entrepreneurs honored, turned a dilapidated barn on their farm in Valley Falls into the Barn Bed & Breakfast Inn when their farm business declined.

"The opportunity for tourism in Kansas is unbelievable," Tom Ryan said. "Every dollar made in our facility turns over seven times in the community. We have generated well over $1 million for Valley Falls."

Ryan said an entrepreneur has to learn to deal with things as they happen and shift gears to ride them through.

"The Kansas property tax was devastating to us," he said. "Dealing with the Small Business Administration was unbelievable. There are things there you have to work with, but you can do it."

"We've seemed to have lost that friendly atmosphere in the cities — Kansas' rural communities have something they can market," Ryan said.

Dinosaur models on exhibit at mall

By Erika Parker
Staff Reporter

Volunteers and paid workers were painting, hammering and constructing parts of the "Zoology of the Future" exhibit up until the last minute in the Manhattan Town Center Wednesday evening.

And even then, workers were not sure it would be finished in time.

Tuesday evening Manhattan officials were informed that the "time tunnel," scheduled to be delivered by Dinamation Corporation, was damaged, and local workers would have to build one themselves.

"They called us at 6:30 p.m. yesterday and said that they (mall officials) want this stuff up, then they change crap on us, but I think we'll do all right," said Rob George, senior in construction science and maintenance worker for the Town Center. "I hope it will be all done. I wouldn't count on it."

The exhibit, opening today at 5 p.m., will be staying in Manhattan until Dec. 29. It depicts Earth and its animals 50 million years in the future and features full-size models of futuristic creatures.

Three of the animals featured at the show are robotic and have moving parts, such as shifting eyeballs, twisting ears and beating hearts.

One robot, called Night Stalker, represents a bat whose wings have developed into strong legs, and whose original feet have evolved into claws.

A model called Desert Leaper was created to resemble a hairless, 6-foot tall kangaroo. Gigantelope is 8 feet long and 6 feet tall, said Angela Baier, development officer of the zoo.

Each animal was modeled after creations by Scottish paleontologist Dougal Dixon. He is also author of "After Man: A Zoology of the Future." The book looks at how animals might evolve in the future if humans did not disturb the natural selection process.

The museum will be in the new Sears wing. The grand opening today will include a ribbon-cutting ceremony and celebrity guests.

At the beginning of the exhibit, tourists will walk through a 20-foot time tunnel, showing the continents of the earth shifting and changing over the next 50 million years, Baier said.

Hawley to spend day at state fair

Shuttle astronaut to provide children insight about space-food connection

By Danette King
Collegian Reporter

Each year the Kansas State Fair brings excitement to both the young and old alike. Today, astronaut Steve Hawley will add to that excitement.

Hawley, a native of Salina who was on the first flight of Space Shuttle Discovery, will spend the day telling about his experiences in space.

Hawley's fair appearance is in conjunction with the theme of the Kansas Foundation for Agriculture in the Classroom's booth "Food, the Most Important Fuel in Space."

"Who better to help us tell kids the connection between Kansas agriculture and space than Hawley?" said Sharon Tally, KFAC administrator.

While at KFAC's booth in the Pride of Kansas building on the fairgrounds in Hutchinson, Hawley will be talking to children and working with classes from the area that have scheduled visits.

Rich Hager, KFAC's state fair committee chairman, said he worked with NASA, Kansas Farm Bureau and the Kansas Cosmosphere in arranging Hawley's visit.

"We wanted to bring him here so he could work with the kids," Hager said. "But there was still a lot of red tape."

KFAC's booth has expanded on the space theme by including questions such as: "On the moon, night and day are each how many Earth days long?" The questions are used in a scavenger hunt that is conducted in the Pride of Kansas building. Once a questionnaire is completed, the child receives a prize donated by exhibitors in the Pride of Kansas building.

KFAC's "Ag-Citing" booth has been very busy during the first part of the fair, Tally said. Things are expected to pick up even more with Hawley's visit.

Mardelle Pringle, KFAC's chairman, said the Kansas Cosmosphere helped with ideas for the booth along with the mural backdrop to aid in presenting the theme.

Retention

Because it takes one to three years to calculate the results of retention data, there are no results at this time that can explain exactly how the University did since the implementation of its new efforts.

Some of the long-term goals for higher retention are to meet all of the minority students' financial needs with aid packaging, to maintain and enhance well-defined support and tutoring services, to increase multicultural programming and staff involvement, to establish a multicultural affairs committee in each college and administrative unit and to create a three-day orientation course for new minority students.

to give diversions for minors in possession.

"I've only given four diversions since I started working here last November," Christians said. "And the only reason I gave those was because they would've lost their jobs if they had been charged.

"We inforce MIP's pretty rigidly even though some areas don't," she said. "In fact, we've been told by ABC that we make up a lot of their work."

Norwood said Manhattan averages 200-300 prosecuted cases of minors in possession in a year.

the right direction."

New Mexico State suffers from a depth and numbers problem, much like K-State. The fullback, Jimmie Mitchell, virtually has all the rushing yardage, and junior college transfer David Chisum will help attack in the air.

"Offensively, they are a football team that seems to have attempted to become a balanced team with the run and the pass," Snyder said. "They have got some speed on the outside with some receivers, and they use their running back as a receiver a lot. So they will put the ball in the air."

Another major plus for the Aggies on the offensive side lies in place kicker Dat Ly, who is a graduate of Wichita East and transferred from Wichita State. He has already kicked a 48-yard field goal this season and has a career high of 50 yards.

"They have an awfully fine place kicker in Dat Ly. I saw him at pregame warmup at New Mexico, where he hit them from about 60 yards away," Snyder said. "Field position becomes an extremely important factor since the ball doesn't have to cross the 50 very far before they are a threat to score."

Standing in the way of K-State's first 2-0 start since the Independence Bowl year of '82 is the need to cut down on mistakes and turnovers, while using the same lineup as last weekend.

"We will start with Carl (Straw), but the gap is definitely closed. I wasn't unhappy with Paul (Watson). Paul made his mistakes while he was in there, but he got us into some decent things," Snyder said. "Carl did enough fine things to be where he is, and I just don't want him to throw those interceptions."

Straw, who completed 15 of 28 passes for 246 yards and one touchdown against Western Illinois, echoed Snyder's thoughts on the need to cutdown the mistakes.

"I have got to get away from the little mistakes that will hurt this team inside the 20-yard-line," Straw said. "I have been playing this game for a long time, and I should not be making those little mistakes."

Bunker said. "Theresa earned the No. 2 spot with a strong finish, and I expect Valerie and Chris to have better tournaments."

The tournament field includes Iowa, a Top 20 team, and preseason Top 30 pick Nebraska. K-State defeated the Cornhuskers for the first time in school history last week.

"That right there will show you what beating Nebraska meant to our program," Bunker said. "That was a big surprise for us."

education to the students, and without the money for equipment and maintenance support, that quality could be jeopardized.

"Engineering students have been very supportive on a percentage basis," Rathbone said. "According to surveys, 75 to 80 percent have shown strong support."

David McIntyre, senior in electrical engineering and student senator from the College of Engineering, said he supports the fee but doesn't agree with the way it has been handled.

"I want to see our program go forward, but I don't believe the engineering fee is the answer," McIntyre said.

He said he doesn't want the money to be taken from the students, but if something isn't done he said he thinks it will be harder for the engineering program to progress forward.

"I voted it down both times in Engineering Student Council because of the way they were going about it," McIntyre said.

important for us to watch these plans closely.

"We should not undermine our graduate or undergraduate educations for the enhancement of research programs. All levels of the University should benefit for this planning to be truly successful," he said.

Johnson asked for students to support an addition to Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex.

Enrollment has increased by about 3,000 students over the last three years, and trends show that a bigger percentage of students are using the Rec Complex, Johnson said.

"I believe we can build a reasonable addition to the complex and include the operating budget necessary for the addition without an increase in student fees," Johnson said. "We could realistically begin building on the Rec Complex a year from now if we get it approved this fall."

An architectural study is currently being conducted on the Rec Complex. Johnson expects the issue to come to a student vote this fall.

Before Johnson's speech Student Senate Chairman Chris Kern announced the "I'm Driving" campaign, a designated driver campaign initiated by Student Senate in conjuction with several Manhattan bars.

"It's one way to help our students come home safely when they've been out drinking at night," Kern said.

The group of people who are undecided are going to be a big target in the near future. If the people knew everything our tax dollars are being spent on they would probably be upset, Copeland said.

"They're spending our tax dollars unwisely," Copeland said. "It is going to be a tough decision for those undecided people. Do you put your loyalties before peoples' homes?" he said.

The current military situation shouldn't make a lot of difference in the decision, he said.

"There's no sand here to train on with the tanks anyway. Maybe they will just have to find a place over there to train on, but not out here," Copeland said.

U.S. gets billions to assist in crisis

CRISIS IN THE MIDDLE EAST

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Senate Republican leader Bob Dole said Sept. 16 that financial contributions by other nations in support of the U.S.-led drive against Iraq was welcome news for budget negotiators struggling to assemble a deficit-reduction package.

"We're going to score it one way or the other," Dole said of the contributions from such nations as Saudi Arabia, West Germany and Japan. Secretary of State James A. Baker III returned home from a 11-day trip early Sunday, his pockets bulging with $14 billion in new aid pledges.

"I don't know who gets the check. ... But we understand that it will have an impact on what we finally do in the budget summit."

In another development Sunday, President Bush warned the Iraqi people in a TV broadcast that they stand "on the brink of war" because Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait.

But Bush, in a taped message from the Oval Office, said "War is not inevitable. It is still possible to bring this crisis to a peaceful end."

Bush's eight-minute talk was broadcast on Iraqi television, apparently in its entirety.

The White House, meanwhile, applauded the United Nations Security Council's unanimous condemnation Sunday of Iraq's raids on the embassy compounds of France and other nations in Kuwait.

"We fully support the actions taken by the United Nations," administration spokesman Sean Walsh said.

U.S. diplomats at the United Nations said the Security Council now would consider an aerial blockade against Iraq and secondary sanctions against nations flouting the U.N. trade embargo.

Dole and House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., appearing on the NBC-TV's "Meet the Press" program, said there was widespread agreement in Congress and across the country generally that the United States should not have to shoulder all of the costs of deterring Saddam Hussein.

"There is no question that there's a feeling in the country and in the Congress that we shouldn't bear these burdens alone, either the military side of it or the financial side of it," Foley said.

But Dole, describing the initial response as "certainly good news," questioned whether support will remain strong if it becomes necessary to keep U.S. military forces in the Persian Gulf region for an extended period.

During his trip, Baker received pledges of $12 billion from three oil-rich Arab nations: Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates and the Kuwaiti rulers overthrown and exiled by Hussein.

West Germany extended nearly $2 billion for military aid and economic assistance to countries affected by the economic embargo on Iraq. Egypt and Syria said they would send more troops. Italy volunteered $145 million and a squadron of Tornados. Britain and France said they will send troops.

The U.S. end of the military buildup is costing an estimated $1 billion a month. This enormous outlay is taking place as congressional and White House negotiators try to reach agreement on paring the federal deficit by $50 billion this year, $500 billion over five years.

Bush's national security adviser, Brent Scowcroft, interviewed Sunday on the CBS-TV program "Face the Nation," made clear that the military buildup in the gulf is aimed at impressing Hussein.

"We want him to know we are serious," Scowcroft said.

But he distanced the administration from comments by Gen. Michael J. Dugan, the Air Force chief of staff, who was quoted in Sunday editions of The Washington Post as saying U.S. military planners believed that if war

Launch experiments readied

BioServe center relies on microgravity environment

By The Collegian Staff

BioServe Space Technologies, a NASA-sponsored research center in K-State's biology department, is preparing numerous experiments for NASA space launchings within the next year.

The third-year research program has experiments ready for a December sounding rocket launch and the March STS37 space shuttle launch.

The center has more than 30 experiments available for both launches, said Kenneth Buyle, special assistant to the director of biology. The foci of the experiments include nitrogen fixation, immunology, cell formations, lymphocyte activation, liposome formation and vires.

Joust 1, the suborbital sounding rocket, will be launched in December from Kennedy Space Center in Florida, Buyle said. During the flight, microgravity is obtained for 15 minutes before the rocket lands in the ocean.

The shuttle experiments are middeck experiments. The astronaunts must to turn them on, observe, turn them off and handle anything unexpected that might happen, he said.

"Captain Steve Nagel and Specialist Jay Apt were trained at the University of Colorado last month in how to operate the tests in space," he said.

BioServe was founded in 1987 by a joint proposal from the K-State Biology Department and the Department of Aerospace Engineering Sciences at the University of Colorado. It is one of two of the 16 centers sponsored by NASA that focus solely on life sciences.

The most important aspect of the center is that the research is done in a microgravity environment, Buyle said. The experiments are first tested in the lab to determine if it is feasible to send them into orbit. This saves limited space.

Besides preparing the tests, the center serves as a direct link between industry and space.

"BioServe is a center for the commercial development of space," said James Guikema, a member of the BioServe steering committee.

Commercial firms, including Lockheed Corporation and Instrumentation Technology Association, are involved with the center's experiments, he said. ITA is based in Maviron, Pa., and is supplying experiment equipment for the upcoming launches.

"The purpose of BioServe is to provide a framework or catalyst for cooperative work between the space centers and industrial participants," Buyle said.

Parabolic flights with a modified KC-135 airplane have been done with BioServe experiments on them, he said. At the top of the climb, there is a period of 20 to 30 seconds of microgravity.

Originally, the biology department had 10 members — five professors and five students — trained to operate the experiments during the flights, Buyle said. Due to graduations, the number is now seven.

Their training involves testing for physical and psychological fitness, for handling the stresses of microgravity and for oxygen deprivation. They are also trained to handle emergencies.

K-State phone enrollment system may be installed within 2-4 years

Software ordered, $100,000 needed to buy hardware

By Christy Gritton
Collegian Reporter

Enrollment by phone is in the works for K-State.

Registrar Don Foster said he expects the University will be using a touch-tone phone enrollment process in 2 to 2½ years.

"We are in the process of purchasing some of the software that will allow for enrollment by phone," Foster said.

He said the University will also need a computer hardware component that costs $100,000 to make enrollment by phone possible.

"I guess it's just a matter of time and money," he said.

Students at Iowa State University are already enrolling in classes using the touch-tone phone system.

The process was used at Iowa State for the first time in the fall of 1987, said Kathy Jones, associate registrar at Iowa State.

Students using this process must first visit their adviser and get a degree-audit sheet and a registration-authorization form. The degree-audit sheet lists the classes students have taken and need to take. The registration-authorization form lists the day and time students may start enrolling and informs them of any holds they may have that would prevent registering, such as an unpaid parking ticket.

The adviser assigns students four-digit personal-access numbers. Students may then call the enrollment center and will be talked through the enrollment process by a computerized voice.

By pressing certain buttons as indicated by the computer, students enter their identification number, personal-access number and the code of the classes they want. After students are finished entering all of the data, the computer reads the students' classes back to verify them.

Advisers meet with students during a 23-day period. Students are also scheduled specific times they can enroll during this same period. Students may enroll anytime on or after their assigned time, however, with no penalty for late enrollment.

Jones said the enrollment center is open from 7:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m. and almost all students can easily find time to enroll within those hours.

The phone process allows students to enroll from any location with a touch-tone phone. For students without access to a touch-tone phone, there is one available on campus.

The system allows people to register without standing in line, and students are allowed to register until a month before classes begin.

John Neibergall, visiting professor of journalism and mass communications, attended Iowa State in the spring of 1989 while finishing his master's degree in journalism.

He said the touch-tone phone process made the enrollment procedure easier.

"It seemed efficient. It was a real user-friendly system, and I think the students liked it," Neibergall said.

Sears opens in Manhattan Town Center; downtown to remain economic contender

By Charlie Gatschet
Collegian Reporter

Downtown Manhattan will lose its last large retail store Tuesday when Sears officially opens in the Manhattan Town Center.

Nevertheless, downtown merchants hope they still will be able to achieve economic success.

"Sears' moving opens up a lot of things for us," said Kim Brecheisen, project coordinator for Manhattan Mainstreet Corp. "It's a good opportunity for development on that corner."

Brecheisen said they are considering a couple of offers to bring in new businesses to the buildings formerly occupied by Sears and J.C. Penney. Both stores are now in the Manhattan Town Center.

Downtown retailers said they knew there would be hard times when the mall came in. There was speculation that downtown would become a professional center and give up retail business. Brecheisen said that that won't happen.

"Manhattan Mainstreet wants to keep the core of downtown Poyntz business-oriented," she said. "We definitely want to remain retail-based."

She said the downtown area is interested in having professional tenants, but the emphasis will remain on retail merchants.

Ernest Dickey, Sears manager, said he doesn't feel his company abandoned the downtown market by moving to the mall.

"It was a business decision," Dickey said. "Manhattan Town Center is the main focal point of retail in Manhattan."

Chris Heavey, Manhattan Town Center manager, said certain concessions were given to attract Sears. Sears joins J.C. Penney and Dillard's as anchors to the mall.

Anchors are usually big department stores that attract many people to shopping centers. In exchange for being an anchor, they often have more flexibility to negotiate leases.

"There has been some give and take and some concessions because they (are a mall anchor) — but the bottom line is 'will Sears enhance Manhattan Town Center?' and we believe it will," Heavey said.

Dickey said Sears suffered some lost business when the mall opened, but has been profitable recently downtown.

He said the downtown building has become too old and too small to remain competitive. Dickey said increasing traffic flow is the main reason for the move.

The new Sears store uses 65,000 square feet of an 87,000 square-foot expansion to the mall, and opens Tuesday.

The new building will double the net selling space of the 38-year-old store at 4th Street and Houston

Soviet Union in economic crisis; protests mount

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Tens of thousands of demonstrators marched to the Kremlin Sunday demanding that President Mikhail Gorbachev and his prime minister resign to take responsibility for the country's deepening economic crisis.

"The Economy is a Disaster" read banners carried by the crowd, which gathered under heavy rain at Gorky Park, crossed the Moscow River and then headed for central Moscow, where they listened to speeches just outside Red Square.

The crowd of about 50,000 followed the same path taken by demonstrators earlier this year. Many marchers carried white, blue and red Russian flags from the pre-Bolshevik era, and they shouted "Gorbachev Resign!" and "Ryzhkov Resign!"

Participants in rallies in May and July called for the removal of Prime Minister Nikolai Ryzhkov and the leadership in general. The demand that Gorbachev step down, however, was new.

Ryzhkov and Gorbachev support different economic programs. The prime minister favors a more conservative approach to reform, while Gorbachev has thrown his support behind much of a radical blueprint for swift and dramatic reform supported by legislators from the Russian republic.

Gorbachev, however, has been criticized for not implementing market reforms sooner. Soviets face shortages of food and many other products; store shelves are bare.

Sunday's rally came a day after a leading reformer, Moscow Mayor Gavriil Popov, said on national television that Ryzhkov's Cabinet should step aside for a government trusted by the people, the 15 Soviet republics and foreign nations.

Popov said Ryzhkov had no real plan for reforming the economy.

Ryzhkov, who appeared in a separate TV program Saturday night, defended his plan for moderate economic reform and said, "We will stop at nothing to implement it."

Ryzhkov and Popov were interviewed briefly on the evening news program Vremya, with longer versions played later on separate channels.

Popov, who quit the Communist Party in July and favors the plan for radical economic reform drawn up by economist Stanislav Shatalin, said, "The government did not have, does not have and does not want to have any real plan for a transition to the genuine market."

He said Ryzkhov's government was responsible for the deplorable state of the Soviet economy, the lack of consumer goods and a growing deficit.

Thatcher on celebration tour

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — British Premier Margaret Thatcher arrived Sunday to begin a three-day visit to celebrate the collapse of communism and discuss the merits of private enterprise.

Thatcher, on a three-nation tour that also includes Hungary and Switzerland, is the first British leader to visit Czechoslovakia in more than 50 years.

She had scheduled several private meetings Sunday before talks with President Vaclav Havel on Monday.

"The visits to Czechoslovakia and Hungary are rather by way of celebration and encouragement for the future," said a British government spokesman, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Gasoline tanker explodes

BAY CITY, Mich. (AP) — A tanker carrying about 1 million gallons of gasoline exploded and burned Sunday on the Saginaw River, injuring most of the 18 people aboard and spilling fuel in the water.

The fire was too hot for firefighters to douse, and officials waited for it to burn itself out, said Coast Guard Lt. Tom Koontz.

One person from the ship was missing, said Coast Guard Petty Officer Gerald Backus. Gov. James Blanchard visited the site and declared the blaze an emergency, freeing state aid and assistance.

The fire was reported at 8:45 a.m., while the tanker was unloading at the Total Refinery Dock Facility and was still burning Sunday evening.

Authorities warned spectators to clear the area in case of multiple explosions.

"A few people blew right off the boat and slammed ashore," said Bay City police Officer Kenneth Adcock. "The sky is covered with black smoke. If it blows again, it's going to be a big one."

Store's snub brings outcry

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Hundreds of customers of a department store chain are are tearing up their credit cards and threatening a Christmas-season boycott in a revolt over the retailer's uncharacteristic snub of Planned Parenthood.

"I don't think they expected any big outcry," said Toni Tschann of the Minnesota Women's Political Caucus. "And frankly, I never thought I'd hear from this many. But people aren't standing for it."

Shredded credit cards began arriving by mail at Dayton Hudson Corp.'s downtown headquarters after the company's charitable foundation confirmed on Labor Day weekend that it was halting $20,000 education grants to Planned Parenthood of Minnesota, ending a 22-year association.

The decision to end the grant came about the time the Christian Action Council of Falls Church, Va., said it would boycott Dayton's and other corporations for supporting Planned Parenthood.

Dayton Hudson spokeswoman Ann Barkelew said the decision had nothing to do with pressure from special-interest groups, but arose from confusion about the donations, which some misconstrued as support for abortion.

Poll puts Finney out in front

WICHITA (AP) — Democratic State Treasurer Joan Finney led Gov. Mike Hayden 49 percent to 31 percent, with 18 percent undecided, in a poll released in Sept. 16 editions of the Wichita Eagle.

It was the second week in a row that a poll showed the first-term Republican governor trailing his challenger. Last Sunday a Topeka Capital-Journal poll found 48 percent of respondents favoring Finney to 35 percent for Hayden, with 9 percent undecided.

The Eagle's Kansas Survey found Hayden trailing Finney among male and female voters, in towns of all sizes, in all income groups, in five of seven occupational categories and in four of the state's five congressional districts.

Asked last week whom they would vote for if the election were that day, 48.7 percent of the registered voters surveyed supported Finney and 31.3 percent named Hayden. Undecided voters totaled 18.3 percent. Only 1.7 percent of voters named some other candidate.

Hayden requests itemization

SALINA (AP) — At least $200 million of excess spending could be cut from Kansas' $5.2 billion budget, State Treasurer Joan Finney said Sunday.

Gov. Mike Hayden, Finney's Republican opponent in the November gubernatorial race, responded by challenging her to itemize what she considers excess in government.

Since winning the Democratic primary in August, Finney has consistently accused Hayden of mismanaging the state's budget.

Although she couldn't provide details as to how she would trim $200 million from the budget, Finney said her first move as governor would be to enact a state hiring freeze.

"The ones that are really overspending are in the computer areas, in the fiscal accounting ... for openers," Finney said during an interview prior to the Santa Fe Days parade in downtown Salina.

"Other areas we would look to for general spending would be for travel, both foreign and domestic, and I would analyze closely the Department of Commerce budget," she said.

However, she said she would not be prepared to seek $200 million in budget cuts immediately upon taking office because she would need time to study budget issues.

Reverend protests city rule

SALINA (AP) — People are more important than pavement, said the Rev. Alan North on Saturday as he protested the city's refusal to give him a permit for his church because the parking lot isn't paved.

"I don't have my freedom of worship when the city comes in and says do it our way, or close it down," North said while standing in the parking lot of the New Life Full Gospel Church.

Mike Peterson, the city's chief building inspector, said the church must have 16 paved parking spaces to be awarded a permit. A 1988 ordinance set pavement requirements for new businesses. By 1993 all businesses must pave parking areas.

The ordinance was adopted to control dust and to prevent gravel from getting into the streets and storm drains, Peterson has said.

North said the church cannot afford to pave its gravel parking lot. He estimated the job would cost at least $6,000.

New head of entomology to study insect resistance

By Candace Plett
Collegian Reporter

C. Michael Smith said he could spend all day sharing surprising anecdotes about insects. The newly appointed head of entomology has a wealth of tales, from the role of bugs in the history of free enterprise to the practice of entomophagy — the consumption of insects as food.

"They're high in protein and low in cholesterol," he said. "I taught a class on it once. You probably wouldn't know you were eating a grasshopper if it was fried in a batter or dipped in chocolate."

Smith comes to K-State from the University of Idaho where he directed a smaller entomology program for two years. He said he was drawn by the strength and tradition of K-State's department.

He said he and his wife, Rita, have Midwestern roots and are most comfortable in a town where the major economic contributions come from the local university and from agriculture.

Another reason he came to K-State was the University's historic role in insect-resistance research in plants.

"One of my main interests has always been this research. It originated here at K-State," he said. "Dr. Reginald Painter began studying the selection of plants with genetic resistance to insects in the 1940s. Because this practice could help eliminate the need for pesticides, interest in this kind of biological pest control has been growing over the years."

Smith said the research has resulted in agricultural and ecological benefits.

"There are now over 100 varieties of crops grown in the U.S. that have genetic resistance to insects," Smith said. "These varieties have made a significant impact on the use of pesticides."

Much of his knowledge about developing pest resistance is compiled in his book, "Plant Resistance to Insects — A Fundamental Approach."

"Several books had been written on the topic, but none of them were aimed at being a practical textbook for teaching," he said. "I wrote the book using my outlines from 10 years of teaching a related course at Louisiana State University."

This is the first semester Smith won't be teaching classes.

"It's tough. I'm having some withdrawal symptoms," he said.

"Dr. Walt Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture, convinced me that I could get more research done by helping the researchers in the department than by doing experiments myself."

Woods said the addition of Smith to the College of Agriculture was a good one.

"Dr. Smith is an experienced administrator with a solid record of accomplishments," Woods said. "We are looking forward to his able and progressive leadership."

Smith's duties as department head will include faculty assistance, student recruitment and development of long-range plans for the department.

"Currently, there's a void in the field of entomology," Smith said. "Many students who have the option of working in the lab or the field choose the lab. But there is a very real need in the field and greenhouse for graduates to further develop novel, practical methods of pest insect control.

"Entomologists have always been more interested in ecological aspects of environmental protection than they are given credit for. They are far more than just people who go around spraying insecticides."

Smith said the entomology department has nine undergraduates majoring in the crop-protection and pest-science curriculum in addition to 25 graduate students from around the United States and the world.

K-State has produced some distinguished alumni, he said, indicating a shelf lined with graduate dissertations.

Smith, who received his bachelor's degree in biology from Southwestern Oklahoma State University in 1971 and earned M.S. and Ph.D. degrees in entomology from Mississippi State University, is eager to work with his new associates.

"I have a lot of excitement about the faculty. There are people in this department with some really unique specialties. I think they are improving the efficiency of Kansas agriculture and improving the quality of life in the state."

J. Kyle Wyatt/Staff

C. Michael Smith is taking on many new administrative duties with his appointment as head of the Department of Entomology. Smith left a similar position at the University of Idaho to head K-State's program.

Foundation, Alumni Association to move

Additional room benefit in offices

By Rob Batchman
Collegian Reporter

The KSU Foundation and Alumni Association will soon move to the former Kansas Farm Bureau building at 2321 Anderson Ave.

New additions to Throckmorton Hall and the need for space are the reasons for the move across town, said David Weaver, property manager for the Foundation.

"We have to move because Throckmorton Hall is expanding," Weaver said. "Phase II of Throckmorton will be initiated approximately July 1991. We need to be out of here because the building that we're in will be razed. The west wing of Throckmorton will be occupying where we are right now.

"It's obviously a disruptive thing," he said. "But it's also something that's welcome because we do need more space."

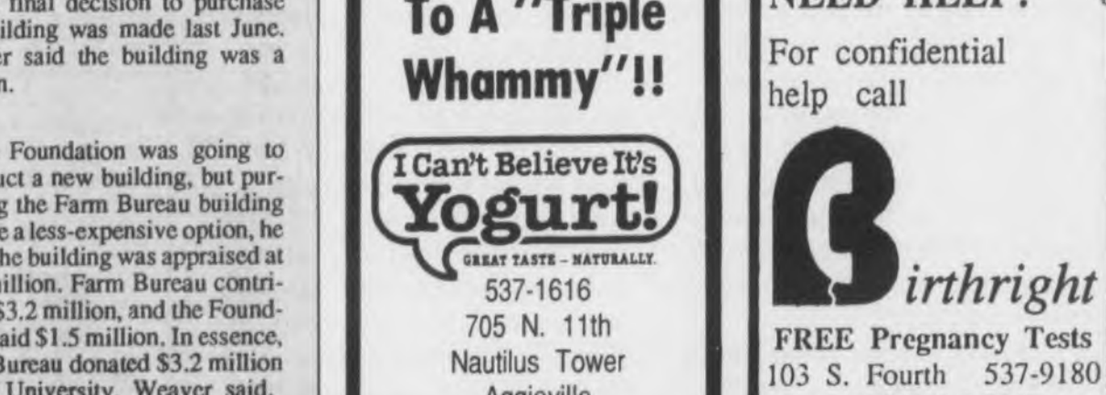
The Foundation and Alumni Association are presently in Hollis House at the corner of Claflin and Denison avenues.

"We've outgrown our present building," Weaver said. "We've already had to lease other space to take care of some of our overflow. We were going to have to do something irregardless. This just put a specific date on it."

They will probably move in March or April, he said.

"The architects will be beginning the reconfiguration and redesign on the interior Nov. 1, and we're projecting to start the actual remodeling Jan. 1," he said.

The final decision to purchase the building was made last June. Weaver said the building was a bargain.



The Foundation was going to construct a new building, but purchasing the Farm Bureau building became a less-expensive option, he said. The building was appraised at $4.7 million. Farm Bureau contributed $3.2 million, and the Foundation paid $1.5 million. In essence, Farm Bureau donated $3.2 million to the University, Weaver said.

Diversity, fraternities incompatible at K-State

As a university that names diversity as one of its ideals, K-State's close affiliation with greek organizations is out of place.

The University professes to seek a diverse student body, including non-traditional and minority students. Few minority or non-traditional students are members of greek organizations, however. The composite pictures of the University's fraternities and sororities show row after row of smiling, 18-to-22-year-old white people.

The concepts of elitism and conformity are innate to greek organizations. According to publications by the Interfraternity and Panhellenic councils, "going greek" offers students opportunities unavailable to non-greek students, including "the opportunity for personal growth and individual achievement" developed through group identification.

It's the same concept that drives people to join exclusive country clubs. Membership entitles people to socialize with others of similar interests. The club has already done the work of selecting who belongs and who doesn't. Members are assured of meeting the appropriate people, no one unacceptable or too different.

There's even a probationary period, to make sure new members are compatible with the organization. Pledgeship, or associateship, is a time of learning about the tradition of the organization and getting acquainted with its members. Learning the secret handshake and other rituals help ground the new members in the meaning of the organization.

These rituals have sometimes included hazing. Although K-State was one of the first universities to formally abolish hazing, it has continued to occur here. In the past three years, at least two greek organizations have been placed on probation for hazing violations. Last spring, Greek Affairs sponsored a speaker who reminded fraternity and sorority members of their ethical and legal obligation not to engage in the physical or psychological torture of their pledges.

Like country clubs, greek organizations are corporations. They are for-profit businesses. Members pay an average of $2,400 per year to live in a greek house and take advantage of the opportunities available for personal growth and individual achievement. In effect, the instant social circle of brothers and sisters is purchased by the members. Buying the friendship of others is much easier than making friends on one's own based on mutual interests and shared experiences. For members of greek organizations, the mutual interests and shared experiences begin after the checks are signed.

Greek organizations seek to enhance the outside interests of their members. Some fraternities and sororities require their pledges to sign up for at least two extracurricular activities. Greeks also participate in community service activities and contribute money to charities. These attributes, however, do not outweigh the less-flattering aspects of greek membership.

Most greek organizations were founded in the late 1800s. The founders sought to inspire their members to be ideal men and women, pursuing goals of personal excellence. They wanted to set higher standards for themselves than their fellow students. Over the years, however, actually living up to these professed higher standards has proved to be a challenge.

Among the characteristics attributed to the present-day greek system are snobbery, irresponsibility, racism and sexism. Aspects of the current greek system contradict the social standards of equality and non-discrimination and mock the founding principles.

The greek system is out of date. The University's endorsement of the greek system implicitly condones institutionalized elitism and diminishes its efforts at diversity. Greek organizations should be treated like the country clubs they resemble and should be disentangled from the University.

Manhood needs definition

Kevin Zwink

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

It seems we live out our lives in a continual state of transition. We're always making transitions from one phase of life to the next. Our move into the collegiate environment was one such transition. Many of us uprooted ourselves from the comfort and security of home, high school relationships and high school activities. We placed ourselves into a situation in which we found it necessary to question the validity and sensibility of our own system of beliefs — sometimes realizing that the foundations of some of our beliefs would not hold together when under the light of the new affirmations we were acquiring as new young adults.

One such belief that does change, whether we play an active role in the changing process or not, is our beliefs and attitudes about relationships. We sacrificed certain beliefs for a set of new beliefs, concerning relationships, when we made the transition from the adolescent environment to the exploratory environment of the "adult world" — our grounds for exploration being the college context. An important transition we must make is our need to totally redefine our definition of "what it means to be a man." This is obviously directed towards me and the gender I represent. But also, in certain ways, towards the opposite gender. Although there are certain reasons why this question is relevant to relationships, sometimes the definition of manhood is mistakenly connected to the opposite gender and the relationship issue.

So there we were, fresh"men" in college. Away from, for the first time, the imposing moralities of our parents. We were now in a position to define ourselves as men. One plus seemed to be that we had our former ideas about manhood supported by the examples of our parents and the community in which we grew up. So we asked ourselves, "What does it mean to be a man?" And, of course, our first answer was, "To be a man, we must have an intimate relationship with a woman." Getting involved in relationships and learning about relationships are significant parts of maturing. But our first mistake is, for some of us, that we think our definition of manhood is directly tied to the role a woman plays in our life. We seem to believe our definition of manhood is directly related to womanhood, or rather, what we think it means to be a woman.

So, as new young adults, we begin securing our own set of beliefs. Beliefs we chose for ourselves rather than having them chosen for us. We explore our own sexuality. Sexuality not merely refering to the physical act, but to all the subtleties of interaction when intimately involved with someone. Some of us learn, as we should, that what it means to be a man is completely independent from womanhood. Just as men aren't necessary for a woman when she defines her womanhood, women aren't the key factor in defining our manhood. The interactions and actions that take place when involved intimately with someone does reflect how we define our manhood. But we should be able to define ourselves as men without women being the essential element to that definition.

What is obviously happening is that as women are redefining their roles in this world, men are having to do the same. As women take charge of defining their womanhood independent from men, men must define their manhood independent from women. The roles are clearly different. One script is written by a woman, read by a woman, and the roles are played by the woman. Men can only be an audience, like it or not.

Maybe we should follow the example, if we haven't already. Women have redefined their roles, so we can either stagnate or redefine our own. We need a script written by a man, read by a man and the roles played by the man. And we must acknowledge that the definitions, the two differing scripts, are independent of each other.

And now the real challenge. Both of these plays are being acted out on the same stage at the same time. We have defined ourselves independently from each other, woman as woman, man as man. Now all that's left is to interact as fellow human beings who are each unique in themselves but share the same stage.

So let us imagine that this play is going on right now. We're learning, getting it right sometimes, getting it wrong sometimes, but still learning. Let us also imagine that many of the characters on stage have coupled and are learning the joys and pains of intimate relationships. Most of these coupled characters have learned about their relationships in a semi-relaxed college atmosphere — the big problems being when study time is and when togetherness time is.

What interests us most at this point is the couple at center stage looking somewhat bewildered and frustrated. It seems they are about to go through the next transition. They are both getting ready to graduate. Their character? They are both ambitious. They both have drives for becoming productive members of society, and they both have wishes of contributing something of substance to this world. They are trying to come to a decision.

Does one sacrifice certain dreams and ambitions for the other? If they define themselves as independent, what fair compromises must be made? Do they merely go their separate ways and remain exclusively independent? It seems their playful, unpressured attitude about their own relationship has taken a serious and consequential turn. I guess we can only hope the best for them both and hope that they make the decisions that they want to make. I suppose for some, the choices are easy, but for others, like these two, the decisions are understandably difficult.

I turned to ask the older couple sitting next to me for some insights on these strange new developments, but decided I shouldn't. They too looked bewildered and frustrated about something. I guess the difficulties never stop, they just change.

LETTERS

Issue ludicrous

Editor,

I would like to encourage the University to include a required course covering U.S. history and philosophy in the core curriculum. It is painfully apparent from Michael Malone's letter in the Sept. 13 Collegian that the spirit and philosophy of the Constitution and the history of the United States are still mysteries to him. The rights of the people are not "ideas that society has generally accepted as true." If so, women would still not be able to own property or to vote, Jim Crow would still be the law of the land and Manifest Destiny would still be legitimizing our government's efforts to "civilize the savages," although I'm not sure they ever abandoned that policy in the first place.

I appreciate Scott Arford's comments regarding the Union's appalling treatment of smokers. After moving the smokers out of the staterooms into the hall, the Union management and Governing Board stated that the hallway north of the staterooms would be available for smokers. They then procede to rent that space to every retailer who wants to make a few quick bucks, but they fail to make any provision for those students, faculty and staff who smoke to have a place to study, eat a meal, informally meet with colleagues, or have a cup of coffee on break. Their rationale is that smokers can go down to the recreation center, with eight small game tables, pool tables and the bowling alley for background noise. Compare this to the more than 100 tables available in the staterooms for quiet study, quiet meetings, and relatively quiet meals. The Union's attitude is cavalier at best and deliberately discourteous in the meantime.

I would also like to point out that of all of the buildings on campus, the Union is the only public-access building with a smoking area inside the building with any sort of meeting or eating facilities. Durland, Bluemont, Justin, Seaton, Fairchild and Anderson Halls are all non-smoking buildings or have limited smoking areas (the boiler room, the basement bathroom, etc.) and no place to study, read, have a meal, a meeting, etc. The Union is ostensibly a place to meet for all persons on campus — students, faculty and staff. I do not think that a 10 feet by 30 feet section of one building is too much to ask, even for such lowly and misbegotten creatures as smokers. I am getting tired of the self-righteous manipulation-by-guilt routine of many non-smokers. How many non-smokers got picked up for DUI, destroying public property and underage drinking since school's started?

As for who's right about rights, I find this whole issue somewhat ludicrous in view of the fact that we are preaching tolerance and understanding from one side of our mouths, "but only if you do it my way" from the other. So much for "rights as generally accepted by society."

'Pump' twists 'rebel' plot

By Stacy Lentz
Collegian Reviewer

Crank up that James Dean teen angst! The rock 'n' roll rebel genre is back. This time, Allan Moyle brings every teen-ager's dream to the screen in "Pump Up the Volume."

Giving the teen-age rebel movie his own personal twist, Moyle adds new life to an overused plot. The film addresses censorship, the right to an education, teen-age suicide, and living life to its fullest in a way that both young and old will enjoy and pay attention to.

This stand-up-for-your-rights movie stars Christian Slater as the seemingly shy Mark Hunter. Hunter has recently moved from the East Coast to a suburb in Arizona where he begins to operate his own pirate radio show.

He becomes an instant hero to the kids in his high school as Hard Harry, a bizarre air personality who advocates self-expression. His identity is a mystery to the students who pass him in the hall.

After only two on-air appearances, he has already gathered a huge cult following and has dealt with such issues as suicide and freedom of speech.

The freedom-of-speech issue becomes the central message in this film as the establishment gathers its forces to squelch Hard Harry.

A peripheral theme deals with Hunter's self-confidence. Hunter only feels confident when talking over the airwaves. With the help of Nora, played by newcomer Samantha Mathis, he finally comes out of his shell, realizing that making a statement about what you believe is worth the price you may have to pay.

"PUMP UP THE VOLUME"

Slater adds another fine performance to his list, which includes "Heathers" and "Young Guns II." His angst-ridden teen-rebel characterization once again demonstrates his acting ability. This complex portrayal alone makes the movie worth seeing.

Mathis also has a promising future. A cross between Molly Ringwald and Ally Sheedy, Mathis is perfectly cast as the offbeat Nora.

"Pump up the Volume" has a soundtrack that lives up to its name. The music, including cuts from Soundgarden, Concrete Blonde, Cowboy Junkies, and Peter Murphy, fits the message of the movie.

This well-written drama, packed full of entertainment and fresh young talent, never loses sight of Moyle's theme. In fact, the combination of theme, talent and soundtrack make "Pump Up the Volume" an exceptional film whose time has come. It is one of those rare films that is not only entertaining but also thought-provoking.

Records fall as 'Cats romp, 52-7

Jackson scores 4 TDs, rushes for 165 yards in thrashing of Aggies

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

The fans at the K-State vs. New Mexico State contest Saturday got a treat that had been missing from K-State football for more than two decades.

They witnessed an all-out slaughter from the opening kickoff, as the Wildcats pounded the Aggies for a 52-7 victory.

The win sent K-State to 2-0 for the first time since the Independence Bowl season of 1982. The Aggies' record fell to 0-3.

"It is fun when it's over, but I don't want our kids to feel like it is over before it's over," K-State Coach Bill Snyder said. "I know that it is pretty hard at halftime to tell your kids that they (New Mexico State) could come back, but I have seen stranger things happen."

> "It is fun when it's over, but I don't want our kids to feel like it is over before it's over.
> —Bill Snyder
> K-State football coach

The victory marked K-State's most-lopsided win since beating Kansas 46-0 in 1955, and it was the first time the 'Cats broke the 50-point barrier since a victory over Oklahoma in 1969.

It was also a game that saw K-State, not its opponent, call off its big dogs early. Quarterback Carl Straw was replaced by Paul Watson at the end of the second quarter, and most of the second half was contested by second- and third-string players.

"I don't think that there is a football team in the country that is going to take their number ones out in the first half, regardless of the score," Snyder said. "As soon as you establish the momentum in the second half, then you start moving your people around."

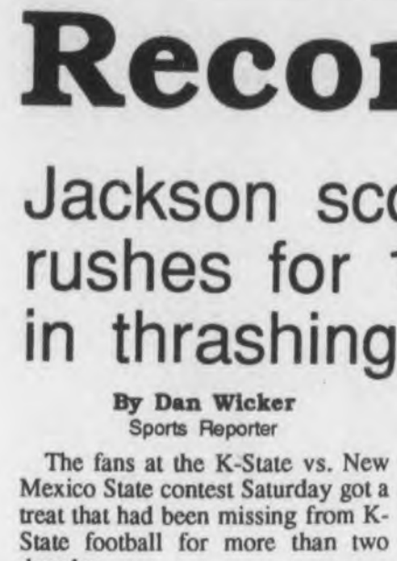
Everything that could go wrong for New Mexico State did. After four plays from scrimmage, K-State recovered one of the three fumbles they would recover in the game. The Aggies, however, showed a strong defense that forced K-State to give up the ball on downs inside the one-yard line.

"We were on the six-inch line in the first series of the game and didn't get the dog-gone thing in. I wasn't very happy with that, and I let them know I wasn't very happy with that," Snyder said. "You are not going to beat too many football teams if you can't knock it in on the six-inch line."

Straw and his teammates must have taken notes, because on their next four possessions the ball went into the end zone to open a 28-0 first-quarter lead.

In the first quarter, Pat Jackson rushed for two of his four touchdowns in the game, tying a single-game record. Jackson ended the game with 156 yards, marking the first time a K-State back had rushed for more than 100 yards since the 1988 season.

Rogerick Green blocked a punt that was returned for a touchdown by Thomas Randolph. It was the first blocked punt returned for a touchdown since the Colorado game in 1978. Straw ran 14 yards on a quarterback draw for the last six points with 12 seconds remaining in the quarter.



The second quarter continued the Wildcats' dominance. K-State intercepted two more Aggie passes, increasing their season total to seven, equal to the amount they amassed all of last season.

The Wildcats went to the locker room at half with a 42-0 lead, a different mood and more confidence than usual. The 42 points were more than any other K-State team had scored in a half in the post-war era.

"I was proud of their mood. They were attentive and listened, and they realized a week ago we went out at halftime and lollygagged around until they finally did something and got some points on the board," Snyder said. "They were proud of where they were but realized good football teams play as well in the second half as they did in the first."

The scoring concluded in the third quarter with Jackson rushing for his fourth touchdown and freshman Tate Wright hitting a 44-yard field goal to put the score over the 50-point mark.

It was Wright's first college field-goal attempt, and the seven extra-point conversions he kicked tied a school record set in both 1949 and 1950.

Running game effective in lopsided Wildcat win

By David Svoboda
Sports Editor

The K-State offensive attack, if just for one day, was balanced Saturday.

And Bill Snyder was a happy man as a result.

Since he took over as head football coach, Snyder has preached the importance of developing a solid running game to go with the passing attack that has appeared to be head-and-shoulders above the rest of the Wildcat offense.

During each meeting with the press, Snyder said his team had to develop a tougher mentality when running the football.

The line and the backs had to nurture the same type of attitude the receivers had developed — an attitude that would have them expecting to succeed, not hoping they would.

And if statistics don't lie, the line and backs may have made a giant step Saturday toward the level of performance Snyder wants from them — and needs from them.

K-State had 303 net yards on the ground against New Mexico State in the 52-7 romp, the most rushing yards amassed by a Wildcat team since the final game of the 1983 season when the 'Cats rolled up 311 yards against Colorado.

"This feels great," said offensive guard Doug Grush, who opened many of the holes 'Cat backs ran through on the day. "We've been working real hard in practice, and now it has finally paid off in a game."

One beneficiary of the offensive line's hard work Saturday was tailback Pat Jackson, who rushed for 156 yards on 21 carries. Jackson's day rushing was the 13th-best in K-State history.

"I think I played decent," Jackson said. "But a lot of times, I got the ball and there were holes big enough that anyone could have run through them."

Jackson ran in between, around and through the holes, tying a school record by scoring four touchdowns.

And when Jackson wasn't running the ball across the goal line, quarterback Carl Straw and fullback Curtis Madden were. Straw's 14-yard scamper on a quarterback draw and Madden's 1-yard burst capped a first half in which K-State scored five touchdowns on the ground. Jackson's final TD in the third quarter ran the team total to six for the day.

To put that number of touchdowns into perspective, K-State scored only eight touchdowns on the ground during all of 1989. That's right, the whole season.

The 'Cats now have that many rushing TDs in two games in 1990.

"You've got to hand it to the offensive line," Jackson said of the efforts of Grush and his line-mates. "People have been saying all along this year that they're new and that they're young, but I don't buy that. They're just good."

The team's new-found success on the ground doesn't surprise Grush.

"It's just one part of our arsenal, really," said Grush, a transfer from American River (Calif.) Junior College. "I'd just as soon run the ball every play. Offensive linemen love it when we run the ball."

Football wins best kept in perspective; only time will tell how good team can be

Next up, Northern Illinois.

When you're around K-State football coach Bill Snyder on a daily basis, you become a forward thinker in a hurry or you get out of the way.

The past? It's just a place from which game film is gathered, mistakes have been made and lessons have been learned.

But once all of these things have been done, the past is virtually meaningless. Memories are nice, but the here-and-now makes additional memories — possibly even sweeter memories — a legitimate possibility.

So, next up, Northern Illinois.

But first, let's look at the game film from the most impressive home football contest many Wildcat fans have ever had the pleasure of witnessing.

It was a 52-7 thrashing of a New Mexico State team that looked, at least for a day, worse than any K-State team ever looked, even in the valleys of the program's recent futility.

No game in recent memory — not even the 36-7 smashing of Kansas on national television in 1982 — saw the 'Cats so dominant in virtually every phase of the game.

There were points scored on the ground, through the air, on special teams, via the kicking game. Yes, Virginia, there is more than one way to score in college football. Passing the ball isn't the only way.

And, for a second straight week, the defense was very, very tough. The linebackers swarmed, the defensive backs were on receivers like rock-hard paint on the KSU Stadium turf and the line pounced on forced fumbles.

Yep, all this happened in KSU Stadium on Saturday. Trust me, I kept looking at the scoreboard to prove it to myself. I even watched the sports on four TV stations Saturday night to reaffirm the notion.

But, for now, let's look at the game film with a little bit more of a discerning eye so that we can prepare for Northern Illinois.

The defensive line was better, but they still gave the quarterback too much time to throw. The draw play still looks like it will work against a young and swarming defense.

Offensively, there are quarterbacks who can run the option, and others who probably shouldn't. There was still the inability to punch the ball in from inside the one-yard line early in the game.

But I'm not a coach, and Snyder and staff are paid to make sense of game film, I'm not.

All I know is that what I heard following Saturday's contest was a breath of fresh air.

Snyder and his players were excited, but they realized that two wins do not a season make.

A win is a win is a win, but the realist in Snyder knows that Western Illinois is a Division I-AA opponent, and New Mexico State holds the longest current losing streak in Division I-A.

Those are facts.

But, the fact remains that K-State hasn't opened a season with back-to-back wins since the Independence Bowl season of 1982.

And this isn't to say that this team should even be mentioned in the same breath with that team. Jim Dickey's 1982 squad was comprised of several redshirt juniors and seniors that made that group considerably more experienced than this one.

But this also isn't to say that this team might not surprise a few people along the way. It's just too early — after two games and two wins — to make your travel plans for a fun-filled, football holiday.

But it's never too early to dream. I'll admit I found myself doing that Saturday in the second quarter. You just have to make sure that you work toward making your dreams a reality. They're not going to happen on their own, you know. Too many people have 'em.

The 1982 Wildcats opened with three straight victories, all at home. The 1990 'Cats will play game No. 3 on the road, in DeKalb, Ill., against a team that beat them 37-20 in Manhattan last year.

If K-State can find a way to win that contest, then you might just be able to start invoking comparisons with the 1982 team without fear of being laughed at.

But don't expect Snyder to get caught up in the whole deal. He's too busy drawing up a game plan to give his team the best possible chance to beat Northern Illinois this weekend.

And, win or lose, Snyder's week-by-week focus has this team doing something it has had a hard time doing for the past several seasons — looking at the calendar with anticipation, not dread.

Next up, Northern Illinois.

'Buffs fall to 1-1-1 as Illini rally; Sooners, Cowboys, Tigers win

By The Associated Press

It's easy to remember Colorado's record — 1-1-1. But it's getting harder to recall the fired-up bunch of Buffs who could do no wrong last year in breaking the Oklahoma-Nebraska Big Eight domination.

The ninth-ranked team from Colorado failed to hold a lead Saturday and dropped a 23-22 heartbreaker to No. 21 Illinois, making the Big Eight 0-2 for the day against the Big Ten.

Iowa State, sustaining worrisome injuries to running back Blaise Bryant and quarterback Chris Pedersen, lost in similar last-minute fashion at Minnesota 20-16.

Elsewhere in the Big Eight, No. 14 Oklahoma got a big rushing day and crushed No. 13 Pittsburgh 52-10; Missouri shredded Utah State 45-10; Oklahoma State struggled past Division I-AA Northern Iowa 33-23 and Louisville beat Kansas 28-16. Nebraska had the day off.

Suddenly Colorado can't get a break. Illinois battled back from a 17-3 deficit to tie the game in the third period, then a safety gave the lead back to Colorado. Jim Harper put Colorado on top 22-17 with a 26-yard field goal early in the fourth quarter before Howard Griffith scored on a 1-yard run for Illinois with 1:18 to play.

Nobody is sicker of the Big Ten than Iowa State and Coach Jim Walden. Iowa State is 0-19-1 against Minnesota since winning in 1898. And Walden is 0-10 against the Big Ten. The Gophers rallied Saturday from 13-0 and 16-13 deficits to beat the Cyclones.

Bryant, the No. 4 rusher among Division I-A athletes last year, sustained a deep bruise to his right shoulder and had to stand on the sidelines after rushing for 177 yards and four touchdowns the week before.

Pedersen sustained possible ligament damage to his right knee during the Cyclones' final drive. He had passed for 257 yards and run for 79.

Kenyon Rasheed, Ike Lewis and Dewell Brewer each ran for more than 100 yards as Oklahoma piled up 450 yards on the ground and became the first team to score 50 points on Pitt in 19 years.

Missouri was a team on a mission against Utah State. Embarrassed by losing its lead in the fourth quarter the week before against TCU, the Tigers got three rushing touchdowns from Ronnell Kayhill and two from Michael Jones in routing the visitors. Kayhill also had a non-scoring run of 50 yards as the Tigers averaged 4.9 yards per carry.

Oklahoma State, which gave up a 99-yard touchdown pass from Jay Johnson to Kenny Shedd, did not take control of Northern Iowa until the fourth quarter when it scored a field goal, a touchdown and a safety in a span of about six minutes.

Kansas, a three-touchdown underdog, played Louisville closer than expected.

"We figure we're better than most people give us credit for," said defensive back Paul Friday.

Denver to face Okoye, KC

By The Associated Press

DENVER — Imagine how good Christian Okoye would be if he ran properly. If he lowered his shoulder instead of running so upright. If he followed his blockers better. If he tried running past defenders instead of through them.

On second thought, don't imagine it. That, truly, would be an opponent's nightmare, a Nigerian Nightmare, as Okoye is nicknamed.

The Kansas City Chiefs' 260-pound running back thundered through NFL opposition in 1989, leading the league in rushing with 1,480 yards.

Although the Chiefs and the Denver Broncos met twice last year, Okoye hardly played, leaving some Denver players to wonder what all the fuss was about. Okoye, bothered by a pinched nerve in the preseason, carried only five times for 23 yards in a regular-season opener against Denver. He missed the rematch with a bruised thigh.

When they meet again Monday night, no Bronco defender will be so naive.

Okoye, a standout discus thrower who first handled a football in 1984, is the key to Monday night's game, according to Broncos Coach Dan Reeves.

"We have to stop their running game," Reeves said. "And that means getting to Okoye before he gets up a head of steam because he is so difficult to bring down."

Asked to compare Okoye to any other player, Reeves said, "Gerald Perry, Ken Lanier, guys like that," referring to his 305- and 290-pound offensive linemen. "I don't think I've ever seen a running back like that. I wasn't old enough when Marion Motley played. How many running backs have you ever seen that are 260 pounds and can run? That's a great nickname for him. I imagine he makes a lot of people have nightmares. I really can't compare him to anybody."

Reeves said the Broncos would prefer to tackle Okoye "on his first step. They don't do anything fancy. They just try to mash you on the line of scrimmage with a big offensive line and a big back. It's not like they have plays that really break him open. He gets hit and pounded on every time.

"It was 130 degrees on the field in Kansas City last week, and he carried the ball 20-some times. Not only is he big, he's in condition. You don't see those kind of guys very often."

In a 24-21 season-opening victory over the Minnesota Vikings, Okoye rushed 28 times for 98 yards, scoring on a 2-yard run in the fourth quarter.

"I think Christian is a much-improved player at this point," Chiefs Coach Marty Schottenheimer said. "He has a much better understanding of what we're trying to do. He's able to make cuts he didn't see and didn't make last year."

Bo's shot helps Royals salvage final game, 9-6

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A pesky little thing like the wind kept Bo Jackson's home run from being truly dramatic Sunday.

Still, it was good enough to break a tie in the seventh inning and carry Kansas City to a 9-6 victory over the Cleveland Indians on a day the Royals homered four times.

"If I would have had the wind, and I don't mean to brag about it, but if I would have had the wind with me, that ball would have gone a lot farther," Jackson said of the drive off Efrain Valez, which landed about 20 rows up in the left-field seats.

"It was a fastball up and I turned on it," Jackson said. "They had been pitching me away all series, but I knew he was going to come in. He had made me look like an idiot on the changeup, so I knew he was going to come in on me."

Jackson's homer followed Bill Pecota's first career inside-the-park home run and solo shots by Kevin Seitzer and George Brett. The Royals ended Cleveland's four-game winning streak while winning for the second time in 13 games.

Pecota's two-run homer in the third gave Kansas City a 6-4 lead. The ball took a high hop off the artificial turf and bounced over the head of left fielder Dion James.

"As I rounded first, I saw the ball rolling to the wall, and I figured it must have bounced over his head," Pecota said. "It has a tendency to do that when the turf gets hot. It was a weird game. A lot of balls seemed to hit just out of the reach of a lot of guys."

A series of strange mishaps struck the Indians. Starter Tom Candiotti had a recurrence of a muscle spasm in his shoulder while completing his final warmups and left without facing a batter.

Felix Fermin was hit in the leg during batting practice and had to leave the game. Stan Jefferson left with blurred vision.

"We came back and tied the game," Manager John McNamara said. "We just couldn't hold them. We did come back and tied them, then we couldn't shut them down in the seventh."

Jeff Montgomery (6-3) was the winner, pitching 2⅓ innings in relief of Hector Wagner.

Trailing 6-4, the Indians rallied in the seventh off Carlos Maldonado and Montgomery after Mark Davis pitched 3⅓ hitless innings to run his scoreless streak to 10⅓ innings.

Rout roar

A crowd of 19,200 cheered on the 'Cats as they routed the New Mexico State Aggies 52-7 Saturday at KSU Stadium.

Passing attacks help ranked teams get wins

By The Associated Press

Fancy passing helped five of the top 11 teams to victory this weekend.

Rick Mirer, making his first start for Notre Dame, threw an 18-yard touchdown pass to Adrian Jarrell with 1:40 left as the top-ranked Fighting Irish won their opener by beating No. 4 Michigan 28-24.

Mirer completed 14 of 23 passes for 165 yards and had one pass intercepted as the Irish beat Michigan for the fourth straight time.

While Notre Dame won with someone new, Brigham Young rallied behind someone old. Ty Detmer threw three fourth-quarter touchdowns as No. 5 BYU (3-0) rallied from a 29-7 halftime deficit for a 50-36 victory over Washington State (1-2).

Craig Erickson completed 32 of 47 passes for 467 yards and four touchdowns. The 10th-ranked Hurricanes beat California 52-24 after losing to BYU last week.

Todd Marinovich threw for 240 yards and a touchdown as Southern Cal (2-0) dropped Penn State to 0-2 for only the second time in Joe Paterno's 25 seasons as coach. Marinovich completed 22 of 34 passes in the No. 6 Trojans' 19-14 victory.

Volleyball team drops final

The K-State volleyball squad won one match before losing to host Ohio State in the finals of the Buckeye Invitational this weekend in Columbus, Ohio.

The 'Cats defeated the University of Toledo in a Friday night match, 15-13, 15-7, 15-12, before losing Saturday in a non-tournament match against Butler, 15-7, 15-13, 15-3.

The spikers then faced the seventh-ranked Buckeyes in the final match of the tournament. Ohio State won in three games, 15-2, 15-8, 15-12.

K-State evened their record at 4-4, while Ohio State went to 5-3. The 'Cats will play again at Wichita State on Tuesday, September 25.

'Cat golfers finish 5th

The K-State women's golf team fell short of its goal of a top-three finish at the Minnesota Invitational over the weekend, taking fifth in the nine-team event.

Tournament-host Minnesota captured the team crown at the Les Bolstad Golf Course in Minneapolis, posting a four-woman team score of 968. The Golden Gophers tied with Big Ten Conference counterpart Iowa but won in a playoff. K-State shot 999 for the 54-hole tournament.

The Big Ten claimed the top three spots, as Michigan was third at 985. Nebraska, a team the Wildcats defeated last week in the Cyclone Classic at Ames, Iowa, was fourth at 989.

For the second straight tournament, junior Adena Hagedorn led the 'Cats. Her three-round total of 244 placed sixth individually.

Chris Adams, who carded the best round for K-State with an opening-day 79, was ninth at 247. Valerie Hahn was 13th at 249, followed by Denise Pottle, 41st at 275, and Theresa Coyle, 49th at 293.

Former Salina astronaut stresses agriculture with tales from space

By Danette King
Collegian Reporter

"What is space like?" "Have you almost got hit by meteorites?" "Do you get to eat hamburgers?" "What do you do in space?"

Former astronaut Steve Hawley handled questions like these when he visited with classes Friday at the Kansas State Fair.

Hawley shared his experiences with children who came by the Kansas Foundation for Agriculture in the Classroom booth.

Hawley, a Salina native, has been in space three times, most recently for the launching of the Hubble Space Telescope in April. He is now the associate director of the Ames Research Center in California.

Hawley said he believes that agriculture is now greatly affecting research in space.

"Until recently, it would have been a stretch to make a connection between agriculture and space," Hawley said.

Hawley's appearance at the fair was in conjunction with KFAC's theme "Food, the Most Important Fuel in Space" to help encourage kids to think about the importance of agriculture in space.

This is part of KFAC's mission, said Rich Hager, KFAC state fair committee chairman.

"We feel students are not getting a proper education about agriculture," Hager said.

A study done at K-State showed that many Kansas students have had no exposure to agriculture. Hager said that KFAC does not want teachers to teach new subjects, but rather that they use agricultural examples when teaching.

Hawley used many agricultural examples when he spoke with a fourth-grade class from Pratt and a second-grade class from Haven. He asked each class how they would grow the food they needed while in space.

"The problem is that you can't take it with you, so how would you produce it?" Hawley asked the fourth graders.

The students responded by saying that soil, water and sunlight were needed to grow food.

Hawley explained different experiments that were being conducted concerning food production in space.

"A lot of the experiments that are done in space are generated by students," Hager said. Among these are experiments to determine if bees will produce honey in space and the effect of space on tomato plants.

Beau Tillman, a fourth-grade student from Pratt, found Hawley interesting.

"I liked it best when he talked about taking off (in the shuttle)," Tillman said.

Many of the students said they found Hawley's stories exciting and, once they were allowed to ask questions, Hawley barely had time to get to all of them.

"The kids seem to be tremendously interested, but they are misinformed," Hawley said. "They don't realize that the shuttle doesn't go the moon."

Hawley said he believes educators need to capitalize on the student's enthusiasm.

"We need to find something that stimulates them and shows them there are things that relate to other things they understand." Hawley said. "It's good to do this with agriculture in Kansas."

Hawley emphasized the importance of being aware of the educational basis children receive.

"We need to teach them not to be afraid of technology," he said.

Hawley, who has been with NASA since 1978, believes that the students can learn of the importance of technology by looking at the space program.

"The program has developed like I expected it would have," said Hawley when asked about NASA's progress. "There is a sense of disappointment because we haven't flown as much this year as we wanted to."

The disappointment of few shuttle flights and problems with the Hubble Space Telescope are lessons Hawley hopes the kids can learn from.

"The lesson is that there is a very important return on a common sense and reasonability check," Hawley said. "Everyone needs to be sensitive to stepping back and looking at where you are at."

Besides spending time at the KFAC's booth, Hawley appeared on the Farm Bureau Arena where he

African awareness stressed this month

By Shannon Meyers
Collegian Reporter

African Awareness Month is the stage for a five-year development plan to promote Africa, said Neba Tangie, public relations officer for the African Student Union.

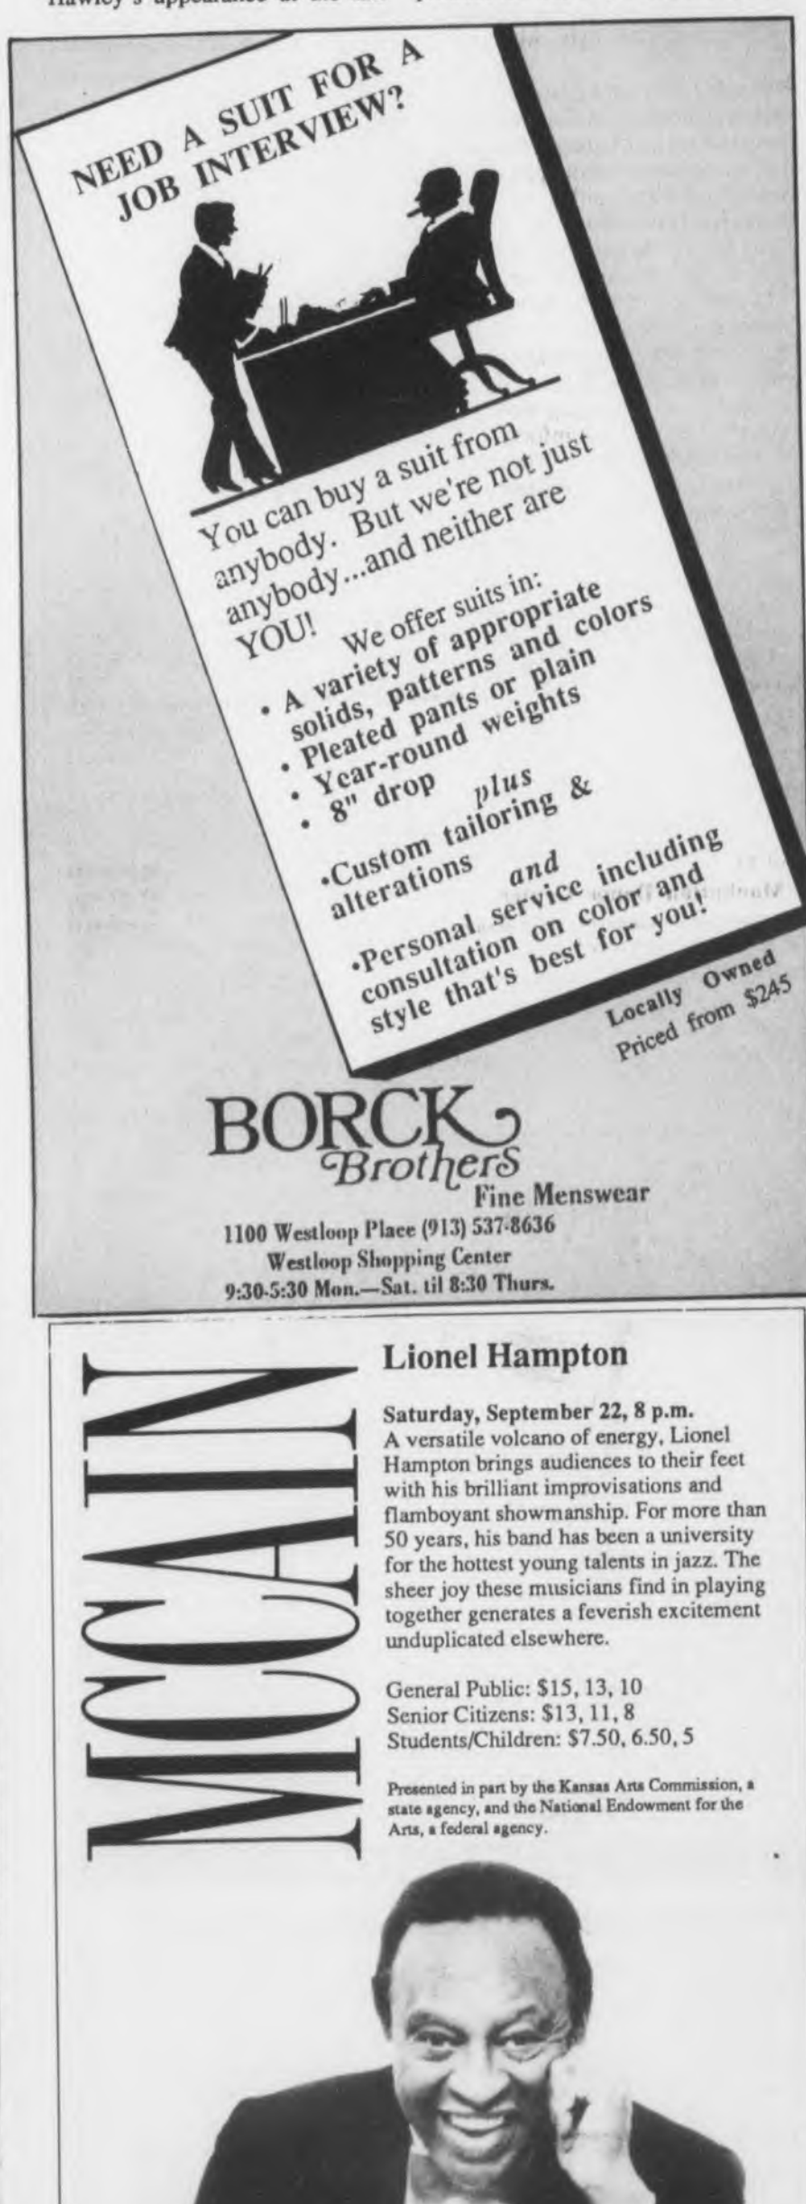
"This is the first African Awareness month ever," Tangie said. "We selected September because we wanted to get students and people in the community thinking about Africa before they got too involved with school."

The goal of African Awareness Month is to expose students to African history and culture and to promote awareness about the every-day African experience.

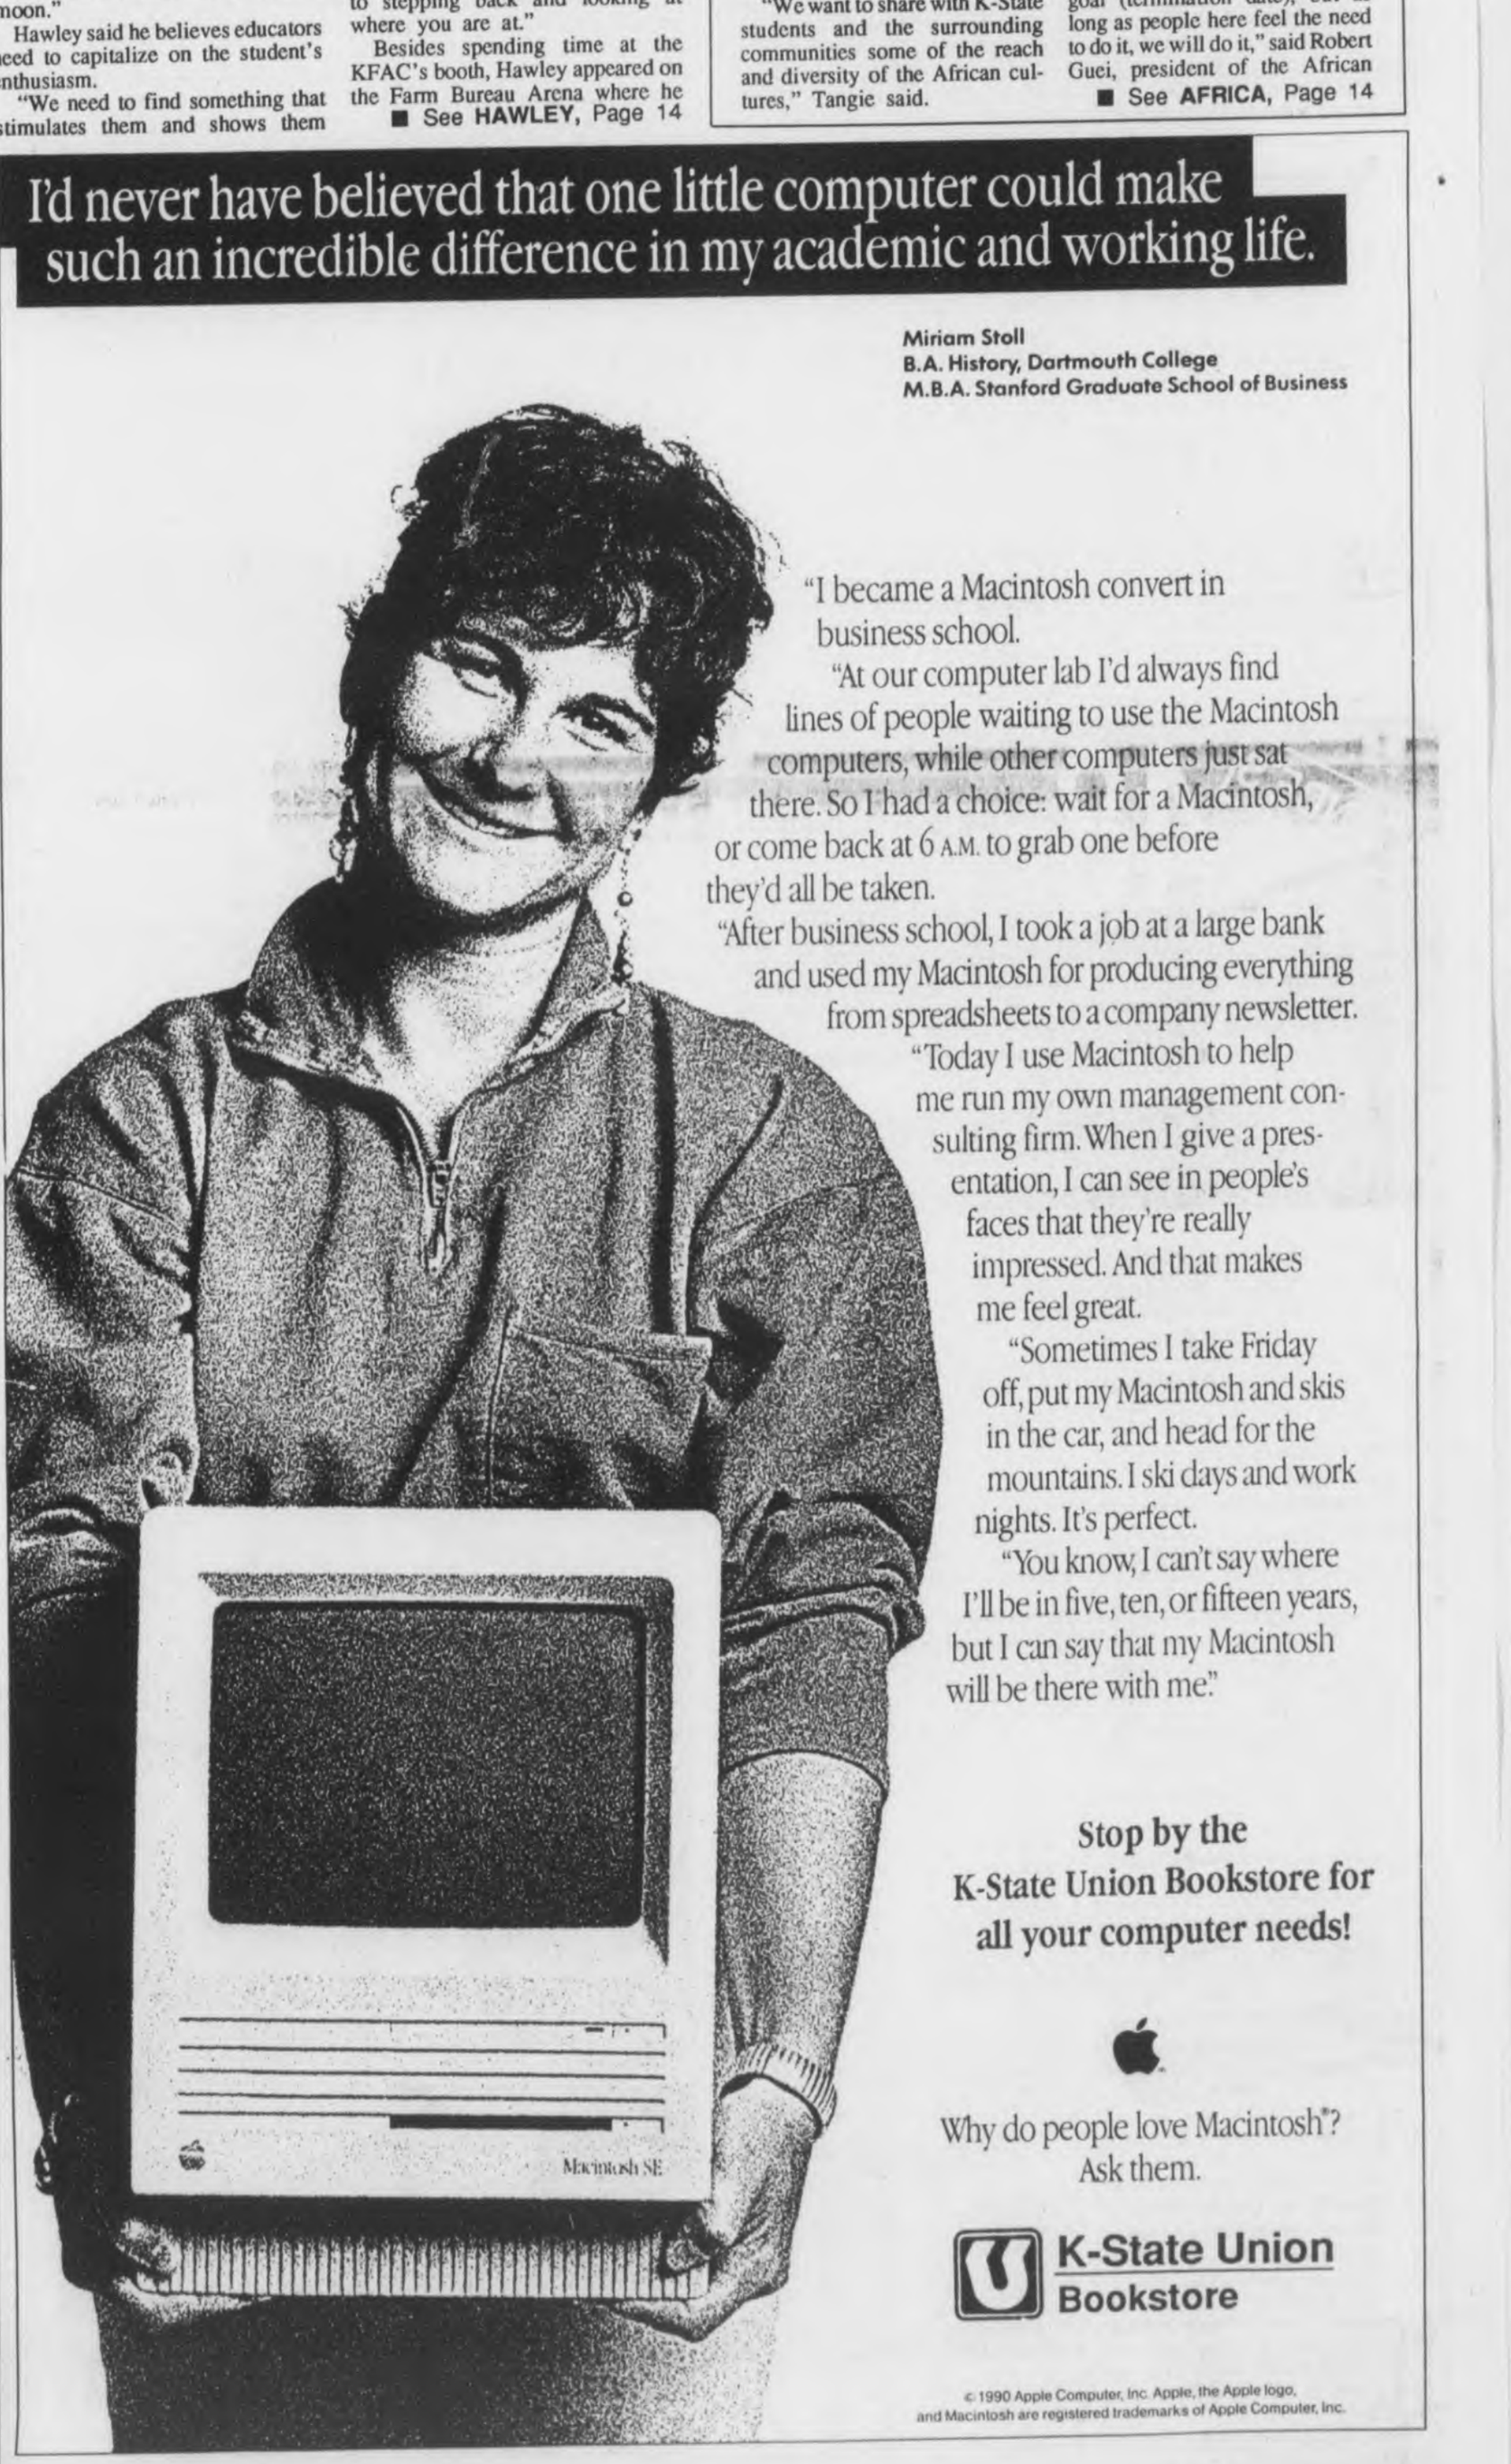
"We want to share with K-State students and the surrounding communities some of the reach and diversity of the African cultures," Tangie said.

This month also gives African students and interested people an opportunity to look into Africa's history and plan for its future.

"Many times, people seem to emphasize the failures instead of concentrating on solutions," Tangie said. "This month is to let people see the other side of Africa, not just apartheid and hunger."



Tangie said the panel discussion "Can Africa Feed Itself?" on Sept. 19 in Union Room 212 will focus on new alternatives in agriculture and solutions to the hunger problems in Africa.



A movie, traditional dancing and an opera on Sept. 21 in the Union Little Theatre will showcase the cultures of ethnic groups from different places in Africa.

A potluck dinner in the International Student Center on Thursday, Sept. 27 will allow all those people involved with African Awareness Month to gather and discuss further plans for promoting Africa.

"I don't think we really set a goal (termination date), but as long as people here feel the need to do it, we will do it," said Robert Guei, president of the African

Censorship plagues 2 Live Crew; sex tracks not heavy on 'Banned'

By Heather Anderson
Collegian Reviewer

It seems that unless rap is about selling British Knights, Pepsi or tacos, it makes people nervous.

It's impossible to review 2 Live Crew's "Banned in the U.S.A." without first discussing the controversial issue of censorship.

The group attributes the banning of it's first album to Florida's older white population being uncomfortable with the idea of black men making as much money as white men.

The problem more likely stems from the apparent discomfort the conservative majority has with sexuality.

I don't see what the big fuss is about. True, some of the lyrics are misogynic, but adults can choose not to listen to them and the group doesn't market its albums to children. Just as the words on the title track say, 2 Live Crew played in adult-only clubs, and even released two versions of its album. The level of offensiveness on this release is milder than Eddie Murphy's "Comedian," which brought little attention.

In order to make money in the music industry these days, many artists have resorted to tried-and-true formulas to achieve mass appeal. M.C. Hammer, for example.

The group pokes fun at Hammer's commercial approach, saying "Hammer, you know we love you ... but you know you can't touch this."

2 Live Crew's performance on the recent MTV music awards wasn't impressive. This is not surprising because it was forced to be a mass-marketed rap group — something it's not. 2 Live Crew just can't blend in with Paula Abdul and Madonna.

I am somewhat impressed with this album. It's obvious that rapper Luke, who used to be known as Luke Skyywalker until he was banned from using that name, is intelligent. Unfortunately, this intelligence is displayed inconsistently from track to track.

I haven't heard "As Nasty As They Wanna Be," which is probably more offensive than this album, but "Banned" is more than a collection sex-inspired rap tracks.

Between each number is a short "news flash," telling the story of the arrest of the group and giving the members of 2 Live Crew a chance to speak their minds on the issue.

One track, "Bass 9-1-7," is a recording of people calling a radio talk show and either complaining about the group or supporting them.

The entire album deals with issues in today's society which everyone loves to talk about while doing nothing.

For example, consider the following words from a track about gang violence: "We ain't worried about fightin'/the only nigger gettin' paid for it is Mike Tyson/so you're all fightin' for free/you better get smart like the niggers in Miami."

The rest of the lyrics are unprintable. Apparently, in Miami, young people don't worry about fighting each other for no gain. Instead, they worry about how they're going to make money for themselves and have a good time.

COLLEGIAN Report Card
"BANNED IN THE U.S.A."
B

Inner-city youth will certainly respect 2 Live Crew's understanding of their situation as opposed to some rich lady telling them to "just say no."

One of the news flashes encourages black entrepreneurs to be creative and not to be discouraged by skin color.

The mixes have an appealing urban feel. Unlike music by M.C. Hammer and Young M.C., they create something original.

Unfortunately, as I mentioned earlier, Luke's intelligence is not always consistent. In another "news flash," the group discusses some insulting remarks fellow rappers Salt 'n' Pepa and Kid 'n' Play made about it on a talk show. The group says it isn't offended by anything said by some "fat, ugly dykes" or "faggots who probably haven't had any before anyway" because they're not "real niggers" like 2 Live Crew.

2 Live Crew should be smart enough to realize name-calling won't help its reputation as anything more than a short-lived group taking advantage of a controversial situation.

And on an album which supports the idea of uniting black culture as something to be proud of and discouraging gang violence among blacks, the idea of a person not being a "real nigger" because of their sex or sexual preference is ridiculous.

If 2 Live Crew can gain consistency and sophistication yet retain its raw, urban sound and attitude, they will be more than a passing trend.

If it doesn't, it'll be remembered as a band that could make headlines but not music.

Seminar confronts student concerns

Housing, classes important issues for college-bound

By Jenifer Scheibler
Collegian Reporter

K-State helped college-bound high school students Saturday morning in their search for the right university.

The College Success Seminar, sponsored jointly by the Office of Admissions and the Division of Continuing Education, drew 364 high school juniors and seniors and their parents from across the state to the K-State Union.

Consisting of eight sessions, the seminar was concerned with issues facing a new college student. Amy Pelfrey, admissions representative and coordinator of the seminar, said the idea of the seminar was to give prospective students and their parents some information on specific topics. The topics included deciding on a university and a major, paying for college, deciding where to live, getting involved and the problems facing today's college students.

The seminar meets in September to help prospective students get information to begin the process of selecting a college or university, Pelfrey said.

"It is not considered part of our recruiting process," she said.

The seminar began four years ago and originally included representatives from other colleges and universities in the state. It has since become a K-State activity, because those attending were expecting more specific information about the University, Pelfrey said.

"Each year, the popularity of the seminar seems to increase," Pelfrey said. "The numbers this year are higher than last year."

Students attending the seminar said they were excited to be at K-State. Many took tours after lunch to learn more about the campus.

"I was excited to see the campus," said Tammi Kippes, a high school senior from Victoria. "I've talked to my high school counselor about it, but it is better to actually see it."

Many of the students have not yet made a choice about the college or university they will attend. They come to the seminar to learn what the University has to offer and learn about college life in general.

"I'm not sure yet where I'll go, but K-State is one of my top choices," said Jenni VonFeldt, a high school senior from Hays.

Parents attending the seminar also participated in the sessions. Hank and Eileen Ernst, Topeka, attended the seminar with their daughter.

"I think it was worthwhile," Eileen Ernst said. "I got a feel for the campus and atmosphere at K-State."

Although the seminar is sponsored by K-State, most of the information received in the sessions can be applied at any college or university.

"Not only did I learn about K-State, but I got a good general feel about what my daughter should know about college in general," Hank Ernst said. "I got a warm feeling towards K-State, but I didn't feel like they were forcing it at me."

The students and their parents were allowed to attend three of the eight sessions presented by University faculty and students. Each presentation was followed by a time for the students and parents to ask questions concerning the topic of the session.

Youths enjoy wagon outing

By Shannon Heim
Collegian Reporter

A dozen toddlers and 14 adults took advantage of cooler temperatures and enjoyed a hayrack ride through campus early Friday afternoon.

The toddlers were students at Hoeflin Stone House, a child-care center that is part of the Department of Human Development and Family Studies.

Two shire horses, owned by K-State employees Bill and Barbara Hetrick, pulled the red wagon filled with hay bales and wide-eyed children ranging in age from 20 months to three years.

Accompanied by parents as well as Stone House workers, the children sat on the hay bales and waved to people on campus sidewalks. A few of the children clutched their favorite toys, such as a teddy bear or a Barbie Doll as the group sang a verse of "Old MacDonald."

The wagon departed from Stone House, in the northeast corner of campus, and slowly moved south along Manhattan Avenue toward Danforth and All Faiths Chapels. Once there, the group stopped for an afternoon snack. After spreading out a blanket and washing each child's hands, the helpers passed out cookies. The toddlers, however, seemed more interested in the music of the K-State Marching

Service matches students to employers

Middleman agency essential

By Christy Gritton
Collegian Reporter

The Manhattan Job Service is a public-service agency designed to be a middleman between prospective employers and job hunters.

"We have all types of jobs, from the professional level down to unskilled workers," said Lorene Oppy, Manhattan Job Service manager.

The job service, located at 621 Humboldt St., accepts applications from those seeking work placement. The application is then given to a placement specialist who reviews it and attempts to match the applicant's training, skills and interest with a prospective employer's needs.

"Applications are kept active for 30 days and are kept in the system for a year," Oppy said.

Last year, the job service received 9,000 applications. This figure is lower than the actual number of people placed since some people apply once a year but are placed more than once a year.

Oppy said the job service serves different types of people of different ages.

Some age groups, however, have more success in locating a job.

"People 14 to 16 are hard to place because of child-labor laws," said Oppy.

Most of the people in this age group are eager to work but are limited to jobs available to them. The child-labor laws are beneficial since they protect young people by limiting the number of hours they work, Oppy said.

The types of jobs available vary.

"Right now, we have a lot of part-time jobs because of the students' return to Manhattan," Oppy said.

Oppy said she had not noticed certain jobs being more popular than others.

The job service, funded by the state, is free to both the applicants and employers.

To assist applicants in finding work, the job service administers typing tests, spelling tests and posts announcements for civil-service jobs, Oppy said.

Jerrod Gerstner, senior in marketing, said he had to go to the job service when he was applying for a job at Carlos O'Kelly's. Gerstner said he presented financial information which the job service reviewed to determine if Carlos O'Kelly's could receive a tax break by hiring him.

Landfill site for clean-up research

By Candace Plett
Collegian Reporter

K-State's former hazardous waste landfill may soon be used to conduct environmental clean-up experiments.

"Scientists from the agronomy, engineering and geology departments are interested in studying hazardous waste remediation," said Steve Galitzer, industrial hygienist and hazardous waste specialist. "The location is ideal because it serves as a natural laboratory for these studies."

He said new clean-up strategies include pumping water above ground for filtering and planting trees or other plants that draw heavy metals from contaminated soil.

The site is a fenced acre surrounded by the agronomy research farm north of KSU Stadium.

"It was originally set aside in the 1960s and used for roughly two decades to bury laboratory chemicals and pesticides," Galitzer said.

He said the last waste disposal was in 1987.

Eight inches of coarse, packed gravel protects the ground surface from rain, he said, and a building was erected over two-thirds of the site for temporary waste storage. None of that waste can be stored for more than 90 days.

"In 1984, K-State decided to apply for closure of the long-term storage site. After about six years of inspections and paperwork, the closure has been granted. Now the Kansas Department of Health and Environment oversees the proper handling of the area," Galitzer said.

"We have no trouble working with the department, and they like working with us," he said. "The environment belongs to all of us, and we just want to do our part to make it right."

Wells at the site monitor groundwater contamination levels.

John Lambert, director of public safety, said the wells locate and measure the extent of chemical seepage and groundwater contamination.

Groundwater samples examined by the health department showed hazardous contamination levels measurable in parts per billion. Lambert said these are low levels because contaminates are usually measured in parts per million.

He said that since 1975 radioactivity tests have been conducted at the site, but no traces have been found.

"Low radioactive material was once deposited there using the recommended method at that time," Lambert said. "Now all chemical waste from the labs is packaged in drums and incinerated by a licensed disposal company."

He said the University submitted a state proposal in May to add more monitoring wells to the site.

"The next step — either further study or waste treatment — has not been decided yet," he said.

"Our facility is very modern and has been called the 'Taj Mahal' of hazardous waste sites," he said.

Faculty, grants fund cancer study

By Cindy Jeffrey
Collegian Reporter

K-State has the only basic cancer research center in Kansas, yet it receives no funds from the University or the state of Kansas.

Research programs are funded by the faculty themselves through the grants they obtain, said Terry Johnson, director of the Division of Biology and the Center for Basic Cancer Research. This past year, Johnson said, the biology division attracted about $4 million in grants and donations from people in every state and several foreign countries.

"We've been very successful raising funds because 100 percent goes into research — all administrative work is volunteer," Johnson said.

There are 25 research teams working on various aspects of cancer and cancer-related research. Grant money helps pay for the technicians, undergraduates, graduates and postdoctoral fellows that make up a team, Johnson said.

"Our teaching is enhanced," said Richard Consigli, distinguished professor of biology. "In my lab alone we have produced 29 Ph.D.'s."

The biology division is like five departments, but without departmental walls, Johnson said.

"We can mobilize talents from environmental biology to molecular biology to developmental biology without the bureaucracy," he said

Scientists were researching cancer at the University before the organization of the center. Consigli came to the University in 1963 with a grant to do research on DNA tumor virus.

"I'm working on the same grant — same research," Consigli said.

How a virus gets into a cell and why one cell gets infected by a virus when another cell transforms to cancer is the focus of Consigli's research.

The Center for Basic Cancer Research was organized in 1980.

"We don't treat patients here. We're basic research scientists," Johnson said.

The problems posed by cancer raise many questions for the researchers.

"Why do human cancer cells become resistant to anti-cancer drugs?" said Melvin Center, professor of biology. "On the molecular level, there seems to be a mechanism that pumps out the drug, so the drug never accummulates to a level that will kill the cancer cell."

Center said if scientists knew how the mechanism worked, maybe someone could figure out a way to reverse it. Resistance to drugs is a major problem with chemotherapy.

Education is another of the center's goals. For the past three years, a cancer research workshop for science teachers, junior college and college students from around the state has met during the University's winter intersession. The faculty members donate their time. All other expenses are covered by the Dane G. Hansen Foundation.

Johnson said about 120 scholarships are awarded to students in health-related fields who are interested in working with a cancer research team. The scholarships are funded by private donations.

Two years ago, a children's coloring book about cancer was created and produced. Answering the need of Manhattan first grade teacher Betty Rae Wallace, the coloring book introduces children from the ages of 8-to-10, said Patricia Adams, administrative assistant in the biology division.

"There were lots of books for children with cancer, but none for children who know someone with cancer," Adams said.

Adams and Lesley Hause, coordinator for the center at the time, developed, "A Day With Dr. Waddle," with advise from Wallace, child psychologist Roger Christian, Dr. George Bascom and Terry Johnson.

The center's yearly publication features a drawing by an 8-year-old girl whose mother had cancer. The drawing is a person with a red heart and the words "cancer in the heart." The child said her mother did not have cancer in her heart, but that is where she felt it, Adams said.

September 10-21

An exhibition of 80 photographs Lincoln Highway; Main Street Across America. This exhibition of black and white prints depicts old gas stations, cafes, roadside views and bridges along this 3300-mile road, between New York City and San Francisco.

The photographs are accompanied by quotes from motorists who traveled the first transcontinental highway years ago, as well as excerpts from colorful signs, which dotted the road. Established in 1913, The Lincoln Highway ran through Philadelphia, Canton, Ohio and Fort Wayne, Ind. Bypassing Chicago, the road then continued west through Iowa, Nebraska and Wyoming.

Gallery Hours: 8 a.m.-5 p.m., Monday through Friday

After finishing the cookies, the children took turns petting the horses, and one child kissed one horse's nose. The group continued its tour of campus before heading back to school.

Hetrick said that giving hayrack rides is fun for the children and that it is a hobby for him and his wife. The couple also uses the wagon in parades and other special events. Their shire horses, which are similar to Clydesdales, are the only two in Kansas that the Hetricks know of.

Jana Cruce, sophomore in early childhood education, said Friday was her first day to be involved with the day-care center. Helping and observing at the school is part of the curriculum of human development and family studies courses.

Susan Wanska, associate professor of human development and family studies, said undergraduate students are given a chance to use the skills they have developed by making the lesson plans at the center. Some students can also do student teaching there, she said.

Besides being a learning ground for students, the center also aims at helping working parents with affordable child care.

"Our primary goal is to serve working families. We don't necessarily cater to the University population," Wanska said.

The child-care center charges flighting fees, tailoring each according to each parent's incomes. The fees range from $7.50 to $14 per day, Wanska said.

The Hetricks, whose child attends Stone House, said they are satisfied with the program. The adult-to-child ratio is high, Bob Hetrick said.

"There is a high number of adults to children at the center, and we are more than satisfied with the Stone House," he said.

The school has been operating for more than ten years and is named for Ruth Hoeflin, who was Dean of the College of Human Ecology when the program began.

Street. In addition to Sears, additional tenant space is included for future businesses.

Brecheisen said she doesn't feel that directly competing with mall shops is the key for downtown retailers' success.

"Successful businesses will complement Manhattan Town Center shops," Brecheisen said. "We are seeking customer-oriented businesses where people can park in front of the store, run in. get what they want and go."

She said that because 90 percent of Manhattan families are dual-income, they don't always have time to shop in a mall. Downtown stores should take advantage of this to improve their business.

Two new restaurants will open downtown in 1991, one a franchise and the other locally owned. Brecheisen could not name the restaurants but said they are not fast-food and but rather high-quality restaurants.

"I see the future of downtown really turning around," Brecheisen said. "We have a very strong downtown, but local people just don't realize it yet."

African Awareness Month is sponsored by the Multicultural Student Union, International Coordinating Council, Organization for African Unity, African Student Union and the departments of American Ethnic Studies, Art and Anthropology. These organizations sponsored speakers, helped with publicity and donated works for art displays throughout the month.

"African Awareness month is only the base for a five-year plan," Tangie said. "We want to educate people about Africa so that we can address future problems."

breaks out, the only effective tactic was to hit Baghdad with massive air strikes that target Saddam personally.

"I would just point out that General Dugan is not in the chain of command, and he does not speak for the administration," Scowcroft said.

But he said contingency planning was developing "for anything that might happen."

Scowcroft hailed the recent increase in concrete support by U.S. allies for the drive against Iraq.

"I think it's a very heartwarming example of united action against aggression," Scowcroft said.

Foley, meanwhile, disagreed with former President Jimmy Carter, who said the United States should now drive Iraq from Kuwait with military force.

"I think the time is way too early to make a decision of that kind," Foley said.

Not only is there a striking resemblance between Todd and C.B., neither one has changed much with age. (Note: Compare cartoons and pictures.) Only C.B. could appreciate Todd's athletic ability or lack thereof. In the words of one of Todd's "close" friends, "Todd is just a blockhead!" General fired by Cheney

Dugan's retirement expected

CRISIS IN THE MIDDLE EAST

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Dick Cheney fired Gen. Mike Dugan as Air Force chief of staff Monday after Dugan's public comments about contingency plans to unleash massive air raids on Iraq and target Saddam Hussein personally.

Dugan, in the top Air Force job only three months, violated Pentagon rules by publicly discussing likely military targets inside Iraq and disclosing classified information about the size of U.S. forces in the gulf area, Cheney said.

"There are certain things we never talk about," Cheney said in explaining his decision to fire Dugan. He cited "operational matters" such as the selection of specific targets for potential air strikes and the targeting of foreign leaders.

"Gen. Dugan's statements as reported in the press and as confirmed by him to me failed all of those tests," Cheney said.

Dugan was away from the Pentagon on Monday and not available for comment, his office said.

The Air Force chief took the job in July and quickly gained a reputation for openness with the news media and the Congress. One gesture that illustrated this departure from past Air Force practice was Dugan's decision to give defense reporters laminated cards listing his office phone number and the numbers of his chief aides.

Dugan, 53, retains his four-star rank, but he is expected to retire.

"Protocol demands that he retire," a Pentagon source said. "There's no job in the Air Force he could really hold now."

A senior Defense Department official said Cheney fired the general not simply because Dugan spoke openly to the news media but because he said things for which he had no authority.

"It's saying things that aren't true; it's saying things that weren't his decision to make. He's not in the operational chain of command, and the idea whether Saddam Hussein is personally targeted — those are decisions that are up to the president to make," said the official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

Cheney fired Dugan after conferring with President Bush.

Before becoming Air Force chief of staff, Dugan was commander in chief of U.S. Air Forces in Europe. He was a combat pilot in the Vietnam War, flying 300 missions.

Dugan's controversial comments, reported Sunday by the Los Angeles Times and The Washington Post, were made during the Air Force chief's trip to and from Saudi Arabia, where he visited Air Force units deployed as part of Operation Desert Shield.

Dugan told the newspapers that if the United States and Iraq went to war, the Pentagon planned to unleash an air campaign designed to "decapitate" the Iraqi leadership by targeting President Saddam Hussein, his family and even his mistress.

The general said that until two weeks ago, U.S. target planners had assembled a conventional list of Iraqi targets which included Iraqi air defenses, airfields and warplanes, missile sites and other military installations. He said other targets would include Iraqi power systems, roads, railroads and perhaps domestic petroleum-production facilities, but not the oil fields.

"That's a nice list of targets, and I might be able to accept those, but that's not enough," Dugan said, adding that he developed a "better list" of high-value targets in Iraq that stressed the importance of attacking Saddam and his inner circle.

Killer still loose in Crowder case

Police investigate multiple leads

By Kelly Berg
Staff Reporter

Police are still investigating the death of Sherryl L. Crowder, 39, whose body was found in the trunk of her car about 8:30 a.m. Sept. 9 in Topeka.

[illegible] Brooks, director of [illegible] service for the [illegible] Police Department, said Crowder appeared to have been beaten to death and possibly sexually assaulted.

Police found Crowder's partially-clothed body while investigating a report of a suspicious vehicle parked for an extended period of time at 22nd Street and Western Avenue.

Sgt. Steve Harsha, detective for the Topeka Police Department, said the department has 20 detectives working on the case in contingence with officers from the Riley County Police Department and the Kansas Bureau of Investigation.

"We've already investigated more than 115 leads," Harsha said.

Harsha said the biggest hindrance to the investigation has been a lack of witness reports of Crowder's activities from the time she left Sneakers, a Topeka nightclub, on Friday, to the time her body was discovered on Sunday morning.

"Programs have been initiated that will pay money to a witness who supplies legitimate information that would lead to the arrest and conviction of the murderer," Harsha said.

The Secret Witness Program, set up by the Topeka Capital-Journal, has offered a $5,000 reward for information leading to the conviction of Crowder's murderer.

"The program is set up so that a witness can remain completely anonymous," said Dick King, managing editor of the Topeka Capital-Journal.

King said witnesses can call the Capital-Journal and report what they know. At that time witnesses are given a caller identification number, and if the information supplied turns out to be legitimate and leads to a conviction, the Capital-Journal will then print a notice to the witness addressing him only by the prearranged number, telling the caller to pick up the reward.

SHELF reaches goal, may be group's end

By Shannon Meyers
Collegian Reporter

SHELF, Students Helping Enhance Library Funding, a student organization, may be a means to its own end.

"The organization was formed last year in an effort to get the University administration to focus on the library and needed improvements," said Ray Kowalczewski, president of the organization.

SHELF's success in reaching its goal has left the organization inactive.

Last year, SHELF sponsored a sit-in, and with media coverage and pressure from Student Body President Todd Johnson, the administration hired a consultant to do a study.

"SHELF is currently waiting on the study's results to come out, and pending the administration's reaction, will decide on their goals," Kowalczewski said.

He does not foresee the need for an active organization, unless the administration fails to focus on the library in the future.

"In the case that the administration does not act on the consultant study, then it would be necessary for the organization to become active again," Kowalczewski said.

Johnson said SHELF received funding this year through Student Senate-allocated monies. If the organization were to dissolve, the unspent money would revert to reserve accounts.

"Student government and the administration are actively involved with the library so there is not a big role that SHELF can play at this time," Johnson said.

The University administration has been timely in reacting to the students' mandate for library improvements — students' number one academic concern — so there has not been a need for SHELF to be reactive, he said.

Communication with the student body president and the administration is important in pursuing the changes SHELF wants for the library, Johnson said.

"It is important for SHELF to lobby the student body president since that person is in contact with the administration and can work one-on-one with the Board of Regents and alumni associations for library improvements," he said.

Kowalczewski said the organization might push for a two-week library course in the freshmen curriculum to teach students how to use the resources that are available, but that the organization is pleased it has reached its original goal.

Campaign focuses on tax relief; Hayden offers alternative plan

CAMPAIGN 1990
Gubernatorial Race
The Issue: Taxes

By Alan Wilds
Staff Reporter

Property taxes are taking center stage in the 1990 gubernatorial campaign.

Governor Mike Hayden's tax-relief plan varies from the one proposed by Democratic challenger Joan Finney. Both said, however, that they agree property-tax relief for the state of Kansas is a must.

Hayden said he wants to lower the state's classification amendment, which dictates the amount of property taxes paid by small businesses and non-profit organizations.

Frank Ybarra, Hayden spokesman, said these two groups would benefit most from a property-tax decrease.

"We think these are the two main areas that need to be dealt with," Ybarra said. "Small businesses and non-profit organizations have always suffered the most."

The amendment currently requires small businesses to pay as much as 30 percent in taxes. Ybarra said he would like to see this lowered to 25 percent.

In order to compensate for the tax reduction, Hayden also plans to add a 1 cent increase to the state-sales tax. This, Ybarra said, would generate about $200 million for property-tax relief.

Ybarra said the Hayden plan should distribute the burden of broadening the tax base much more evenly than Finney's proposal, which Hayden had criticized following the gubernatorial debate at the Kansas State Fair in Hutchinson.

"Governor Hayden has proposed a plan that is fair and equitable to all Kansans," Ybarra said. "Mrs. Finney's plan picks on certain segments of the population, especially the poor and the elderly."

Finney said at the Sept. 8 debate that she plans to raise an additional $800 million over the next four years by adding a 1 percent sales tax to as many as 52 of the 56 tax-exempt groups. Ybarra said Kansas currently collects about 37 percent of its revenue from property taxes as opposed to neighboring states that only collect about 25 to 30 percent.

Jack Parry, Finney's campaign manager, said he believes Hayden's tax program will bring more taxes to those people already paying more taxes than they should.

"We think Hayden is telling the people who pay taxes they will have to pay more and those who don't pay any will still not have to pay any," Parry said.

Farmer uses organic method

By Lajean Rau
Collegian Reporter

In a world of rapid technological progress, Joe Vogelsberg still does things the old-fashioned way.

About an hour north of Manhattan lies a family farm operated much as it was when Vogelsberg's great-grandfather first farmed it at the turn of the century.

Vogelsberg and his parents still live in the house that his grandfather built, a few hundred yards from the farm's original house built by Vogelsberg's great-grandfather.

A century of family-farming tradition is built into what now is an 800-acre farm.

Seven members of K-State's Sustainable Agriculture Discussion Group recently visited the Vogelsberg farm.

Stephanie Greene, the group's director, said sustainable agriculture is farming practices that return to the land what is removed, as opposed to some modern farming methods which strip the land of nutrients and contaminate water supplies.

"If we continue to farm the way we are now, we won't be able to pass the land on to future generations," Greene said. "The trip to Joe's farm was a really positive thing. We sit and talk about sustainable ag all the time, but to go to a farm where these methods are actually being used is really wonderful."

Vogelsberg advocates organic farming. He uses no herbicides or pesticides.

Walesa eyes Polish presidency

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Solidarity leader Lech Walesa said Monday he will run for president of Poland, a job now held by the general who once imprisoned him and sought to crush his labor union under martial law.

Walesa said he hoped to speed the nation's transition from communism to democracy.

"Today I made up my mind. I am putting forward for society's approval my readiness to be a candidate for the post of president of the Polish Republic in popular elections," Walesa said in a statement delivered from his desk at Solidarity headquarters in Gdansk.

"For me, it is a fulfillment of the pledge I made in August 1980," he said, when he catapulted to worldwide fame by leading strikes that helped create the East bloc's first independent trade union.

Aquino to decrease U.S. forces

MANILA, Philippines — President Corazon Aquino said Monday it was time to discuss the orderly withdrawal of U.S. forces from the Philippines, her first public appeal to phase out the American military bases.

Police clashed with hundreds of demonstrators who demanded that the Americans go home. At least 17 people were arrested and seven people were injured in two anti-bases rallies outside the U.S. Embassy.

U.S. and Philippine negotiators open a second round of talks Tuesday on the future of Clark Air Base, Subic Bay Naval Base and four smaller U.S. installations whose lease expires in September 1991.

Soviets plan land economy

MOSCOW (AP) — A compromise plan to create a market economy in the Soviet Union began to break down Monday as President Mikhail Gorbachev hesitated on a key issue: the decollectivization of farming.

Gorbachev told the Supreme Soviet parliament that a national referendum should be held to decide whether to allow private ownership of land.

"It is too big a decision, comrades, to be made in offices, auditoriums or meeting halls — even the one in which we're working today," he said as the parliament opened debate on competing plans for economic reform.

Nation

Souter assured of nomination

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supreme Court nominee David Souter said Monday at his confirmation hearings that letting states outlaw abortion might cast doubts on other privacy rights. Senators told Souter, testifying on his 51st birthday, that his confirmation was virtually assured.

During a third and final day of Senate Judiciary Committee questioning on controversial issues he would face as a justice, Souter said he opposes a judicial ban on the death penalty.

In a final statement to the committee, Souter said, "You have treated me with such consummate fairness that on whatever court I may sit I hope I will do as well."

Souter was followed to the witness table by an American Bar Association committee which previously announced that it had given him its highest rating, well-qualified.

Cult leader claimed to be god

PAINESVILLE, Ohio (AP) — A cult leader convicted of killing a family of five believed he became a prophet, then a god, and based the murders on his interpretation of scriptures, a former cult member testified Monday.

Meanwhile, a jury in another courtroom continued deliberating the fate of the leader's son, who faces similar charges in the case.

Jeffrey Lundgren, 40, was convicted last month of five counts each of aggravated murder and kidnapping in the slayings. The bodies of the former Independence, Mo., family were buried under a barn at a northeast Ohio farm where the cult lived.

Dennis and Cheryl Avery and their three daughters were bound, gagged and shot last year. Prosecutors described it as a ritual killing, a preliminary to finding God in the wilderness.

Nuclear opponent starts strike

SPENCER, Neb. (AP) — On the eve of starting a hunger strike Monday, a vocal opponent of plans to build a low-level nuclear waste warehouse in Boyd County received a phone call from Gov. Kay Orr.

Lowell Fisher of Spencer said he was prepared to begin his hunger strike after eating lunch.

Fisher said the governor called him about 9 p.m. Sunday.

"She said that should she would not be held hostage," Fisher said. "I told her that we in Boyd County were being held hostage."

Bud Cuca, an aide to Orr, said the governor called Fisher "to try to discourage him from going on a hunger strike primarily because she's concerned about his health."

KU nears fund-raising goal

LAWRENCE (AP) — The largest fund drive ever at the University of Kansas is within $3.9 million of topping the goal of $177 million.

"Never before in the history of this university have commitments from its alumni and friends reached such an impressive level," said Jordan Haines, a Wichita banking executive and national campaign chairman of the Campaign Kansas drive that started in 1987.

The updated total means about $10.9 million has been raised since April. Contributions stood at $136.1 million last October.

Half the original $150 million goal — $76.5 million — was committed when the drive was publicly announced in May 1988. The goal was raised $27 million last September.

Runaway alligators captured

FORT SCOTT (AP) — All unwelcome baby alligators have been captured from Bourbon County farm ponds, state officials said Monday.

Doug Whiteaker, an enforcement officer for the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks, said six of the reptiles were captured Friday and no more were thought to be lurking under pond surfaces.

"It's a pretty mundane thing to be honest with you," Whiteaker said.

Farmers believe the alligators were brought to Bourbon County by a resident who wished to raise them in his farm pond. But somehow the creatures escaped and went looking for watery habitats on other farms.

Farm

time his dad returned from World War II, many of these chemicals were being developed and used by farmers. His grandfather made it clear he didn't want any of that "junk" on his farm. When he retired, his son, Vogelsberg's father, saw no difference in yields between their farm and the neighbors and so decided to continue the tradition.

Instead of using herbicides to control unwanted plants, Vogelsberg uses time-proven practices of planting, crop rotation and mechanical cultivation. The implements he uses, called a lister and curler, date to the early 1960s.

The virtually weed-free farm is proof of the efficiency of the seemingly archaic machinery and practices.

Vogelsberg joked that his biggest weed problem was the purple-flowered morning glory his grandmother planted many years ago that now grows wild on parts of the farm.

Vogelsberg also protects the environment by not using pesticides.

"I just can't see going out there to kill a certain problem insect and at the same time killing all the lady bugs and praying mantes which are very helpful," he said.

Vogelsberg also uses no vaccinations, antibiotics or growth stimulants with his livestock.

He said he has no problems with livestock losses from disease. Some of his hogs are from the farm's original bloodline. He feeds the hogs, chickens and cattle the grain and hay from his farm and supplements their diet with vitamins and minerals. He said his animals are usually ready for market at or before the average age.

Vogelsberg also conducts several experiments on his land every year. There are also experiments on test plots in conjunction with organizations seeking out organic farms to conduct research or to aid organic farmers with their own research.

"The whole farm is really one big experiment," he said. "There is so much out there we don't know yet. There are so many areas to explore that we've just touched the surface."

Vogelsberg is developing an open-pollinated variety of corn for his farm. He buys hybrid corn seed but grows and harvests seed for all of his other crops.

"The way it's looking right now, it will be several years before we succeed. Open-pollinated varieties don't yield as well and are more uneven, but if they are as nutritious as I have heard, it will be worth it," he said.

J. Kyle Wyatt/Staff

Graduate students from K-State examine ears of corn on Joe Vogelsberg's farm 60 miles north of Manhattan. The corn, along with all other crops and livestock, are raised without the use of pesticides or other chemicals. The group toured the environmentally safe operation Saturday morning.

"It's my opinion that if they had done as much research with open-pollinated corn as with the hybrids all these years, we would have an open-pollinated variety that would yield up with the hybrids," he said.

Vogelsberg is also investigating controlling weeds by livestock. He did an experiment with hogs and bindweed and found that the hogs would kill all of the problem plants.

"Farmers could organize their farms to where they could move their livestock regularly," he said. "You would be ridding an area of weeds and at the same time providing manure for fertilization and letting the hogs run in a new area."

Vogelsberg said that he enjoys farming and that any farmer could farm organically.

"Most farmers won't take the time to fine-tune machinery or do some of the other things that this kind of farming requires," Vogelsberg said. "We're definitely the oddballs around here. It's really hard to sway your neighbors."

Vogelsberg said those interested in organic farming should take advantage of land set aside by the government. "You could plant alfalfa, for instance, on the off years to begin putting nutrients into the soil," Vogelsberg said.

"It's really all about stewardship of the land, putting back into it what you take out," he said.

After a two-hour tour of the farm, group members and Vogelsberg discussed the feasibility of sustainable agriculture in today's high-yield, profit-oriented market. The general consensus was that there was a lot of interest in organic farming and chemical-free consumer products, but that unless things change, it will become harder and harder for small farmers to survive.

"It all depends on how much consumers are willing to pay for these kinds of products. As consumers, we need to realize that a bigger part of our dollar should go to seeing that the smaller farmers that are taking care of the land can survive," Vogelsberg said.

Paul Ingle, graduate student in agricultural engineering, said research conducted on campus is often counter-productive in regard to sustainable agriculture.

"A lot of us are frustrated with the research that is going on at K-State," he said. "Instead of being geared toward sustainable agriculture, it is geared toward high production."

Vogelsberg said that sooner or later everyone is going to be affected by modern agricultural practices if changes aren't made.

"It's really sad that farmers have to farm so many acres to make enough money to feed their families. I farm 800 acres. I think I could make a living farming half of what I farm now, better. But I doubt I could make a living farming twice what I am farming," he said. "Bigger isn't always better.

"We just need a lot more people out on the land," Vogelsberg said. "So many people in rural communities have as the ambition to get out. It's just a mentality that people have today that you are not anyone unless you go to college and get away from the farm. We can't keep losing all the bright motivated people.

"I don't think any farmers are out there to make a glorious living farming. The glory is in the farming itself," Vogelsberg said.

Vogelsberg is chairman of the Kansas Organic Producers and secretary/treasurer of the East Kansas Organization for Crop Improvement.

1-man act brings 'Huck Finn' to life

By Richard Jones
Collegian Reviewer

It's not often that you get a chance to meet Huck Finn.

This weekend, children of all ages can enjoy the next-best thing when "Huck Finn" plays at 2 p.m. Saturday and Sunday in Nichols Theatre. Tickets cost $3 and are available this week at the McCain Box Office and at the door.

The one-man show is an adaptation of Mark Twain's "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn" performed by Dwight Tolar, senior in theater.

What makes "Huck Finn" special are Tolar's characterizations and his interaction with the audience — which often extends the stage into the first few rows.

"Huck develops a relationship with the audience," said Marci Maullar, assistant professor of theater.

Tolar will play Jim, Pap, Aunt Sally, the Duke of Bridgewater and Tom Sawyer in addition to Huck Finn.

"He has a trunk full of costumes," Maullar said. "Sometimes he doesn't even change — he just takes on a different persona."

Tolar said the intention of this project is to instill within others a desire to read the complete works of Mark Twain and to evoke an interest in other literature.

"The main objective is to get kids to read," Tolar said.

Tolar has performed as Danny in "Grease," Curly in "Oklahoma," and most recently, as Jason in "Medea." Other accomplishments include appearances in "The Rover," "South Pacific" and as the male lead in "Romeo and Juliet."

Adapted by Doeri Welch, "Huck Finn" was first performed by Tolar as one of four productions done this summer in the Snowmass/Aspen Repertory Theatre, a professional, resident theatre in Colorado. The production is continuing with its permission.

The Snowmass/Aspen Repertory Theatre provided experience in professional theatre for other K-State students as well. Mary Hale, a senior in history and a Rhodes Scholar, served as the season's assistant marketing director. Dana Pinkston, graduate student in theater, was the costume designer for all shows. Spencer Smith, junior in computer engineering, designed the sound for two shows and served as a technician throughout the season. All worked under Maullar's management.

Maullar said the show's professionalism has carried over from the summer.

"It really does have a very polished quality to it," she said.

"Huck Finn" has toured libraries and day-care centers in Colorado, and Tolar hopes to continue the tour through Kansas. Anyone interested in booking the show should contact Tolar or Maullar at 532-6875.

New businesses open

Mall welcomes restaurants, stores

By Susan Boos
Collegian Reporter

The Manhattan Town Center is experiencing a wave of expansion.

Besides the Sears addition, four new businesses will open soon.

The mall's newest lessees are Garfield's restaurant, Dulling Optical, Elegance and Fortune Cookies.

Garfield's will include a bar and will occupy a 5,500 square-foot vacancy on the plaza on the west side of the mall facing Poyntz Avenue.

Michael Ortega, leasing agent for the Town Center, said the space was intended for a restaurant.

"A restaurant on the plaza will enhance traffic downtown and liven up the downtown area," Ortega said. "This will also make us more a part of the downtown."

Ortega, who estimated building costs between $400,000 and $500,000, said that hopefully construction will begin in October.

"We hope to have it open in December for the holiday season," he said. "Right now, the architects are working on the drawings."

Although a lease has not been signed, Ortega said, "It's just a matter of working out the details."

Karen Brown of Sahli Enterprises, owner of the new Garfield's and five other Garfield's, said it is a full-line family restaurant with a menu including steak, seafood, Mexican and Italian food, burgers, sandwiches, soups and salads.

Leaving abortion issue to city not good idea

Restrictions on abortion may be left to city lawmakers. Once again, the buck has been passed.

A recent Kansas Supreme Court decision on home rule, outlining a city's lawmaking authority, cleared the way for cities to adopt abortion restrictions that do not interfere with the rulings of the Supreme Court.

Exactly what restrictions would be allowed is unclear and subject to court rulings. The city, however, might be allowed to ban third-trimester abortions and enact a parental-notification law requiring teenagers to have parental consent.

Handing the responsibility to the city will divide the state and divide cities within the state. If a city enacts a parental-notification law, a teen-ager will simply go to the next city.

Any city ordinance probably would be subject to a lawsuit to determine whether cities truly have authority concerning abortion, thus dragging out the decision and buying time for the state lawmakers who don't want to make controversial decisions and carry out the responsibility the Supreme Court has passed to them.

Forcing the city to make decisons about abortion will not solve anything. It just leaves room for more argument. The lawmakers who fight over school-lunch policies will be left to make decisions restricting abortion. That's scary. And it shouldn't be that way.

Abortion is too emotional and too important to be dealt with by city lawmakers. The Supreme Court was organized to deal with such complex issues. They are qualified to make the rulings to end the arguments, not suggest helpful hints.

Let's just hope the city doesn't pass the buck like everyone else and leave it to the school board, who could pass it on to the park commission.

New smoking sections not courteous to all

It seems that the Union Governing Board and administration could use a lesson in diplomacy.

The areas smokers can use as a refuge while dining in the K-State Union have dwindled to the point of exclusion from the main cafeteria. Last week, even those few tables near the Union Courtyard balcony were unavailable.

It is understandable that the Union is aware of the rights of non-smokers who wish to enjoy their meals without smokers nearby, but a seating plan should be devised to allow smokers a permanent place. Instead of allowing retailers to use the smoking area, the Union could give them space in the K, S or U rooms on the second floor. Although this is not a heavy traffic area, students will still walk up a floor to purchase posters or whatever is on sale.

This is a decision that would seem to affect a relatively small amount of people, but it affects both smokers and non-smokers. By displacing the smokers, non-smokers started complaining about the air they had to go through in the walkway between the cafeteria and courtyard area, which is the only place on the second floor for smokers.

Any undue animosity between the two groups stemming from the incident could have been avoided with foresight and planning. Courtesy should be considered before any group is inconvenienced, no matter what the reason.

Editorial shows stereotypes

Karin Dell'Antonia

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

Today's planned column about blind dates has been pre-empted by this rebuttal of Monday's editorial regarding the greek system. Please tune in next week for a biting social commentary regarding set-up dates in general.

I know, the mere word "greek" is enough to make you flip over to the comics. But hear me out. All I want is equal time to air my views about the greek system which are, after all, the result of three years of constant research. Monday's editorial was a response to various stereotypes and an outside view of a system which has advantages as well as disadvantages. It was biased; I am biased. I'm going to try to tell the truth.

If you are about to give this up (and never, ever read the column of a silly, snooty sorority girl again as long as you live) please keep in mind that by doing so you would be guilty of the same type of judgmental behavior that yesterday's article accused the greek system of. Don't give up because you don't agree. An informed opinion is one that listens to all sides of an issue and then makes its choice.

Two things the greek system are accused of are discrimination ("row after row of smiling, 18-22 year old white people") and elitism. The only way I can respond to the first charge is to repeat something that has been said so many times that it sounds cliche: Greek houses at K-State do not discriminate on the basis of race, religion, or age. Any discrimination comes from members of minorities who choose not to join greek houses.

I have two black sorority sisters. I am sorry it isn't more, but we can't pledge girls who don't go through rush.

I can tell you the experiences of my close friend who was in that situation. She had no complaint with the greek system as far as discrimination was concerned — her problem was different. Other black girls on campus (who have a sorority that is mostly black, but is not discriminatory), considered her a traitor. They shunned and teased her.

That was three years ago, and things may have changed. Still, I thought it was an interesting reaction from a minority that is so vocal in its demands for equal treatment.

As for elitism, Webster's New World Dictionary defines that as advocacy of government or control by an elite, which is either a distinguished group or a size of type for a typewriter. In either case that is patently ridiculous. I don't think we're planning a government takeover just yet.

I think one of the reasons that we are accused of such things is our method of membership selection. To join a fraternity, you attend a series of parties with activities designed to allow people to get to know each other. An invitation to join is basically an offer of friendship and the house that a man signs is the one where he feels the most comfortable. How different is that from choosing roommates, when you get right down to it?

Sorority rush is a more organized prospect. Sororities and girls make mutual selection based on a week's worth of parties in what I admit is a bizarre situation. I can't say I like judging and being judged on such short acquaintances, but I can say that it tends to work. Sororities usually end up with members who will maintain the traditions and standards of that particular house. Every group is different.

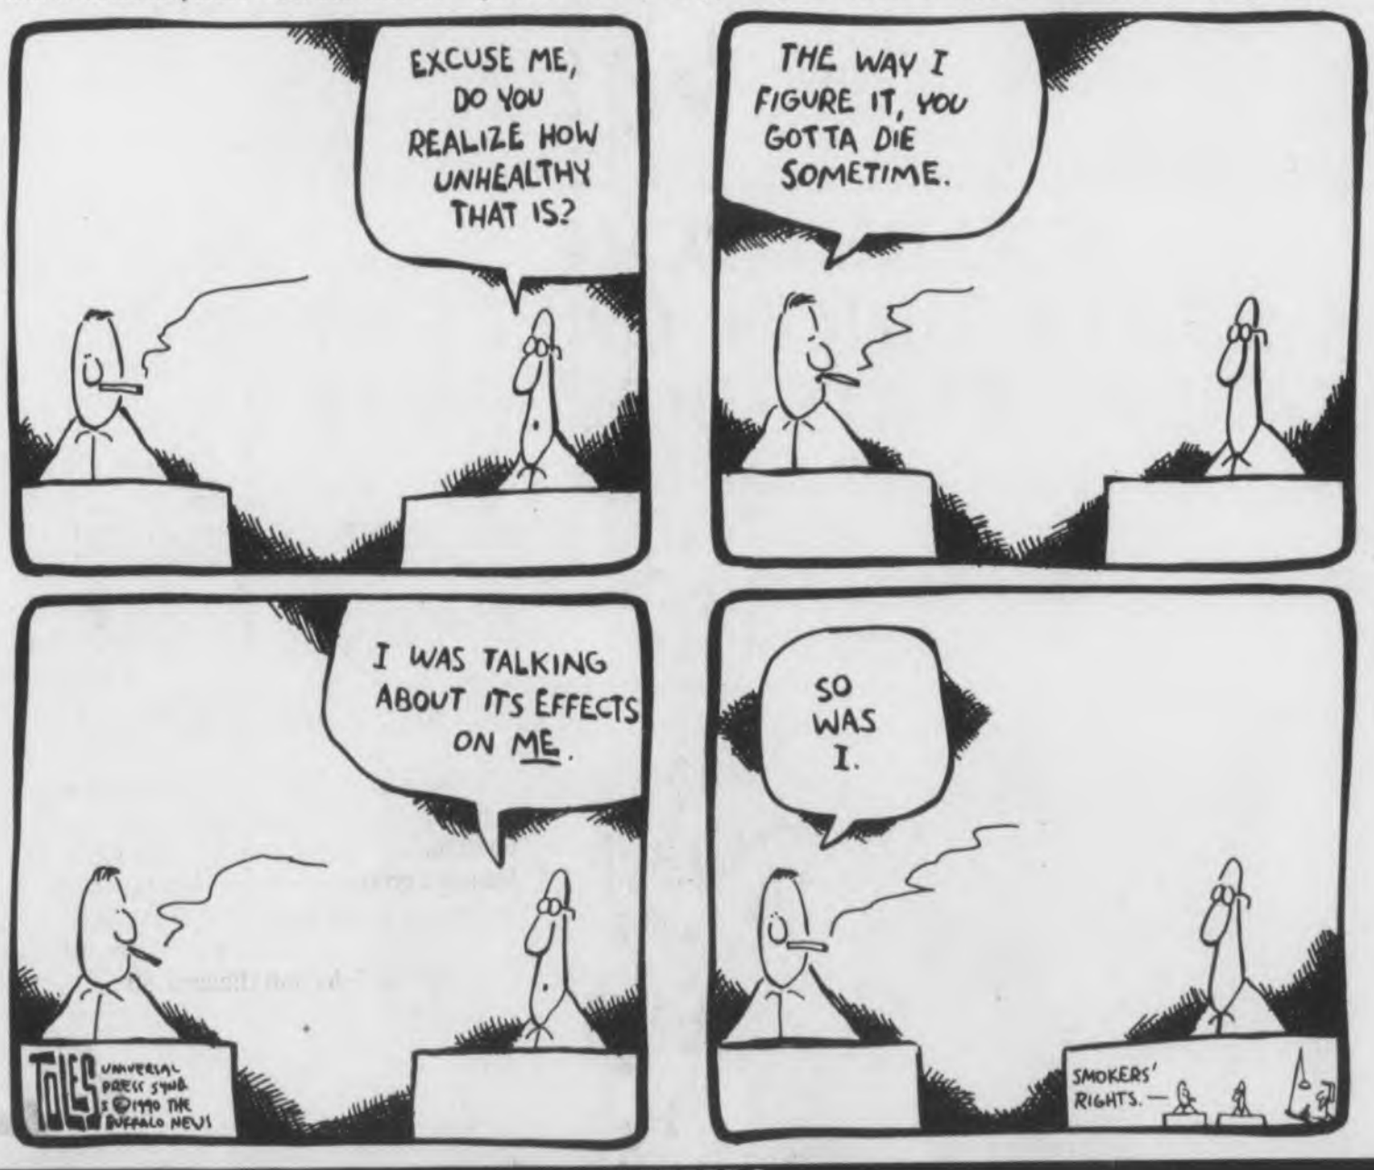
I have to admit our sorority rush had some problems this year. A new system for matching houses to rushees didn't work as well as we had hoped, and a lot of girls were disappointed. That isn't the point of rush. Next year we're going back to our old system.

As far as "conforming" and "socializing with others of similar interests," a greek house chooses its members less on the basis of interests and similarity than any other organization on campus. Aren't all the members of the water-ski club interested in water-skiing? All the staff members of the Collegian interested in journalism? A greek house contains people from all majors, with all interests and from all backgrounds.

The University's endorsement of the greek system enables the larger institution to regulate the smaller ones in the same way that it regulates the dormitories. Greek organizations represent about one-fifth of the student body. The University is responsible by implication if nothing else for the behavior of those students. The regulation of Panhellenic and the Interfraternity Council enables the University to prevent incidents of hazing such as those mentioned in Monday's editorial. Incidentally, we have on campus one fraternal organization that has refused to join the IFC because its policies on hazing differ from those of the IFC.

The accusation that was most unfounded, claimed that greek organizations were for-profit organizations. No nationally affiliated greek house on this campus is a for-profit corporation in any way, shape or form. I checked. In addition, many houses pay less in room and board than the residents of the residence halls. The fraternity and friendship of a greek house is not for sale. If it were, then we would not have the membership selection processes that were lambasted in Monday's paper.

Not only do we offer friendship to our members, but a greek affiliation offers comfort to the homesick freshman, encouragement and programs to help students improve academically, encourages campus involvement and the experience of learning to get along with an awful lot of people living under one roof. Many parents are grateful to greek houses for providing their son or daughter with a home that allows for all the freedom that a college life permits, but encourages as well those things like studying, eating well and morality that can easily be forgotten when a student first moves away from home.



Monday's editorial graciously admitted that we also participate in a variety of charities and community projects.

In closing, greeks were lastly accused of "inspiring members to be ideal men and women, pursuing goals of personal excellence." It was implied that these sentiments, like the system that upholds them, are out-of-date. I don't agree. Members of greek organizations, like people everywhere, may have trouble reaching these lofty goals, but I can see no wrong in trying.

In all my years as a sorority member, I have seen no sign of the snobbery, racism and sexism that we are accused of. I see organizations that try every day to be responsible, contributing members of a community. The high rate of participation by greeks in campus activities should be evidence of our desire to build other organizations up, not tear them down.

I don't think everyone should run right out and join a fraternity or sorority. We don't solicit membership from anyone who doesn't want to be a part of our system. What we do ask is that the tolerance and encouragement, which K-State's greek system has always shown towards other students and organizations be shown to us.

Monday's article was not the result of any vendetta against the greek system on the part of the Collegian. It was not personal, and I don't feel that it should be taken as such. The Collegian is a student forum and publishes all points of view, and the article represented the opinions of Collegian editorial board members. This article represents my opinion. If the Collegian didn't play fair, you wouldn't be reading this. You'd be reading my planned article on set-up dates.

Let students drink

Editor,

In the wake of the downfall of another alcohol-policy resolution here at "Apathy State," I felt it was time that our Student Governing Association, along with our illustrious President Jon Wefald, realize what we — the $785.00 a semester student body — want.

First, a common-sense solution to the problem shouldn't be much to ask. I know common sense is an uneasy and unheard-of term for our senators and our president, but quit the crap and draw up a policy which will satisfy the students and the alumni. Would it be all that bad letting students of legal age drink at a football game? I wouldn't think so, and to tell you the truth, I am tired of smuggling liquor. Oh yes, we still drink at games. Did you think you could stop it? Even with K-State Police Chief Charles Beckom's illustrious "Keystone Cops," you're not going to put a dent in reducing alcohol consumption.

Don't get me wrong. I am not promoting alcohol consumption, but rather the protection of the unwritten rights of alumni regarding alcohol consumption and that students of legal drinking age should have these same rights.

So let me put this in an easy and understandable perspective for even the most simple-minded student senator. Wefald, you should be able to follow along as well.

- We want the same unwritten rights the alumni have regarding alcohol consumption at football games.
- Before you make excuses why alcohol can't be consumed, realize that we are adults and you are elected by us.
- Loosen your collars and start listening to us; we made the choice to come to K-State.

Now, see, that was easy, wasn't it? If you, as our voices, don't start listening to what we want, then why do we have a Student Senate in the first place?

Farrell Library campaign set; SGA, Foundation to aid funds

By Eric Robison
Collegian Reporter

The K-State Student Foundation, along with the Student Governing Association, will be conducting a campaign to raise money for Farrell Library.

"We will be contacting all graduating seniors who will graduate in December to ask them to pledge money for the library for the purchase of one book," said Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries. "The book will have the student's name in the cover of the book for their children or grandchildren to see."

Student Body President Todd Johnson said the campaign will take place one month before graduation.

"Students will be called and encouraged to donate a total of $50, which may be broken down into two $25 payments for the purchase of a book to go into the library," Johnson said.

Most students on campus are aware that we need to improve our library, said John Downey, Student Foundation president.

"Todd Johnson approached us with the idea to call the graduating seniors and ask them for a donation of $50 for the improvement of the library," Downey said.

Johnson said the program has been a success at other universities.

"This program has never been tried at K-State before, but it has been used at other universities and has been successful from what I have heard," Johnson said. "I think it's a good idea because a book will be here in a hundred years. This is a good way for students to leave a legacy of themselves at K-State."

Johnson said that students can donate to any area of the campus, but this program is geared specifically for the libraries.

"We have a group of about 30 people to help us with the campaign, and even though we are experienced with the campaign, we still need help. That's why we called on the help of SGA and people involved with the library such as SHELF (Students Helping Enhance Library Funding) to call on the graduating seniors, because there is no way that we could call all of them by ourselves," Downey said.

New paper to be installed

Custodial services seeking ways to reduce expenses

By Dan Scott
Collegian Reporter

Traditional toilet-paper dispensers in campus bathrooms have been replaced in the past year with a larger dispenser.

The large toilet-paper dispensers should have the correct type of paper in them, said Al Seely, head of custodial services.

Some of the dispensers, however, do not have the larger rolls. Instead, regular-sized rolls of toilet paper that do not fit in the dispensers have been used.

"I'm curious as to why we would purchase these dispensers and not use them," said David Von Riesen, instructor in journalism and mass communications.

"There was a period of about two months when they weren't all filled," Seely said. "Let me know which ones that still aren't, and we'll take care of them."

The vacancies happened when the custodial service decided to switch to a different type of toilet paper, Seely said.

"We were having trouble with the expense of the paper," Seely said. "We switched to a recycled paper. We want to start using recycled before the state says we absolutely have to."

The first type of toilet paper used is called virgin paper and is a two-ply paper. A case of six rolls costs $40.

The toilet paper being used now is a single-ply paper. A case of six rolls costs $42. The recycled paper, however, has 4,100 feet per roll while the virgin paper has 2,000 feet per roll.

"It was costing less (per case), but we were using more of it," said Warren Berg, general maintenance repair technician. "It was just eating our budget."

Berg said the virgin paper has not been ordered for about two weeks.

Presently, informal surveys are being conducted to see if the recycled paper will continue to be used.

"We're keeping track on how much is being used and checking to see if there are any complaints about the paper," Berg said. "If the single-ply goes OK, then that's probably what we'll stay with."

The toilet-paper dispensers were given to K-State free by Bob's Janitorial Paper near the end of 1989. Berg said that K-State in return would purchase the company's larger toilet-paper rolls.

K-State decided to use the dispensers to see if money could be saved, Berg said.

"We were trying to see how long they'd last compared to regular toilet tissue," Berg said.

Of the 94 dispensers originally given to K-State, 42 are installed, and some are not filled with the larger paper.

K-State Athletic Hall of Fame
Ernie Barrett

By David Svoboda
Sports Editor

Ernie Barrett is proud to be a Wildcat.

Barrett's days as an athlete at K-State ended nearly 40 years ago. His tenure as Wildcat athletic director ended in 1975. But Barrett's days as a Wildcat, he says, will never end.

"K-State has been my whole life," said Barrett, who will be inducted into the K-State Athletic Hall of Fame Oct. 5. "It has been an integral part of my achievements and my identity.

"I want K-State to continue to grow and be representative of the student body so every graduate can be as proud of having been at Kansas State as I have been."

Barrett's days of wearing purple began when he joined Coach Jack Gardner and the varsity basketball squad for the 1948-49 season. Gardner will join Barrett in the initial class of eight inductees.

"Naturally, I'm excited and very honored to be included in the initial class, and mainly because my coach, Jack Gardner, is also being honored," Barrett said. "That means a great deal to me."

Before his basketball career was over, Barrett had become an All-American guard and had captained the 1950-51 team to the NCAA title game. Kentucky won that contest, but Barrett said K-State had the better team.

"The highlight of my career was the 1950-51 team that went to the NCAA championship game," he said. "We lost the game, but I felt we were a better team than Kentucky. We just weren't on that particular night."

When his career on the court for K-State was over, the Wellington native played professionally for the Boston Celtics for two seasons.

Barrett returned to K-State as a coach and administrator, serving for five years as an assistant athletic director in charge of fund raising and promotions.

In 1969, the height of the Purple Pride era in K-State football and one year prior to the start of the Jack Hartman era in Wildcat basketball, Barrett was named athletic director by then-University President James McCain.

Barrett oversaw the opening of KSU Stadium — for which he helped raise funds as an assistant director — and hired Hartman in 1970 to replace Cotton Fitzsimmons.

Sports Information/File

It was Barrett's vision of the future that put him ahead of other athletic directors at the time, said current K-State Athletic Director Steve Miller.

"Ernie Barrett is a man who, prior to his departure from K-State, envisioned a new press box in KSU Stadium, a new basketball arena, facility improvements, helped to endow scholarships," Miller said. "He was years ahead of his time.

"Had he been given the type of administrative support he deserved, K-State would have been years ahead of other schools in establishing a solid base in all athletic endeavors."

When Duane Acker succeeded McCain as president, Barrett's years of favor in the eyes of Anderson Hall's No. 1 occupant were over.

"The new president and I did not see eye-to-eye with regard to athletics, and he chose to reassign me," said Barrett of Acker, whom he refused to call by name.

"I felt, and still do, that athletics is a window through which the entire school is viewed, good or bad. It was a view that we didn't share."

One view that is shared by many K-Staters, however, is a view of Barrett as "Mr. K-State."

"Having spent almost 25 years of my young adult life there, I reached nearly every corner of the state, all 105 counties," Barrett said. "That gave me an identity which I appreciate and helped me gain many friends.

"Because of the devotion I've had toward the University and helping it become the best it can be, I've been recognized. I would say devotion and a sincere intention to help K-State become successful in all phases is where the name has come from," said Barrett.

The vision "Mr. K-State" has for the future of the Wildcat athletic department, and the University as a whole, has been heightened by the return to Anderson Hall of a president who has a strong feeling for the importance of athletics, Barrett said.

"I don't think there's any question right now that K-State can build on its past and move strongly into the future," Barrett said. "And people like President (Jon) Wefald, Vice President (for Institutional Advancement) Bob Krause and Steve Miller are a big reason why."

Mutual admiration seems to exist.

"One of the first persons I wanted to bring back into the fold when I was named athletic director was Ernie Barrett," Miller said. "He has a rare vision of what K-State athletics was, what it is now, and what we're trying to do in the future."

As for Anderson Hall's No. 1 occupant?

"When I first heard about the possibility of K-State setting up an athletic hall of fame, I knew Ernie Barrett would have to be a member of the first class of inductees," Wefald said. "He's synonymous with K-State athletics in all 105 counties of the state.

"He has demonstrated a great commitment to the success of the University."

Barrett said he is convinced that success can come in all phases of the athletic program.

His conviction led to the building of the Wildcat Legends Room in Bramlage Coliseum, a place where Wildcat coaches can introduce prospective recruits to K-State and where K-State athletic supporters can share similar experiences.

As a current consultant to Miller, Barrett has some definite goals for the future.

"I would still like K-State to win a national championship in basketball and become very competitive in football," he said. "If we can do that, a great deal of other great things will come our way."

'Cat back receives Big 8 honor

By David Svoboda
Sports Editor

For the first time since 1981, a K-State running back has been honored as the Big Eight's offensive player of the week.

Senior Pat Jackson, fresh off a 156-yard, four-touchdown performance in the Wildcats' 52-7 rout of New Mexico State last Saturday, took the league award which was announced Monday.

The last K-State running back to earn the honor was Mark Hundley. Jackson took a split decision over Missouri's Ronnell Kayhill, who rushed for 93 yards in 12 carries and scored three touchdowns in a 45-10 victory over Utah State.

Jackson chose to give the credit for his individual achievement to the K-State offensive line.

"It primarily has a lot to do with the offensive line," Jackson said. "A lot of times, I got the ball and couldn't believe the holes I had."

Jackson's coach, Bill Snyder, passed the praise around as well.

"I'm proud of Pat, our entire offensive line, the tight ends, fullbacks — it's really kind of a team award," Snyder said. "Pat is a motivated player right now and a talented young guy."

Jackson's performance marked the first time a K-State running back broke the 100-yard barrier since Lee Pickett rushed for 112 against Tulane in 1988.

In addition, the 156 yards were the most since Tony Jordan's school-record effort of 218 against Iowa State in 1986.

Jordan viewed Jackson's effort Saturday and passed along his review that night after the game, Jackson said.

"I talked to Tony, and he said he was glad they took me out so early that I couldn't get his record," Jackson said.

Jackson said K-State's use of the option was a big reason for his success against the Aggies. And Jackson, a former quarterback himself, praised the Wildcat signal-callers.

"I like to consider myself an open-field runner, and running the option did help me a lot," he said. "The quarterbacks did a good job of setting me up — better than I would have done myself."

Late Denver drive foils KC comeback

By The Associated Press

DENVER — John Elway completed a 49-yard, fourth-down pass to set up David Treadwell's 22-yard winning field goal as the Denver Broncos blew a 12-point fourth-quarter lead and rallied to beat Kansas City 24-23 on Monday night.

Treadwell's field goal came after Steve DeBerg had thrown two touchdown passes in the final eight minutes to turn a 21-9 deficit into a 23-21 lead for the Chiefs. The second scoring pass was an 83-yarder to Stephone Paige, who caught 10 passes for 206 yards.

But facing a fourth-and-10 at his own 17, Elway, who was 14-for-28 for 263 yards, found Vance Johnson streaking across the middle and he carried the ball to the Kansas City 34.

Elway then hit Mark Jackson for 16 yards, and Bobby Humphery, who finished with 132 yards on 19 carries, raced to the 4 to set up Treadwell's kick as the clock ran out.

The win kept Denver from falling into a deep hole in the AFC West as it evened its record at 1-1. Kansas City, which hasn't won at Denver since 1982, is also 1-1.

Los Angeles leads the West with a 2-0 mark. The Chiefs face Green Bay next Sunday in Green Bay, Wis. Denver, which lost to the division-leading Raiders in their opener, faces fellow divisional rival Seattle on Sunday.

The Chiefs will not return home to Arrowhead Stadium until Sept. 30, when they battle Cleveland.

Officials get experience, razzing

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

There is a certain aura that surrounds them as they undergo a metamorphosis from an ordinary human into an enemy worse than the opposing team.

Who are they?

They are the guys in black and white trying to keep the sporting events in line, while receiving enough yelling and criticism from coaches and players that would force many people to crawl into a hole.

K-State has its own version of officials in the intramural program. However, they are not professionals. They are K-State students learning how to officiate and helping to make the intramural program possible.

"I would like students to realize that officials are students. It is the guy who sits next to you in your engineering class," said Steve Martini, director of intramurals. "It is not somebody who came from some other town to do the game today and will then leave and you will never see them again."

Recreational Services currently employs 22 officials for 150 flag football teams and 55 for the 280 doubles-volleyball teams. The officials receive a minimum wage of $4 per game which, according to Martini, is not adequate compensation for the constant nagging referees have to endure.

"If you look at any level of organized sports in our society, people are always nagging at the officials, but I think that it is just indicative of the way we look at sports and officials," Martini said. "We try to do everything we can to educate people to let them know it is not fair, it's not legal and we don't put up with it."

Terry Patry, a veteran of the officiating squad, said he believes that all the pestering can be put into perspective by the officials. Patry has been an intramural official for four years, as well as a junior college and high school mediator.

"I do a lot of high school games. It is like you can't hear the crowd, but you can hear everything the coaches say," Patry said. "Basically, you hear want you want to hear."

Patry also said that most of the teams that get carried away are in the independent and residence-hall divisions and are playing flag football for the first time.

"They sometimes don't know the rules, and they think a little more on the collegiate and pro level. Then the problem arises with the second forward pass," Patry said. "But it is always fun, and I never get tired of doing it."

Most of the officials employed by K-State are rookies getting the opportunity to learn the basics of officiating. However, after eight to 10 hours of on- and off-field training sessions, Martini said he believes most still have a sense of nervousness before their first game.

"None of them are very cocky about it (the first game). They are humbled, if anything, by officiating," Martini said. "They respect what they are doing, and taking that into consideration, 95 percent have the desire to improve."

Recreational Services is always searching for more students to officiate the games. Martini said that they can use more football, soccer and basketball referees. There are enough games that most of the officials could work every night.

"We have got great kids that choose to officiate for us. I back those kids 100 percent just because they are out there," Martini said. "They are putting their necks on the line for Rec Services. The participants are lucky they have their fellow students who choose to officiate."

No matter what type of sport a referee is officiating, there is one thing they can always relay to the infamous crowd-official, said Martini.

"It is easy to officiate from the sidelines, or it's easy to officiate when you are a player, but when you put on a shirt and a whistle around your neck, everything changes," he said.

'Cats earn B+, Colorado avoids downslip

Scott Paske
SPORTS REPORTER

Even if it is only Sept. 18, status quo in Big Eight Conference football is non-existent.

K-State is winning. Colorado is losing. Oklahoma, the team that appeared to be yielding its position near the league's perch to the mighty Buffaloes and Nebraska, is tearing apart challengers from all directions. No school in the conference will have to worry about sporting a goose egg in the win column for 1990.

Kinda neat, isn't it?

After watching the Big Eight stub its toe during the NCAA Final Four basketball chase in March, it's refreshing to see joy once again in places like Norman, Columbia and Manhattan. Big Eight grid teams are 12-6-1 through the early portion of the league's non-conference slate.

The surprise comes in how the record has been assembled.

Without question, the caliber of schedules has played a part in the early success of several teams. K-State, Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma State have posted wins against teams they should have beaten. But history has shown that what should happen doesn't always occur.

Meanwhile, the teams expected to be in the league's upper division are learning that taking on the best in the business can be both fruitful and damaging.

Colorado and Nebraska have already discovered that reputation alone will not result in a national championship. The Buffs' hopes may have vanished with Saturday's 23-22 at Illinois.

Oklahoma and Iowa State — teams that are supposed to make life difficult for the Big Two — have started down different paths. The Sooners have won their first two games in impressive fashion, while the Cyclones lost to Big Ten middle-of-the-road representative Minnesota 20-16 last weekend.

The unexpected will, in all likelihood, return to normal when the conference race begins in 11 days and Kansas travels to Oklahoma. A sense of realism to the current situation was offered by K-State coach Bill Snyder after Saturday's 52-7 conquest of New Mexico State.

"I'd be hard-pressed to think we'll make it through the entire season undefeated," Snyder said.

Probably not. But the 'Cats' performance through two games will earn high marks as I pass out first-quarter report cards to Big Eight teams at this point:

■ Oklahoma, 2-0. Grade: A+. The Sooners have used their superb backfield depth in destroying UCLA and Pitt. While it will be some time before any of them draw comparisons to Billy Sims or Joe Washington, OU's trio of Kenyon Rasheed, Ike Lewis and Dewell Brewer is making the Notre Dames and Michigans of college football look over their shoulders.

■ K-State, 2-0. Grade: B+. Snyder established a starting point for K-State on its road to success, and the 'Cats have taken off. Last Saturday's performance would be enhanced if K-State can post its first road victory in five years this weekend against struggling Northern Illinois.

■ Oklahoma State, 2-1. Grade: B. Despite a 50-7 thrashing from Florida in week two, the Cowboys have a winning record without departed quarterback Mike Gundy. Critics thought a Gundy-less O-State might make two wins in 1990 a tough task. No cry of hard times has been heard from Stillwater yet.

■ Nebraska, 2-0. Grade: B. The 'Huskers were far from impressive in a 13-0 win over Baylor in the season opener. If Nebraska's offense can catch up with its experienced defense, Tom Osborne's crew will finish a letter-grade higher, and atop the Big Eight. A 60-14 demolition of Northern Illinois 10 days ago showed that will probably happen.

■ Kansas, 1-2. Grade: B-. I thought the Jayhawks would fold their tents after a 59-10 loss to Virginia Sept. 1. Apparently not. Back-to-back solid efforts against Oregon State (a 38-12 win) and Louisville (a 28-16 loss) should give KU a boost heading into its version of Burma Road against Oklahoma, Iowa State and Miami, Fla.

■ Missouri, 1-1. Grade: C+. The Tigers pulled one of the league's two biggest blunders of the season by blowing a 19-0 lead to Texas Christian in the fourth quarter to lose 20-19 in their opener. Coach Bob Stull's crew rebounded to blast Utah State 45-10 Saturday.

Year after year, the Tigers seem to be the Big Eight's biggest question mark. Quarterback Kent Kiefer's arm should provide some answers.

■ Iowa State, 1-1. Grade: C. The Cyclones' season now lies on Heisman Trophy candidate Blaise Bryant's shoulders — and they are sore. The all-conference tailback injured his collar bone in the loss to Minnesota Saturday. His backup, Cyclone trackster David Wright, did not participate in spring drills.

■ Colorado, 1-1-1. Grade: C-. The only reason the Buffs weren't issued a downslip is their quality of opponents. Colorado has not risen to the challenges as it did in last year's Cinderella season, and national respect for the Buffs has been dealt a blow. Coach Bill McCartney's team is just too talented to be where it is right now.

Headquarters opens for fall campaigning

By Elvyn Jones
Staff Reporter

Democratic candidates gathered to open campaign headquarters in downtown Manhattan Monday and addressed education, affordable health care and taxes.

Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan, said she was right when she decided to address these issues before the campaign.

"I keep hearing these three things as I go door-to-door campaigning," Hochhauser said.

Rep. Katha Hurt, D-Manhattan, said her opponent will hear one thing repeated from her.

"The reason we don't have the money for education and to reduce taxes is the passage of a $2.65 billion highway plan," Hurt said.

Sen. Paul Feleciano, D-Wichita and candidate for state insurance commissioner, said providing affordable health insurance for senior citizens would be one of his goals in office. Administration cost should be reduced on the monthly premiums senior citizens pay for Medicaid, he said.

Feleciano said he is running because he thinks the office has become too close to the industry it regulates. His election would put a consumer advocate in the office.

"Of the 50,000 complaints brought to the office since 1981, only two companies have be sanctioned," he said.

Feleciano said the state needs a Democratic-controlled House because the Republican governor and House leadership refuse to acknowledge the need to fund the third year of the Margin of Excellence.

Rep. Ken Grotewiel, D-Wichita, said the Democrats have a good chance to win the majority in the Kansas House this year because both parties have an even number of incumbents running for re-election. Also, if Joan Finney's strength in the gubernatorial race is sustained in November, it should be a boost for other Democrats, he said.

The strong showing of Finney should make the issue of Democrats' ability to work with a Republican governor moot, Hurt said.

Big Brothers program rewarding

Director brings variety of skills

By Ryan Finney
Collegian Reporter

Being a Big Brother or Big Sister can be demanding, hectic and rewarding, all at the same time.

Being in charge of 25-40 Big/Little relationships can be even more demanding, hectic and rewarding.

This is the challenge that Gwyn Crumplar has accepted as the newly-appointed executive director of Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Manhattan.

"I'm really excited to be working for such an important organization," Crumplar said. "There are a lot of good, positive things that come out of working for or with the Big Brothers/Big Sisters program."

Crumplar was most recently an administrative officer for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. She has also served as the assistant director for the Fort Riley Child Development Center and as a community-program specialist for K-State's Single Parent/Displaced Homemaker Program.

Mark Knackendoffel, president of the board of directors for Big Brothers/Big Sisters, said the board of directors was pleased with Crumplar's blend of skills.

"We were looking for someone who had clinical, administrative and public relations skills as well as skills in working with children," Knackendoffel said. "Crumplar brought those types of backgrounds to the Big Brothers/Big Sisters program."

Crumplar, a K-State alumna, has been a Manhattan resident for many years and has experience with the Big Brothers/Big Sisters program. She was a Big Sister in 1972 while at K-State. She and her Little Sister still see each other on a regular basis.

Big Brothers/Big Sisters is a therapeutic program that assists children age 6 to 17, who are identified as being "at risk."

"The program assists chidren that come from backgrounds that are lacking the support of one parent or a totally positive home life that has caused them to not be well-adjusted socially," Crumplar said.

"Through the help of the volunteer Big Brothers and Big Sisters, the program provides the children with a

Student faints while in lecture

A graduate student collapsed during class in Dickens Hall early Monday afternoon, about 20 minutes after he told classmates that he had donated plasma.

Mark Strahm, a graduate student in geography, reached over and touched the person sitting next to him in the class Human Impact on the Environment and then fell from his chair to the floor, said Chris Banner, graduate student in geography.

"He said he got done (giving plasma) at 12:50. We started at 1:05," said Chuck Martin, assistant professor of geography.

Martin said Strahm passed out at about 1:25 p.m. He added that either Strahm or one of the students around him after he collapsed said Strahm had donated plasma earlier in the week.

Sgt. Andrew Amaro of the K-State Police Department said Strahm was unconscious for 5-6 minutes. An ambulance took him to the St. Mary Hospital.

A spokeswoman for the emergency room at the St. Mary Hospital said Strahm was treated and released.

Kurt Mortensen, manager of the Manhattan Donor Center for North American Biologicals, said center employees tell donors they need to drink plenty of fluids and eat 1-2 hours before donating plasma.

Mortensen declined to say if Strahm donated plasma Monday.

good role model and enables the children to develop self-confidence," Knackendoffel said.

The Big Brothers/Big Sisters program is a United Way Agency recipient. The program also receives money from the city of Manhattan through donations and fund raisers.

Crumplar and Knackendoffel share a common goal in wanting to expand the Big Brothers/Big Sisters program.

"We have started a complete program of evaluation to see if there is any different way we can handle the volume of cases within the same framework of the resources we have now," Knackendoffel said.

The Big Brothers/Big Sisters program is assisting about 100 kids. There are another 60 children on a waiting list as well as a waiting list of volunteers. The program does not have the funding it needs to meet the demands of its clientele.

"We just don't have the funds to hire more case workers so we can match more children with mature volunteers," Crumplar said.

Mall

Dulling Optical will open Sept. 28 on the other side of the mall in the new Sears addition.

Manager Lonie Seele said Dulling Optical will be a full-service one-hour optical store.

"We will have 11 trained employees," Seele said. "There will be some specialty prescriptions that we will not be able to fill in one hour."

Dulling Optical has 170 to 180 stores across the nation, Seele said.

Elegance, a ladies' apparel store, may open a few weeks after Dulling Optical.

"It's up to my architect at this point," said Jiang Shult, owner of Elegance. "We hope to be open by Oct. 15."

Chris Heavey, manager of the mall, said Elegance is not like anything in the town center.

"Prices will be around $100 and up," Heavey said. "They've narrowed down their market considerably with higher prices, but they will have an opportunity to earn a market that usually shops some place other than Manhattan."

Heavey said he is not concerned with Elegance's product line; his reservations are about the way the store uses its retail space.

Fortune Cookies, a Chinese restaurant, will occupy 867 square feet of retail space in the Food Court.

Heavey said the restaurant has been desperately needed in the mall. No official opening date has been set.

Even with all the new openings, the mall is trying to attract diversity to the list of its current tenants.

Ortega and Heavey said the mall is looking at the possibility of opening a health club next to Garfield's.

Nothing is official, but Ortega said he is researching it.

The leasing process, however, can be long. In the case of Garfield's, Ortega said he approached over 50 restaurants before negotiations began with Sahli Enterprises.

"Manhattan is a small market," Ortega said. "Many criteria must be considered, and the demographics must be just right or a deal won't be approved by the group's leasing committee."

Parry said the Finney plan is much more equitable because it is designed to investigate the possibility of adding a sales tax to groups that currently pay no taxes.

Ybarra said he believes the Hayden plan will pass because the proposal passed the House of Representatives and came within three votes of passing the Senate during the 1989 session of the Legislature.

Hayden, if re-elected, plans to present the program to the Legislature at the beginning of the 1990 session. Ybarra said it will be much easier after the election is over and the political element is removed.

Murder

The witness must call and make arrangements for a third party, usually a lawyer, to collect the reward money — this way the witness remains anonymous at all times.

The Crime Stoppers programs in Topeka and Riley County are also offering a reward.

"A specific dollar amount hasn't been stated in this case," said Sgt. Brad Shoen, spokesman for Manhattan's Crime Stoppers program. "Reward money would probably be offered for legitimate information."

Harsha said anyone having any information concerning this case should call the Topeka Police Department or the Manhattan or Topeka Crime Stoppers.

There must be some way to avoid doing the same thing for the next forty years.

Life's been pretty good so far. You've kept moving—taken all the right steps along the way (for the most part). And now you're ready for the biggest step.

You'll be getting your degree from a top school. You're about to find a great job.

The question is: which job? And will it have the potential to interest you for a whole career?

You've probably heard the story of the job applicant who said he was a shoe salesman with fifteen years experience. "No," corrected the recruiter interviewing him, "you've had six months experience thirty times."

Isn't there some way to keep challenging yourself in new and different areas?

Andersen Consulting offers you the opportunity to work on a variety of projects—with clients in a wide range of industries.

We are the leader in helping organizations apply information technology to their business advantage. Every hour of every business day, we implement a solution to help one of our more than 5,000 clients worldwide.

What makes that possible is the quality of our people. And the quality of our training. We're known for both.

Because business and technology are ever-changing, we see training as a continuing process. And our $123-million Center for Professional Education in St. Charles, Illinois, is just one measure of our commitment. We train you for a career—not just a job.

Does the idea of forty years of knowing exactly what you'll be doing each week scare you? Then don't settle for that. Demand challenge and variety. Come talk to us. And find out more about a career with Andersen Consulting.

Patrick Prendergast, senior in architectural engineering, takes a light meter reading behind Dickens Hall Tuesday night. Prendergast and other Campus Safety Task Force members toured the University checking for improved lighting across campus. The Student Governing Association committee is comprised of student, faculty and administration members.

Safety groups view campus lighting

By Paul Noel
Staff Reporter

Members of the Campus Safety Task Force and the Illumination Engineering Society toured campus Tuesday night to evaluate its lighting.

Based on the tour, Rob Dieringer, senior in construction science and task force chairman, said there are three problems with campus lighting that should be addressed immediately. Those problems are several burned out lights, overgrown shrubbery which covers lighting and dim lights.

Dieringer said the task force will submit a memorandum about the burned-out lights to the University facilities office and the problem should be resolved within a few days.

The walkways are an important concern on campus, said Phillip Anderson, faculty representative to Student Senate and instructor of speech.

"If the walkways are lighted, that's where the people will stay," Anderson said. "Now walking on campus is like walking on a checker board — some places are well lit and others are not."

The task force also discussed the need for the installation of new lighting around the bicycle racks.

John Lambert, director of public safety, said the main problem with installing the lights would be in routing electricity to the racks and the large labor costs.

The worse lit areas on campus are on the west side of Justin Hall and at Mid Campus Drive near Calvin Hall, Dieringer said. Temporary lighting was set up at Calvin after the light in the center of the K-State Union parking lot fell this summer.

Lambert said plans are being made to evaluate bids on installing a new lighting system in the Union parking lot similar to the lighting in lots D1W and D1E which are west of Memorial Stadium.

The main problems at Justin are overgrown shrubbery and insufficient lighting in the parking lot, Dieringer said.

Students construct Telsa Coil display

By Tammy Rose
Collegian Reporter

Eight electrical and computer engineering honor students are trying to create some sparks on the K-State campus.

Gary Johnson, professor in electrical and computer engineering, and the eight students are building K-State's first Tesla Coil.

The coil creates sparks from high voltage and currents, and its primary purpose is for display, Johnson said.

"People are fascinated with electricity. This would be a great example of a grade schooler's show-and-tell object," he said.

The Tesla Coil dates back 90 years to its inventor Nikola Tesla, a Yugoslavian-born scientist who invented electric power. Johnson said he wants to update the coil from 90 years ago by using fiber optics and power MOSFET, a certain transistor device.

The coil, when finished, will be small enough to carry around. Cost for the project has been minimal. Most of the parts have been donated or picked up by Johnson at a junkyard. The total expense will be $100 to $200, Johnson said.

Johnson said he would like to establish a specific time for people to observe the coil in action. Afterwards, it would most likely be kept in the engineering department.

The students involved are gaining experience from the project.

Dan Jensen, senior in electrical engineering, said he believes the work he is doing on the project will benefit him later on.

"My main objective is building a measurement device for high frequency current and voltage for the system," Jensen said. "The research I've done, I believe, will be very valuable to me in looking for a career."

Johnson said he hopes to create a larger Tesla Coil someday. He would like to build a coil measuring 50 feet in diameter and standing 20 feet tall on some land he owns in the area. The coil would be made mostly of surplus materials and only cost a few hundred dollars.

Johnson said his interest in building the coil is attributed to his fascination with electricity.

Kentucky university fills post; Wefald denies seeking position

From Staff and Wire Reports

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Charles Wethington Jr., whose candidacy divided the University of Kentucky community, became the school's 10th president Tuesday.

The other finalist was Peggy Gordon Elliott, 53, chancellor of Indiana University Northwest at Gary.

Two other finalists, University of Akron President William Muse and K-State President Jon Wefald, removed their names from consideration two weeks ago.

Wefald said he never actively sought the University of Kentucky presidency. He said it is not uncommon to be nominated for such positions.

"I've never talked with the (Kentucky) Board of Regents. I've never even been to the state of Kentucky," Wefald said.

Wethington, 54, a longtime UK administrator, had held the interim post since last December when David Roselle resigned to become president at the University of Delaware.

The university board of trustees voted 17-3 in favor of Wethington's appointment. His election came despite calls from some at the school's Lexington campus for a new search.

Resolutions passed last week by the University Senate said the search process was flawed and that Wethington should not be a candidate for the permanent job because he was serving in the interim post.

Plant Materials Center studies seed production, conservation

By Candace Plett
Collegian Reporter

When Gary Fine came to Manhattan to begin work at the Plant Materials Center, he discovered that many people couldn't give him directions to the center. No one he asked had heard of it.

"A lot of people don't realize we're out here," said Fine, PMC director. "Mostly, we're visited by University people and area farmers."

The 169-acre facility, established in 1936, is located 10 miles west and south of Manhattan in the Kansas River valley near Ashland.

There are 26 centers nationally, a project of the U.S. Soil Conservation Service. In 1989, the one near Manhattan was selected as the Plant Materials Center of the Year for its advances in technology and conservation work.

"Here in Manhattan, we serve Nebraska and Oklahoma as well as Kansas," Fine said. "We work closely with the land-grant colleges in the region, particularly K-State. We try to meet various needs throughout our region."

Fine added that the purpose of PMC is to look for uses of conservation plants and determine their potential role in such areas as water quality and soil improvement.

"Although the emphasis is on seed production, the end result we want is a plant that will continue to live in the wild," he said.

Fine and four other employees are responsible for all of the seed

Increase of fort's acreage on hold

By The Associated Press

A Pentagon moratorium on military land acquisition has halted a proposed expansion of Fort Riley indefinitely, Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said Tuesday.

Dole made the announcement in a statement after he met with Donald J. Atwood, the deputy secretary of defense.

"It's less likely now that Fort Riley will be adding Kansas land to its boundaries," Dole said. "This new official position means nothing will be happening very quickly."

Fort Riley officials contend the Army needs to acquire about 100,000 acres near the base in northeast Kansas to provide more space for training soldiers on new weapons. The base is the largest military installation in the state.

Atwood said, in a memorandum, the Defense Department was suspending all proposals to add more than 1,000 acres of land to domestic military bases for training. Dole requested the meeting with Atwood to clarify the effects of this moratorium.

Last week, Fort Riley and other Kansas officials said they were uncertain how the base would be affected by the Pentagon moratorium.

Dole said the new policy also had halted a study of alternatives to the Fort Riley expansion. This study was part of the Army's procedures for land acquisition, and was expected to be finished next year.

Opponents of the proposed expansion were relieved by the decision.

"I'm personally very pleased," said Keith Ascher, a Junction City rancher who leads Preserve the Flint Hills, an organization formed to fight the expansion. "It's been a long ordeal."

However, Ascher said the news is not the end of the line for opponents.

"I would guess that the coalition will stay together, maybe not work as intensely as it did in the past, but it will stay together," he said.

Jay Copeland, another opponent of the expansion plans, said he is cautiously optimistic.

"I'm excited it's been put on hold, but what does that mean?" Copeland said. "Maybe now it will give them more time to come up with more answers.

"We're very supportive of the military. We just don't think they need more land," he said.

In general, the Pentagon's moratorium represents a fundamental change in the way the government will acquire land for U.S. military bases. The secretary or deputy secretary of defense must now give prior approval to any proposal for expanding a base through land acquisition before the military services can move ahead.

Urgent land acquisition proposals by the military also would be subject to the same slowdown treatment, Dole said.

In the past, the Army would decide that additional land is needed and then conduct a study of the alternatives. This analysis is done primarily by Army officials at the installation level rather than at higher levels of authority.

Congressional investigators have sharply criticized the Army's land acquisition procedures. Investigators said the service lacked a system for setting priorities for land acquisition among bases nationwide and determining the need for additional training land.

Late last year, Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., called for the Army to halt its proposed expansion of Fort Riley until the service revamped its land acquisition procedures.

Kassebaum said, in a statement, the Pentagon's decision does not jeopardize the future of Fort Riley, and there's no basis to believe that the 1st Infantry Division will be moved from the base.

Gov. Mike Hayden applauded the Pentagon's new policy, saying it is in the best interest of all parties.

The New York Times reported in its Tuesday editions the moratorium would apply to proposals to add nearly 4.5 million acres to military bases nationwide, many of them in the West.

Typhoon hits Japanese isle

TOKYO (AP) — Heavy rains left four people dead, one missing and nine others injured as Typhoon Flo approached Japan's southern island of Kyushu on Tuesday, police said.

National Police Headquarters said all the casualties were reported on islands and coastal areas in southwestern Japan. Weather forecasters said the typhoon contained winds up to 113 mph.

Michio Hitsuma of the Central Meteorological Agency said Flo was expected to reach Kyushu sometime Wednesday.

Police said rains caused 82 landslides, destroyed four bridges and cut portions of roads and railroads at 59 spots Tuesday. Portions of two dikes were washed away and more than 6,000 homes and buildings were flooded, they said.

All service on the high-speed bullet train was suspended Tuesday morning because of the rain, affecting more than 100,000 passengers. Three airlines canceled more than 50 domestic flights in western Japan, affecting nearly 10,000 people.

US Sprint to export to USSR

(AP) — The main owner of US Sprint Communications Co. obtained a federal license to export advanced communications equipment to the Soviet Union under more relaxed export control rules.

United Telecommunications Inc. Chairman William T. Esrey said Monday that the export license was issued by the U.S. Department of Commerce for exports of data communications switches and related software.

Esrey recently visited the Soviet Union and said he worked on plans for Sprint to open a data switching center in Moscow later this year.

Sprint, based in Kansas City, is the nation's third-largest long-distance telephone company. Its main owner is United Telecom, based in Westwood, Kan.

Clines convicted of charges

BALTIMORE (AP) — An ex-CIA agent who brokered arms during the Iran-Contra affair was convicted today of four tax charges in federal court.

A jury deliberated 34 hours before convicting Thomas G. Clines of making false statements on his 1985 and 1986 tax returns. Clines, who helped procure arms for the Nicaraguan rebels, was named in a four-count indictment returned in U.S. District Court in Baltimore on Feb. 22.

He was convicted of failure to report foreign financial accounts and understating his gross receipts.

Storefront collapse kills 3

PHILADELPHIA (AP)— A two-story brick storefront collapsed onto a busy downtown sidewalk Tuesday, crushing three people to death and injuring eight others, authorities said.

Among the 11 caught in the collapse were four police officers who had been walking their beat, authorities said.

The facade apparently was weighted down by metal signs and security gates that had been anchored in the wall, said Fire Commission Roger Ulshafer.

The collapse occurred shortly before 2:30 p.m. between 9th and 10th streets on the south side of Market Street, one of the city's main arteries.

SPJ changes recommended

GREENCASTLE, Ind. (AP) — A committee of journalism leaders has proposed 10 recommendations for the future of the Society of Professional Journalists.

Among the recommendations is a new, simpler mission statement that shows SPJ's commitment to "preserving the First Amendment freedoms by promoting and supporting the needs, interests and independence of working journalists and the practice and standards of quality journalism."

"It's an opportunity for SPJ to not only survive, but thrive. Whether these suggestions are accepted is up to the board of directors, but the choice is to grab an opportunity," said Jean Otto, Sigma Delta Chi Foundation president.

Finney vetoes dual debate

TOPEKA (AP) — The debate over the gubernatorial debates was rekindled Monday.

Democratic candidate Joan Finney officially informed the Kansas Associated of Broadcasters that she would not participate in a joint appearance with Gov. Mike Hayden Oct. 10 in Lawrence.

A spokesman for Finney said she had never accepted the Lawrence invitation, so she wasn't backing out of anything.

Hayden issued a statement saying it was further evidence Finney, his opponent in the Nov. 6 general election, is avoiding the media, the voters and in-depth discussion of the issues.

The KAB appearance was to have been televised and broadcast statewide by 17 television and 32 radio stations.

Two joint appearances remain for the two party candidates before the election, Oct. 20 on WDAF-TV in Kansas City and Nov. 4 on WIBW-TV in Topeka.

Wheat set-aside data late

WICHITA (AP) — Rep. Dan Glickman said Tuesday he is working to get Congressional and U.S. Department of Agriculture leaders to agree on how much land wheat farmers must idle to be eligible for federal price support programs.

Farmers are unsure how much winter wheat to seed because Agriculture Secretary Clayton Yeutter hasn't announced how much land they must idle.

Farmers say making wheat planting decisions without complete information is like starting to bake cookies without knowing how many dozen you need to produce.

Yeutter says he doesn't have the authority to announce a specific set-aside percentage without a new farm bill, which is still being hammered out. In a letter to Glickman, he said some might accuse him of usurping Congress' authority if he made a set-aside recommendation.

Man faces steroid charges

KANSAS CITY, Kan. (AP) — A Pittsburg pharmacist has pleaded guilty to two federal felonies involving illegal trafficking of steroids.

Francis E. Usher, 62, made the plea Monday in U.S. District Court. He faces up to eight years in prison and $250,000 in fines.

He admitted to conspiracy and illegal distribution of steroids between March 1986 and May 1988.

Court records say Usher ordered more than 20,000 vials of prescription steroids from pharmaceutical companies and resold them to a distributor, who offered them on the black market.

Plans underway for Homecoming

By Shannon Heim
Collegian Reporter

Representatives from various campus organizations discussed this year's Homecoming activities and competitions at a meeting Tuesday in the K-State Union.

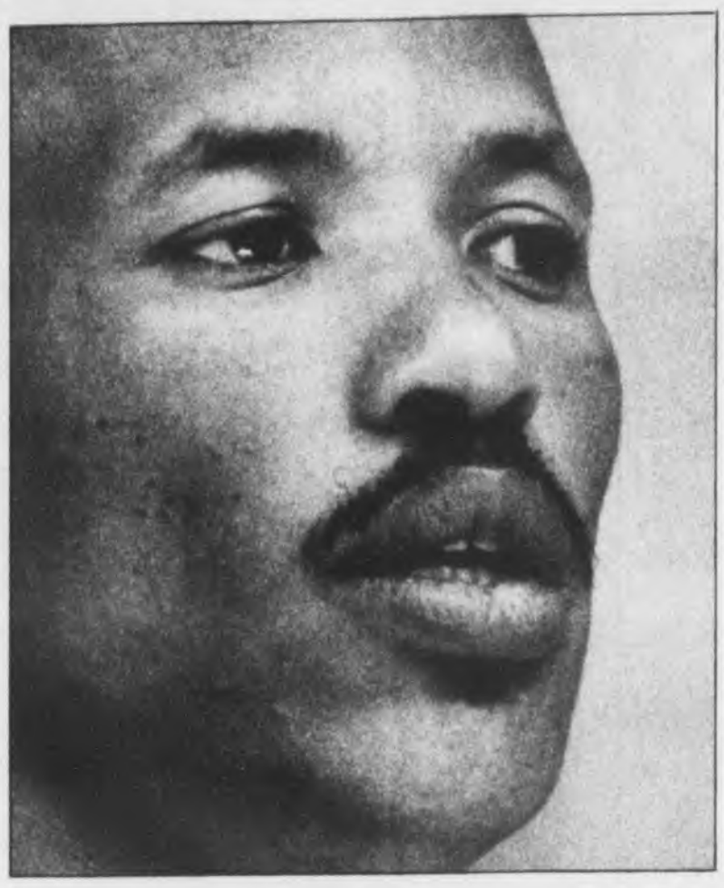
"I Like the State in U" is the theme of Homecoming Week 1990, which will be Oct. 31 through Nov. 3. Blue Key National Honor Society is in charge of the festivities again this year.

"We chose the theme because we thought it incorporated the entire University, which is really our goal this year," said Gail Edson, senior in family life and human development and president of Blue Key.

In an effort to get more people involved, Blue Key divided group competitions into three categories. The categories include residence halls, greek housing and campus organizations.

"I was glad to see a wide diversity of groups at the meeting," Edson said. "Our main goal is to increase involvement throughout the campus and community. Homecoming is a celebration of pride in K-State."

A traveling trophy will be awarded to the group accumulating the most points for achievement and participation in activities such as Spirit Banner, Body Building, Yell Like Hell and Float/Yard/Building Art.



"I'm glad Blue Key is trying to get organizations involved and make Homecoming an All-University event," said Buffy Larson, senior in history and representative of Alpha Delta Pi sorority. "I think their theme is exciting."

Another change aimed at increasing involvement is making window painting a competition this year, said Clint Riley, senior in chemical science. Blue Key representatives said this would be an inexpensive way for any group to participate. Riley said he hopes all campus clubs will take part.

Kicking off the week's activities will be Ambassador Elections Oct. 31 in the Union. The following two days will include most of the competitions and judgings.

Homecoming game day will begin at 9 a.m. Nov. 3 with the traditional

AFRICAN AWARENESS MONTH

By The Collegian Staff

African Awareness Month drew a small crowd for it's lecture titled "The Effects of International Dependency on Economic Development in Africa," on Tuesday evening.

Gaspard Nderagakura, a graduate student in sociology, spoke to less than 10 people in the K-State Union Little Theatre at 7 p.m. Tuesday.

The lecture, which ran 1½ hours, covered Africa's economic dependency on the western world due to past and present political and economic systems.

Africa's economic dependency upon the western nations was blamed upon the western nations' previous domination, imperialist movements, colonial occupations, neo-colonial withdrawal and dependency domination, Nderagakura said.

Nderagakura also said that the African economic state was due to the western world's exploitation of African natural resources, no African trade balance and erratic payments for Africa resources.

"It should not be forgotten that only 10 percent of its natural resources have been prospected, and that Africa could be one of the

Enlarged physics lab to open in October

K-State's reputation for quality research was a key to landing a grant enabling the expansion of the current physics laboratory.

The expansion in Cardwell Hall, which was financed by the Department of Energy and the State of Kansas, will be declared officially complete on Oct. 17.

"The grant that K-State received from the Department of Energy is very prestigious," said Kevin Carnes, associate scientist in the James R. Macdonald Laboratory. "In addition to having the accelerator, we can attract high quality faculty and students."

Carnes said the expansion consisted of a super-conducting linear accelerator, which produces highly charged ions, and a CRYEBIS, which produces highly charged ions at low energies. The new accelerator will allow researchers to further their experimentations.

"Atomic physics research requires a broad range of energies and charge-states and the new accelerator will better enable that research with a more capable machine," Carnes said.

Carnes came to K-State from Purdue University to work on this accelerator.

"Another benefit that did result indirectly from the expansion is the department's ability to hire undergraduates to help in the lab," Carnes said.

Ted Pope, a junior in electrical engineering who works with the accelerator, said, "The exposure to new technology and also being familiar with the equipment will help when I am looking for a job."

Carnes said most accelerators of this size are located in technical centers and have plenty of staff to help with the research. With the accelerator based at K-State, undergraduate student aid in the lab is important.

The lab has been doing basic research, working to understand the atomic process, since the mid 1970s. The original accelerator has a maximum output of 7 million volts; the new accelerator will add about 12 million volts.

The cost of the linear accelerator and the CRYEBIS was an estimated

City accepts contract

Airport renovation planned in stages

By Erika Parker
Staff Reporter

A new Manhattan airport is past the planning stages and into the construction stages.

The city commission approved a contract Tuesday with Smokey Hill Inc. to construct a terminal ramp or a place to park airplanes when not in use, said Bruce McCallum, director of public works.

The new ramp will cost $1,102,000. The city must pay 10 percent of the total cost, and the other 90 percent will be paid for by federal funds. It will be completed sometime next spring, McCallum said.

The new terminal will be located southwest of the Manhattan Municipal Airport. The present facility is too old and out-of-date for Manhattan's needs, McCallum said.

The ramp is the first of several stages in finishing the new terminal scheduled to be completed in 1992, McCallum said.

"I doubt if we make it, to be honest," McCallum said. "We're relatively close."

McCallum said he hopes the new airport will attract more airlines.

"You've got to have the facilities before you can get the airlines," he said.

The old airport was built in the 1950s. Once completed, it will become primarily an airfreight facility while the new airport will handle commercial flights, McCallum said.

The next two stages in the long-term plan will be the construction of a new terminal building and public parking lot.

The entire project is estimated to cost $3,365,000. Less than 90 percent of it will be provided by federal funds because the federal government will only pay for those facilities it deems necessary for public use.

For example, the government will not provide total funds for the terminal building. However, the government will pay 75 percent of the cost for lobby facilities and restrooms, McCallum said.

Controversy arose about whether

Fine arts fee proves beneficial to students

Students are naturally opposed to fee increases that inflate tuition prices. So when they had to shell out an extra $15 for the new fine arts fee, there was some grumbling.

Like it or not, the fee is a boon to the departments on campus otherwise neglected when it comes to funding. An estimated $245,000 will go toward the fine arts on campus.

This money is not going to be buried and hidden in bureaucratic budget philandering; the money will go straight to programs.

The speech, music and art departments will get the bulk of the money. The art department's budget alone will skyrocket almost 500 percent.

Those who scoff at the fee because they figure only art, speech, music or theater majors will profit from it should check out student ticket prices at McCain events. One-third of the fee money will help cut the prices, and students who don't take advantage of the opportunity have only themselves to blame.

An influx of different music, art and other related programs should be evident on campus in the near future. Check out the Union Art Gallery for more diverse shows, go to some concerts sponsored by the music department and watch a play at Nichols Theatre.

It's refreshing to see the funding underdogs get a break for a change.

Athletic department shouldn't buy wins

A brief but swift condemnation was voiced last week about the asinine destruction of the football goalposts by glee-seeking hooligans. A similar outcry was prompted by last year's outbreak after the victory over North Texas State University.

Much of the outcry was aimed at the public's perceptions of K-State fan behavior after the incidents. Team pride and fan behavior were two reasons, but another reason cited for the idiocy of vandalism struck a deeper chord: money.

The goalposts cost about $5,000, including the labor needed to align them properly.

This concern over wasted money is greatly warranted, especially with the Department of Intercollegiate Athletic's budget woes. Let's face it; this is a stupid waste of money. It can be avoided if fans could control their adolescent actions.

But with all of this talk about money, no one mentioned the $50,000 the athletic department dropped all too gladly to avoid legal troubles with the University of Wyoming. The department justified the contract buy out by scheduling a weaker opponent.

They spent $50,000 for one possible win.

Of course, winning is important for the team and the program itself, to boost morale and fan support at games. But if the department isn't willing to take a chance on a game they might lose, how can fans have absolute faith in the team?

So far this season, the football program has shown its ability to overcome the past. They have proven contract negotiations aren't needed for all victories.

Memories of fall and falling

Jana Leep

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

It feels like fall — and leaves, sweaters and memories of a first kiss in the first weeks of school. Of catching that early school bus after grandmother's toast with grandmother close. Of my parents rushing to work, leaving me to my primping.

I feel quiet reflecting upon that time when I was primed for becoming a woman, but first a girl. I did not know that boys were to become men. So self-absorbed, I knew I was changing, that I was going to change, because my body said so.

Boys knew it too. They squeaked when they spoke while I spiraled taller than all — except that first boy. He was tall and all I could think of that autumn. He was older than I, and I wrote him checklist-like notes with multiple choice responses for his convenience. But he liked me. He told me he liked me because I was smart.

But after this first boy, fall became dangerous. My sweater developed and became a constant reminder that it was now me against them. The mutual kiss was replaced with a hiss. I would sit down, there would be a hand there, and I would giggle, and then cry during lunch, alone and away from the other girls that would giggle, but didn't cry during lunch.

I would walk outside the school, around to the back door, close to my locker, away from the main hall lined with boys becoming men, and spin my combination with precision. I would hurry during the 10 minutes between each class to avoid having to giggle again.

The second boy was tall, and that autumn he played football. I played cheerleader. We played out the new girl/boy thing. He said it was OK that I was smart, but it wasn't great. I would giggle and lose my head because he needed me to be that way and I needed him to be that way. He said he liked me and called me "Frog" to prove it. I knew he liked me because he had to have spent a lot of time thinking about me to realize the connection between my last name and frogs.

The third boy. For him I wore black eyeliner and listened to "Back in Black" until I knew the words. This third boy met me at Jill's house because Jill's parents were out of town. He drank too much and then flattened me on Jill's parents' bed until I couldn't breathe. I figured he didn't know the difference because he didn't know me.

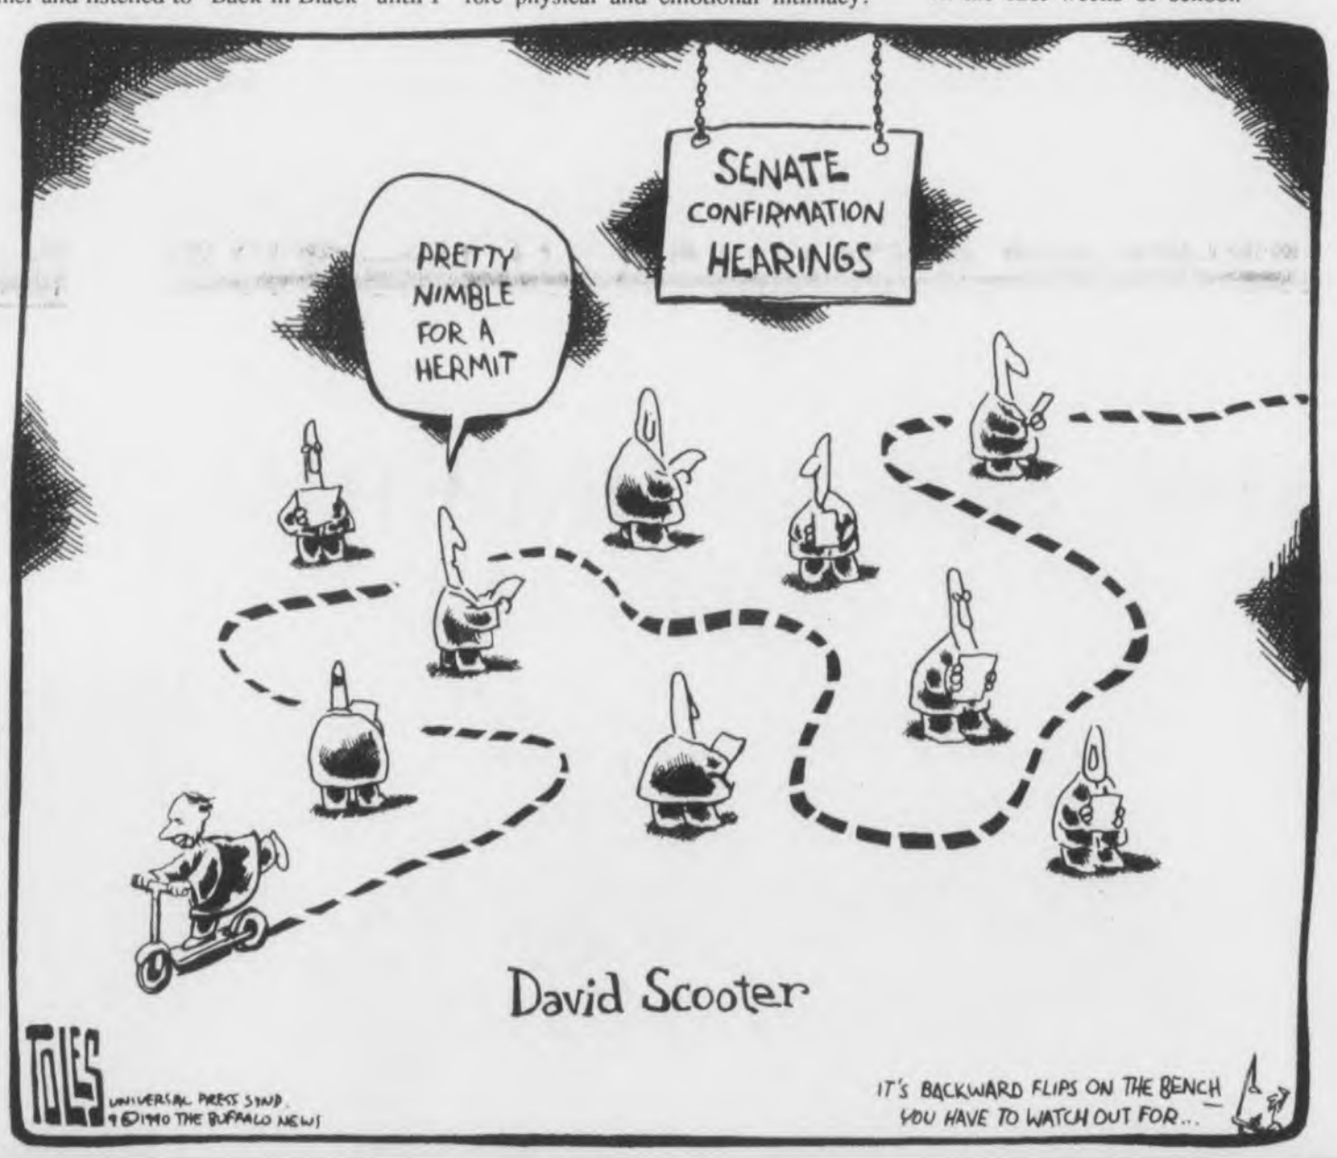
The fourth boy I didn't know would be the fourth boy.

The fifth boy, he played football too. I cheered hard that fall, only to fall. Jill told me he liked me. I told her to tell him I would sit by him on the bus going to the next football game. But his best friend intercepted the pass and told me Jill knew this boy was going to "use" me, but had said, "Jana won't mind." His best friend said I would mind because the coach and the football team were placing bets.

Fall never got much better. Until this fall.

This fall, I have quit giggling when I am not laughing inside. That first kiss with that first boy was so honest. Neither of us had any inkling adults could and would distort sexuality. Neither of us had any inkling sexuality could and would become a medium for playing out conflict, insecurity, anger and power. It would have seemed silly. It still seems silly.

Why do girls and boys, as they become young women and men, stop respecting each other, start avoiding honesty and begin fearing the poignant? Do we not know how to be honest? Do we not want to be honest? Do we not know the difference between sexual and emotional intimacy? Do we not know how to communicate? Do we not know that respect for another's boundaries must occur first before physical and emotional intimacy?



Adolescence was an awkward time. Exploration. Humiliation. Expectation. Excitation. We learn what feels good and what feels bad, for ourselves and for others. But all that we learn, we do not assimilate. I learned that as I developed physically, the demands upon me as a sexual being would intensify. I learned I didn't want to be sexual with each boy that found me attractive. But I did not assimilate this information, and continued to giggle for quite some time. This was not fair to myself or to the young men.

But their treatment of me was not fair or humane either. Most of us have experienced painful moments from both sides, as perpetrator and victim, where sexuality was wielded as a weapon, tool or medium through which harm could be felt deeply. Many times harm was not intended. Many times harm was intended. We are most vulnerable when exploring our sexuality.

But I don't intend to blame individual young men and women for my melancholy memories of fall. I contend our society sets up boys and girls to become men vs. women. No wonder relationships are such hard work. No wonder I remember praying to God to make me into a boy so I could become a man and have the upper-hand.

While our gender roles are embedded in societal expectations, men and women have to decide to control their own sexuality, their own self-definitions. I thought becoming a woman meant giggling whether I liked it or not. The boys thought becoming a man meant putting their needs first, defining themselves, as Kevin Zwink pointed out Monday, according to interactions with young women.

But following the scripts and not responding to inner needs, objections and ethics leads to harm for oneself and for others. And this is why I have quit giggling at the inappropriate, the hurtful. And this is why fall feels like leaves, sweaters and memories of a first kiss in the first weeks of school.

Labeling ridiculous

Editor,

I find it difficult to believe that a publication such as the Collegian supports such a small minded, crybaby view of the greek system as was expressed in the Sept. 17 editorial.

Greek organizations, which are not commercial enterprises, provide numerous opportunities to their members. There are endless chances to develop leadership skills, work to better the community and make lasting friends.

The implication that greek students "buy" friendships is both ridiculous and insulting. Greek society provides ample opportunity for people to meet and interact on a social and personal level. I don't believe that paying admission to a school dance was ever compared to "buying" a chance to meet someone nice.

It also stands to reason that members of greek chapters become good friends because they have similar interests and beliefs. They also spend a great deal of time together planning events, attending functions and studying. This manner of making friends is not restricted to sororities and fraternities.

Each greek chapter requires dues from its members, similar to Girl Scouts and many other clubs. It is unfortunate that not everyone can afford the same financial benefits in life. Not everyone is able to go to college, own cars, go on Union Program Council trips and belong to a sorority or fraternity. After all, this is capitalist America, not communist China.

Students choose to become greek if they believe they will benefit from developmental programs, if they will get along with fellow chapter members and if they can afford it. They are provided, as pledges, time to decide if they truly want to become members of a chapter. Becoming a member is a lifelong commitment and is an important decision. No one expects a priest to become initiated the first day he is in the seminary.

A large number of campus organizations claim restricted membership. However, no one is accusing cooperative houses of discriminating against underachievers, or honoraries of discriminating against less bright people, or Black Student Union of discriminating against Caucasians.

People associate with groups that share their feelings and beliefs. It is not an effort to exclude others and diversity will never be achieved by labeling and stereotyping.

Exposure needed

Editor,

While reading the review of the Lincoln Highway Exhibit written by the Collegian Philistine, Heather Anderson, I got the feeling that she would be unable to differentiate between an Obsession ad and a Brett Weston print.

To begin with, the definition of panoramic involves no mention of the word color.

Secondly, just as a pencil drawing of a subject differs from a painting of the same subject, so does a black and white print differ from a color print. Typically, emphasis is placed on form and value in black and white photography and on color relationships in color photography. At any rate, simply adding color would not make any difference. Photographs that appear to her to have been taken in the Flint Hills would still appear that way — only in color.

Heather, lest you become the Ted Turner of photo exhibits, I would suggest that you browse around in stack level 8 in Farrell Library and check out some of the photo books by some of the great photographers such as Ansel Adams, Bill Brandt, Robert Mapplethorpe, Brett Weston, and Edward Weston — just to name a few.

As they say in photo-ese, you need more exposure.

Greeks get bargain

Editor,

In your editorial "Diversity, fraternities incompatible at K-State" you state that members pay an average of $2,400 per year to live in a greek house, and that they are "buying the friendship of others." Funny, the residence hall fee for 1990-1991 is $1,270 per semester or $2,540 per year.

Gee, the greeks save an average of $140 and they get friends too. What a bargain.

Representives recruit Peace Corps volunteers

By Kelly Berg
Staff Reporter

Peace Corps representatives concluded two days of recruiting students for their program in the K-State Union Tuesday afternoon.

"It has been a very productive two days," said Derek Stanfill, staff member of the Kansas City area Peace Corps office. "I've gotten the chance to talk to around 300 students, staff and faculty, and have given out 30 applications."

Stanfill said the K-State faculty is more helpful than any other Kansas university or college he visits. He said they are very supportive and some even let him speak in their classes.

Stanfill served in the U.S. Peace Corps as a community development volunteer from 1986 to 1988. He lived with a Senegalese family and served as a liaison between Senegal, a village of 1,100 people in West Africa, and the ministry of social development.

The Peace Corps' domestic field offices are recruiting about 70 new volunteers to work in its environmental education programs for 1990, said Cathy McFarlane, Peace Corps division chief technical service.

"These volunteers ideally will have a bachelor's degree or coursework in environmental education, natural resources, ecology or conservation, or a demonstrated interest in planning, organizing or leading environmentally related projects," McFarlane said.

Eighty-five percent of Peace Corps programs require a college degree. People with degrees in biology, geology, nutrition, any kind of agriculture, primary education, foresty, chemistry, secondary education, special education and accounting are in high demand, Stanfill said.

The remaining 15 percent of programs require experience in skilled trades, crop extension, agriculture, animal husbandry and farm mechanics.

"K-State is a good place to recruit because it has a lot of students in the areas of expertise that we need, like agriculture and engineering," Stanfill said.

According to a report from the Peace Corps, Kansas is ranked as the 27th state in number of volunteers per capita. With a population of about 2,476,000, Kansas currently has 63 volunteers in the Peace Corps. Oregon, with a similar population, has 164 volunteers.

"We're hoping to change this," Stanfill said.

He said he felt a possible reason for the low number of volunteers from Kansas is that a lot of Kansas is rural area, and rural areas don't tend to be exposed to cultural diversity as much as more populated areas. He said if they aren't exposed to different cultures they might not be comfortable with it later in life.

Nevertheless, there have been 513 volunteers from Kansas since 1961, he said.

"One out of every five that apply for the Peace Corps are invited to serve," Stanfill said.

A person wanting to be involved with a Peace Corps program has to be willing to commit 27 months — three months for training and two years as a volunteer.

"The Corps has matured a lot over the last 29 years, and the application process is a lot more competitive than before," Stanfill said.

Football attendance down from 1989

Snyder, Miller express concern, puzzlement over decreasing number of supporters

By David Svoboda
Sports Editor

While insisting that the situation has not yet reached "problem" proportions, football coach Bill Snyder and Athletic Director Steve Miller expressed concern Tuesday about the small number of fans in the stands at the first two home football games of 1990.

Snyder and Miller made their remarks at Snyder's weekly meeting with the media Tuesday afternoon at the Vanier Football Complex.

A great many of the 30 minutes Snyder spent fielding questions from the 20-plus gathered members of the local press corps were spent with the coach reacting publicly to a situation he first spoke to informally after Monday night's Wildcat workout.

Before he initiated his remarks, Snyder made it clear to those gathered that he wanted them printed in their entirety.

He began: "If you're going to quote me, I'd appreciate it if you'd quote the whole thing. And the whole thing is this — one, if there were 19,000 people, or whatever the number might be, that were here, then I want you to know, and I want them to know, that I love them dearly and we can't survive without them.

"I can't tell you how much we appreciate them being here. If there was a way to do it, I'd thank each one of them personally."

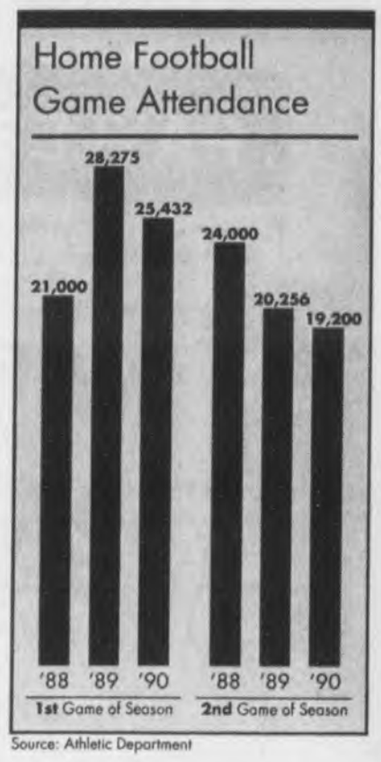
That having been said, Snyder dealt with the problem of those who weren't in attendance.

"But I am tremendously concerned about the empty seats," he said. "And, you know, it's something we have strived for, and there are a lot of people — not just myself — a lot of people around this University and in this program who have worked extremely hard to try to emphasize that we need to put people in the stands in order to support this program.

"Initially, we said that 'our kids will play hard. If you come and support this football team, these kids will play hard.' And our kids will play hard. The more people that sit in the stands and cheer for them, the harder they'll play. I believe that. I honestly believe it."

But, as Snyder noted next, the lack of people in the stands is a dollars-and-cents problem for the program and the athletic department.

"We also need money, and money doesn't just come from some guy shelling out x-number of dollars to donate to the athletic program," said Snyder, who saw attendance dwindle from 25,432 during game No. 1 to 19,200 last week. "It comes from people sitting in those stands.



"And if we're projected to have x-number of people in order to keep our budget intact, and we have far less than that, that takes money away from not only our football program, but it takes it away from scholarships to athletes.

"It takes away from their training table meals. It takes away from our volleyball team. It takes away from our baseball team. It takes away from any other aspect in our athletic department, bar none."

Attendance at the first two home games in 1989, Snyder's first year as coach, was 28,275 for game No. 1 and 20,256 for game No. 2. Both figures are higher than for comparable games this season, and the Wildcats won their opener in 1990 after failing to do so last season.

In addition, during the 1988 campaign that ended with Coach Stan Parrish's resignation, the first two games had attendance figures at 21,000 and 24,000 respectively. That combined total is greater than the combined total for 1990's first two contests. The 1988 team finished its season 0-11.

The numbers have Snyder upset.

Source: Athletic Department

"It's a real travesty that you could have a Division I-A football program and draw that number of people," he said. "There's a rule in the book. It says in the doggone book that in order to qualify for Division I-A membership in football, that there are a number of different requirements, and one of them is that you have to draw x-number of people to a ballgame.

"You've got to average a certain attendance, and I want to believe that's 19,000. That puts us right on the border line. I'm not pleased with that at all."

But, again, Snyder cautioned against slighting those who were in the stands.

"There are 19,000 people that I'm as grateful to as I could possibly be," he said. "They did come, they did support this football team and this football program. But I don't know where the rest of them are."

David Mayes/File
Second-year coach Bill Snyder has looked on as fewer and fewer fans have dotted the stands during home games in KSU Stadium. Attendance is down from the 1989 season.

Miller is puzzled by the lack of fan support as well.

"It's not something I'm proud of," Miller said about the small number of fans in the stands. "It's something I'm concerned about, but, yet, not so concerned at this point that I think we have a problem.

"But we need to get the word out that it's a collective effort. It can't be one- or two-dimensional. It's got to be multi-dimensional, and we need everybody to be involved, especially the crowd."

Miller praised students for their support.

"Students have really, to the greatest extent, done their job," he said. "I'd still like to see a few thousand more, but students have been great supporters of our program, and we just need to get the rest of Kansas to feel the same way."

Snyder wonders where the outside support is as well.

"It's not hard to find 40,000 people in the state of Kansas, but I'm finding it awful hard to get 40,000 of them to come to Manhattan on Saturday afternoon," Snyder said. And I know the answer, originally, was if you win, they'll come see you play.

"And that's fine, but that doesn't help Kansas State, and it doesn't help this program. As far as alumni are concerned, this place has been going for 93 years (in football). They (the alumni) haven't all died."

Fans need to back team by going to 'Cat games

Dan Wicker
SPORTS REPORTER

I hope what I am about to say is going to convince the students of K-State, the alumni and the residents of Manhattan that Wildcat football will only continue to improve with more involved crowd support.

Many Division I-A schools bring more than 50,000 screaming fans to every home game. Granted, K-State has not produced like many of the championship teams, but they still deserve the strong home support of the students, the alumni and the City of Manhattan.

KSU Stadium will hold 42,000 people, and there is no reason why it should not be packed with Catbackers every Saturday afternoon. There are certainly enough people in the surrounding area to accomplish the task.

In the opening game of the season against Western Illinois, there were 25,432 in attendance. K-State responded with a season-opening victory.

New Mexico State followed on the list of victims, as K-State rolled 52-7. In the process, the players gave the fans the highest scoring victory since 1969.

The only problem was 6,000 of the fans that were present at the Western Illinois victory decided to skip the record-setting New Mexico State win.

And set records the Wildcats did.

Pat Jackson rushed for 156 yards and four touchdowns. It was the most yardage by a back since 1986 and the four touchdowns tied a school record. Kicker Tate Wright tied the school record with seven extra points in one game.

Rogerick Green blocked a punt that Thomas Randolph ran back for a touchdown, the first time a 'Cat had done so since 1978, and the victory was the most lopsided since 1955.

If those facts alone do not convince you that you missed one of the best games in the history of K-State and are missing one of the best seasons in eight years, then maybe I can convince you how much better the 'Cats look compared to last season.

K-State has prospered on the ground by rushing for 417 yards, and on the scoreboard where they have reached 79 points for the season. Last season, neither of these totals were compiled until the eighth game.

The defense has been holding its own by allowing only 13 points, whereas, it allowed 13 points in the first quarter of the first game last season. It has tied its total interceptions for last season with seven in the first two games and forced 12 turnovers, which took seven contests last season.

I am not the only person who is concerned by the support given to the undefeated 'Cats. Coach Bill Snyder had plenty to say, but only if he was also quoted about the strong fans that have been present.

"If there were 19,000 people that were here, then I want them to know that I love them dearly and we can't survive without them," Snyder said. "If there was a way to do it, I would thank each one of them personally.

"But I am tremendously concerned and upset with the empty seats. It is a real travesty when you have a Division I-A football team and can't draw that number of people," he said. "It says in the doggone book that in order to qualify for a Division I-A membership in football that you have to draw x-number of people to the ballgame. You have to average a certain attendance, now I believe that is 19,000."

I would like to point out that K-State football is not one of the largest programs in the country financially. The money lost from empty stands not only decreases the benefits for the football program, but it hurts the entire Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

Athletic Director Steve Miller has also noticed the problem and had his own five cents worth to add.

"We need everybody to be involved — especially the crowd. I think that the students need to understand that the students have tremendous impact on the outcome and the personality of our football team," he said.

There is a possibility that K-State could enter the Big Eight conference schedule with a 4-0 record to face Nebraska. The Wildcats last two non-conference games include a trip Northern Illinois, which was trampled by Nebraska 60-14 on Sept. 8, and a home game against New Mexico, which beat New Mexico State by 17 points.

The New Mexico game on Sept. 29 is the next chance fans have to redeem themselves and fill the stands with purple. The goal can be best summed up by Snyder.

"There are enough people in Manhattan and enough people in Kansas to fill this stadium," he said. "As far as alumni are concerned, this place has been going for 93 years. They haven't all died."

Schottenheimer experiences another heart-breaking loss

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Next time the Florida Lottery reaches $100 million, Marty Schottenheimer may ship a truck load of tickets to John Elway.

"Maybe he'll hit the jackpot and retire from the league," said Schottenheimer, bleary-eyed but clinging to his sense of humor following yet another spirit-withering loss to the Denver quarterback.

The best way to guarantee that Elway holds the winning ticket would probably be for Schottenheimer to underwrite the lottery. No matter what he does or where he goes, no matter whether the game is played in Colorado, Missouri or Ohio, there seems to be no way for Schottenheimer to beat Elway.

It's about to become a part of modern NFL lore.

First came three losses to Elway's Denver Broncos while Schottenheimer was in charge of the Cleveland Browns, including twice in the AFC championship game.

Now in less than 1½ seasons as head coach of the Kansas City Chiefs, Schottenheimer has increased his Elway record to 0-6. Counting his days as an assistant coach, Schottenheimer vs. Denver is 0-10.

"He's quite a player. Quite a player," Schottenheimer said Tuesday, hours after Elway's fourth-down pass led to a last-second field goal and a 24-23 Denver victory in Kansas City's first Monday night appearance in seven years.

It would be one thing if Elway simply beat Schottenheimer's teams. But he dramatically breaks their hearts. Most celebrated is The Drive, the 98-yard march Elway engineered in the AFC title game in 1986 that led to Denver's victory in overtime.

In Kansas City last year, there was a less dramatic but equally effective fourth-quarter march that Elway authored to set up a 26-yard field goal for a 16-13 conquest.

Finally, it looked like the jinx would come to an end in Denver Monday night. The Broncos faced fourth and 10 at their own 17 with 1:14 left. Elway had missed his last 10 passes.

But he found Vance Johnson for a 49-yard gain, setting up David Treadwell's 22-yard field goal and ruining what should have been a good night's sleep for Schottenheimer.

"We were in man-to-man coverage with the free safety in the middle," Schottenheimer said. "We didn't get a technique played right by a guy, and we also didn't get enough pressure in the middle of the pocket, and he stepped up in the pocket."

Understandably, Schottenheimer wearies of talking about Elway.

"The thing about him — and then I'll get off the topic — is the guy can throw 15 completions in a row, then 10 incompletions in a row, then five completions in a row," he said. Reminded that Elway had misfired on 10 straight passes before hitting Johnson on fourth down, Schottenheimer said, "I know he did. I know he did.

"You've got to admire somebody like that," Schottenheimer said. "But he's got a very good supporting cast around him. That's not a one-man football team."

Atlanta gets '96 Games

By The Associated Press

TOKYO — Atlanta, symbol of the South, beat out Athens, symbol of the Olympics, and was awarded the centennial Summer Games in 1996 Tuesday.

In what it considered a choice between sentiment for the past or success for the future, the International Olympic Committee chose Georgia over Greece to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the rebirth of the Games first staged in 776 B.C.

"We got to the point where we had to decide whether in the centennial year you look back or you look forward," said Richard Pound, an IOC vice president from Canada. "I think most people sensed that, when it was all over, it was time to look to the next century."

The IOC said last week that marketing and television fees would earn $1.84 billion for the Olympic movement for the four-year period leading to the 1992 Games in Barcelona, Spain.

Atlanta has a billion-dollar budget and a projected $156 million surplus. Atlanta is looking at $500 million to $600 million in rights fees from U.S. television enticed by the opportunity for live prime-time coverage.

Stadiums for pro and college football, basketball and baseball are already located in Atlanta. A domed stadium is under construction, and plans already call for an 85,000-seat track stadium, a swimming complex and a velodrome among $500 million to $800 million to be spent on construction of Olympic facilities.

The result, after the Games end on Aug. 4, 1996, will be an unprecedented amount of world-class training and competition facilities in a new area of the world.

NL hears expansion proposals

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Four cities made a pitch for baseball expansion teams Tuesday and won't find out until December if they threw a strike.

That's when the National League will pare the 10 cities seeking the new clubs to a "short list" of undecided length.

Miami, Denver, Buffalo, N.Y., and Sacramento, Calif., appeared before the committee on Tuesday, explaining why they should be allowed to purchase teams for $95 million each.

"The entry fee is significant," said J. Morton Davis, head of one Miami group, "but acquiring a major league baseball team is essentially like acquiring a Van Gogh."

Denver's group, headed by John Antonucci of Youngstown, Ohio, was put together in the past month. Colorado Gov. Roy Romer pushed the point that there was no team in the Mountain time zone.

The group is headed by Antonucci, but Romer said most of the part owners would be local, including Adolph Coors Co. and the Rocky Mountain News.

All the groups stuck with the argument that their cities deserved a team, and didn't appear to have much of an idea how the teams would be operated amidst baseball's tumultuous labor conflicts.

Antonucci could not explain if his team would be built through a farm system or sign free agents and said he wasn't aware of baseball's multimillion dollar collusion cases until this week.

Representives recruit Peace Corps volunteers

Peace Corps representatives concluded two days of recruiting students for their program in the K-State Union Tuesday afternoon.

Agribusiness Careers Fair offers advantage

Students, employers given chance to meet

By Angie Schrock
Collegian Reporter

The K-State Union Ballroom was lined with displays, information and representatives of companies interested in meeting students and giving information about their organizations Tuesday.

Forty-five agriculture-related businesses were on campus to talk with students at the 11th annual Agribusiness Careers Fair.

"The agribusiness fair gives prospective graduates ideas of what we are looking for as employers. We also can give them an overview of the things they need to do to make themselves more attractive to us and to other companies as well," said Ken Fleming, corporate employment manager for Excel.

John Riley, assistant director of resident instruction in the College of Agriculture, said the careers fair is a good opportunity for student to become acquainted with companies offering internships and permanent jobs after graduation.

"Students may make an impression on the representative in a short visit, which could lead to an interview later. All of these businesses will be back for regular interviews," Riley said.

"Meeting with the people who will actually conduct the interviews later on gives the student an upper hand over the one who didn't go because the person can associate a face with a name and they will say, 'I remember that kid,'" said Jim Townsend, senior in animal sciences and industry and chairman of the career fair planning committee.

The fair was hosted by the College of Agriculture, the Career Planning and Placement Center and the K-State student chapter of the National Agri-Marketing Association.

"K-State has a very positive reputation for the Agribusiness Careers Fair, and it is considered by many of the companies participating as one of the strongest careers fairs around," Riley said.

Of the 45 businesses participating, 22 have been here for at least five years, Riley said.

"Two things impress the businesses to keep them coming back," Riley said. "First is the quality of young people at K-State, and second is the organization for the fair."

Local bands offering Dopus concert; protest past Opus judging results

By Rebecca Sack
Collegian Reviewer

Two local bands have developed an alternative to the Opus Band Competition sponsored by the Union Program Council.

Called Dopus, the spoof is aimed at protesting past Opus judging procedures, band members said. The idea was developed by the Moving Van Goghs and Roach Factory after neither band placed in the Opus competition last year. Last year's top three finishers were Phraug, Stinger and the Twisters.

"We got three times the crowd response than any of the other bands got," said Roach Factory's Brian McCallum, sophomore in art, of last year's Opus.

Russ Perez, program adviser for Eclectic Entertainment, said 11 bands will be competing in the Opus competition. Neither Roach Factory nor the Moving Van Goghs applied to compete.

"I never even heard from them," Perez said. "It's open to everyone."

The Barnburners and Roach Factory will be the only participants in Dopus, McCallum said.

Lincoln Linder, Roach Factory member and sophomore in architecture, said the Opus competition fails to reward creative local bands.

Although Opus competition posters advertise it as a creative work, Linder said it isn't.

"Last year the two bands that got second and third played all covers," Linder said. "They did not play one original song. And I think the years before that cover bands have won too.

"I mean it's one thing to be professional but if you're not doing anything original, what's the point? Especially when you're advertising it as being a creative competition," he said.

KSDB-FM station manager Joe Montgomery, a judge at last year's competition, said he disagrees.

"It seems to me that (Roach Factory) have their groupies that go to all of their shows," Montgomery said. "There were just as many people that weren't up next to the stage, that didn't seem to be getting into the music as much as the people that already knew their songs."

McCallum said two of the three judges from last year's competition said Roach Factory was the best band that played, but that was little consolation for the band.

"Even if nobody had clapped, I'd still feel the same way," Linder said. "I fail to see what's original about playing a song note for note exactly the way somebody else plays it."

Perez said creativity is a primary factor in choosing bands for the Opus competition. He said this is his first year at K-State, and he is not familiar with past competition characteristics.

"I don't know what's happened in the past competitions, but I've never heard any complaints," he said.

Montgomery said originality was just one of the criteria on which the bands are judged. Other criteria include stage presence, musical delivery, appearance and audience response.

"Phraug had a good combination of everything — they were playing a lot of original music, they were real tight and professional, and they related to the audience," Montgomery said.

Linder said the question of originality isn't the only complaint his band has against the Opus competition as he said he feels it has discriminated against local bands.

"I guess in a way they have to pay out-of-town bands to come play, but they kind of limit themselves. It's kind of obvious who's gonna win every year — whoever comes from out of town to play," Linder said.

Dopus categories mimic Opus categories with such qualifications as: spandex ability, overall cheesiness, musical inability and overall commercial exploitability.

All the members of Roach Factory agreed that Opus is a good competition for local bands that need the exposure. But they say the contest is becoming pretentious and biased toward out-of-town and cover bands and is a different competition than it claims.

The Dopus competition will be 9:30 tonight at Rusty's Outback.

I'd never have believed that one little computer could make such an incredible difference in my academic and working life.

Miriam Stoll
B.A. History, Dartmouth College
M.B.A. Stanford Graduate School of Business

"I became a Macintosh convert in business school.

"At our computer lab I'd always find lines of people waiting to use the Macintosh computers, while other computers just sat there. So I had a choice: wait for a Macintosh, or come back at 6 A.M. to grab one before they'd all be taken.

"After business school, I took a job at a large bank and used my Macintosh for producing everything from spreadsheets to a company newsletter.

"Today I use Macintosh to help me run my own management consulting firm. When I give a presentation, I can see in people's faces that they're really impressed. And that makes me feel great.

"Sometimes I take Friday off, put my Macintosh and skis in the car, and head for the mountains. I ski days and work nights. It's perfect.

"You know, I can't say where I'll be in five, ten, or fifteen years, but I can say that my Macintosh will be there with me."

richest regions on earth," Nderagakura said.

Natural resource maps have been hidden by former powers, Nderagakura said, and it is the responsibility of Africa to fund the prospections of these resources.

Nderagakura identified that African countries have lost the capacity to feed themselves and distinguished two types of dependencies. The first, structural dependency includes economic, military and political structures, Nderagakura said. The second, cultural or psychological dependency includes values, tastes, techniques and borrowed ideas.

Nderagakura said international free trade is controlled by the industrial world and is not free of manipulation.

The PMC also studies trees that adapt to the Central Plains. Fine indicated rows of tall locust trees with circle-shaped leaves. These trees are used for windbreaks, shelterbelts and as sources of firewood.

The PMC is currently working with 50 different species of native grasses, wildflowers and trees.

During the summer, Fine said, the PMC regularly hires five K-State students to hoe the fields manually.

The PMC is also becoming more involved with plant breeding, Fine said.

Frank Barnett, a forage geneticist at K-State, is experimenting with a variety of native grass. He is trying to make eastern grama grass more prolific for seed producers by propogating a unique female plant discovered in northeast Kansas.

"This plant has more seeds, but they are smaller," Barnett said. "We would like to breed into the grass the ability to produce more seeds so more can be harvested and distributed."

Barnett and Fine both said the Land Institute in Salina is studying the potential use of eastern grama grass as a food grain.

Battle continues in fort expansion

Study suspended, cause not dead

By David Frese
Features Editor
and Elvyn Jones
Staff Reporter

Land acquisition by Fort Riley has been set back a few steps, but members of both sides of the issue don't see that as any reason to slow their efforts.

According to an Associated Press report Tuesday, Pentagon officials had placed a moratorium on military land acquisition. Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., said it was doubtful Fort Riley would be adding Kansas land to its boundaries.

In addition to the Pentagon's announcement, Fort Riley was informed Wednesday morning the Analysis and Alternatives Study had been placed on hold indefinitely until the Army determines the future of its force structure.

The AAS was the second step in the acquisition process. The Army approved a Land Use Requirement Study in October 1989, which determined Fort Riley had a training shortfall of 82,531 acres. But Wednesday's announcement caught some expansion supporters unaware.

"I have a lot of questions that are unanswered," said John Summers, spokesman for Kansans for a Strong Fort Riley. "We've been told all along the 1st Division needs more land to train on. My reaction is a little unsettled. I have not talked to our senators or our representatives yet.

"My interest in promoting Fort Riley, and the education of the state as to the importance of it, remains the same," he said.

Walter Robertson, member of the board of directors of Kansans for a Strong Fort Riley, said though the Army's mission may be up in the air, his group's mission remains the same.

"That does not affect us at all," he said. "The statement that the Army needs more land still stands. The commanding general has not retracted his statement that the Army needs more land.

"If the Army deems it necessary that they need more land then we'll support it. If they say they don't need land, then that's good, too. We remain very concerned in getting the word out," said Robertson.

Public affairs officials at Fort Riley also said they will stay the course.

"We still have a training shortfall," said Sgt. Tim Donahue, media relations, non-commissioned officer in charge. "Now we have to step back and look at other steps to take. We will continue to train our forces with the highest possible degree with the current resources available."

Donahue also said land acquisition was just one of the options the Army has to repair its training shortfall.

Farm groups opposed to any land acquisition by Fort Riley are pleased with the moratorium, but plan to remain active in their opposition.

Steve Baccus, from Minneapolis, Kan., and spokesman for Save Rural Kansas, said he was happy the Army is changing the acquisition policy, but fears the moratorium could have a negative effect in the future.

"When the Junction City and Manhattan business communities realized there was organized opposition against any expansion, they started their own grass-roots organization," he said. "The moratorium will allow them more time to organize.

"Also, those opposed to expansion may get a false sense of security and wake up sometime to find expansion is back on the table," Baccus said.

Gubernatorial TV debates planned

Candidates agree on 3 appearances

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Gov. Mike Hayden and his Democratic challenger in the Nov. 6 general election have agreed to a third joint-television appearance.

Both campaigns confirmed Wednesday the two major party contenders for the governorship will appear Nov. 1 on KWCH-TV in Wichita, in addition to appearances Oct. 20 on WDAF-TV in Kansas City and Nov. 4 on WIBW-TV in Topeka.

Hayden also will make two appearances on KPTS-TV, the public television station in Wichita, although Finney will not be there. Hayden will face an empty chair on both Oct. 5 and Nov. 5 on KPTS.

Finney had agreed to appear for an hour-long debate on KWCH, but Hayden made his appearance contingent upon Finney also doing a joint appearance Oct. 10 in Lawrence, sponsored by the Kansas Association of Broadcasters and to be telecast and broadcast statewide.

When Finney formally turned down the Lawrence appearance last Monday, Hayden retracted his demand and the Wichita appearance was reinstated.

The two major party candidates have had just one joint appearance so far. That was Sept. 8 at the State Fair in Hutchinson, which was broadcast statewide.

The three TV appearances now scheduled are all Finney will participate in, Jack Parry, her campaign manager, said Wednesday.

"That's it," Parry said. "She said she'd take four of them, and she took the first four that came in."

Finney has expressed a dislike for hour-long appearances, but Parry said the KWCH format was not a problem because Finney had agreed to it and would abide by that agreement.

Finney has taken the position that the public gets bored by too many so-called debates, while Hayden has urged more joint appearances and accused her of being afraid to discuss her positions on issues in public forums with large audiences.

"We're pleased we've agreed on the Wichita appearance," Frank

Cuts may break farm contracts

By Alan Wilds
Staff Reporter

If reducing government spending means the government must back out of a contract it made with the nation's farmers, U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery disagrees.

The Conservation Reserve Program has been listed as sequesterable by the Office of Management and Budget as part of its planned 34.2 percent cutback of government programs under the Gramm-Rudman Deficit Reduction Law.

Slattery informed the Bush administration that such action would cause a "furious" response from farmers.

CRP allows farmers to contract with the government to take land out of production and plant a cover crop, such as grass, for 10 years. In return, the producer receives payments from the government of $50 to $65 per acre.

The program began in 1985 as part of the Food Security Act and is designed to protect highly erodible land and provide fertile farmland for the future. The originial goal was to conserve 45 million acres nationwide.

"I find it unconscionable that OMB is considering this program as sequesterable," Slattery said in a Sept. 14 news release. "Farmers signed these contracts in good faith and expect the federal government to keep up its end of the agreement."

Roger Claassen, legislative assistant for Slattery, said it is only fair CRP not be sequestered, because farmers are subject to severe penalties if they back out of the contract. These penalties include reduction of government payments or complete repayment, including interest, to the government.

"We are contending contracts are contracts," Claassen said. "Just because the government is one of the parties, it does not give them the right to back out."

If the government backs out and sequesters CRP, it may mean up to a 32 percent cutback in payments for contracted producers, according to the State Soil Conservation Service in Salina.

Paul Fleener, SCS director of public affairs, said if cuts do take place it will hurt the program and many of the 29,972 producers who hold active contracts in Kansas.

Claassen said many farmers rely on these payments to pay back loans and purchase equipment.

"If we get a 32 percent sequester that is 32 percent cut off from a normal payment of 50 bucks," he said.

Fleener travelled to Washington D.C. last week to visit with officials on the issue. He agrees CRP should be considered a contract between the government and the producer. He remains optimistic another solution can be found.

"I believe there is a enough support for resolution to the budget problem," Fleener said. "Until it is 11:59 p.m. on September 1 when fiscal year 1991 begins and the budget cuts go into effect, I will remain optimistic that there will be another solution found."

Fleener used taxes on tobbaco and cigarettes as one possible example of raising revenue.

Roger Lemmons, program specialist for the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, said Kansas has a lot at stake with CRP because it is the third-largest participant in the nation behind North Dakota and Texas.

Lemmons said Kansas receives about $150,000 a year through CRP in rental payments on about 2.8 million acres of land.

Ramifications apparently will be felt in every program sequestered under Gramm-Rudman said an OMB spokesman in Washington D.C.

He said other areas of agriculture that will be affected include federal crop insurance, forest service, and meat/poultry

Crisis has no simple solution

Different viewpoints expressed during first Brown Bag forum

By Paul Noel
Staff Reporter

The Political Reaction to Issues of the Modern Order held its first Brown Bag Discussion Series forum on the crisis in the Middle East Wednesday afternoon in the Union Plaza.

PRIMO was established this summer as a part of the Political Science Club. The order was formed to broaden the base of the club and recruit more non-political science majors. They hope to get more students to participate in discussions about issues that directly affect them, said Jodi Lookhart, PRIMO president and senior in political science and international studies.

Chris Ralph, PRIMO vice president and senior in political science and rhetorical communications, said about 15 people attended the forum. They discussed the history that lead up to the crisis and held a question-and-answer period. He said they did not come to a specific conclusion.

"Everybody had their own opinions and concluded that all sides were acting in their own economic interests," Ralph said.

Rami Ali, graduate student in physics, said the United States has lost much of its credibility with many Arabs because it has not come to the aid of Syria, Egypt or Jordan in the 23 years they have been occupied by Israel.

Iraq feeling trade sanctions

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Although Iraq is beginning to feel the impact of economic sanctions, ordinary people in the capital seem determined to resist outside pressure.

Bread, powdered milk, sugar, macaroni, chicken and rice are in short supply. Other food is available, but prices have skyrocketed since the United Nations imposed the trade sanctions Aug. 6.

The sanctions were ordered to force President Saddam Hussein to withdraw the troops he sent into Kuwait on Aug. 2.

"The West believes we will kneel to their will when they impose sanctions against us. But we have stored for all our needs," said Salwa Bayati, a mother of two who chatted with neighbors over morning coffee last week.

KGB may give secrets to CIA

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union is willing to share intelligence on Iraq with the United States but hasn't made the offer directly because it has been rebuffed in the past, the KGB chief told the Associated Press on Wednesday.

"We haven't exchanged information with the CIA on that issue, but I am convinced that we could really tell each other something valuable, especially about insuring the security of Soviet and American citizens" in the region, KGB chairman Vladimir A. Kryuchkov told the visiting AP board of directors and executives in a wide-ranging interview.

Kryuchkov said his organization had offered to cooperate in the past with the CIA but had always been rebuffed. If the CIA wants help, he said, "You can be sure that our reaction would be positive."

Pope criticizes mass media

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II on Wednesday accused the mass media of being instruments of sin and spreading "models of aberrant behavior."

"The situation in which man lives today is marked by a vast and complex condition of slavery in the moral sphere," the pope said in a speech to 4,000 priests attending a spiritual retreat at the Vatican.

The pope's comments appeared to reflect his growing concern about Western models of consumerism and materialism being taken up by Catholics in the formerly Communist-dominated countries of Eastern Europe.

"The contagious force of bad proposals and examples can avail itself of the channels of persuasion offered by the varied gamut of the means of mass communications," he said.

"In this way, models of aberrant behavior become progressively imposed on public opinion ... A subtle network of psychological conditioning is thus established, which can resemble chains inhibiting the true freedom of choice."

Pan Am to cut 2,500 jobs

NEW YORK (AP) — Troubled Pan Am Corp., will cut 2,500 jobs and some routes, while replacing five large airplanes on trans-Atlantic flights with smaller planes in a bid to emerge as a leaner, stronger airline.

Pan Am hopes to save tens of millions of dollars, but the corporate parent of Pan American World Airways refused to provide a more precise estimate after meeting Wednesday with airline analysts.

Pan Am Chairman Thomas G. Plaskett said Pan Am will attempt to shift more business into Miami and Latin America, its most lucrative route areas.

King Kong to return to K.C.

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A 2-story King Kong kidnapped nearly three months ago from a Kansas City area auto dealership turned up Tuesday here, accompanied by a note asking that he be returned to Kansas City so he can root for the Chiefs.

Employees of KTVT-TV in Fort Worth found the inflatable Kong when they arrived for work early Tuesday. The fully-inflated primate was tied to the base of a microwave tower with its air blower plugged into an outside-electrical outlet, said John DeRoche, director of sales for the television station.

Just how the gorilla got there, and who could have done it has left the station's employees puzzled.

Elderly prey of scam salesmen

WICHITA (AP) — Two men are preying on elderly small-town residents in Sedgwick County by selling worthless lightning rods, authorities said Wednesday.

"There's absolutely no doubt in our mind this is an illegal activity. We're looking for these guys right now," said Richard Schodorf, Sedgwick County District Attorney consumer fraud chief.

Several people have paid $650 to $700 for installations, Schodorf said. Incidents also have been reported in other counties.

The men are using scare tactics, telling people their houses will burn down if they don't protect them," he said.

One victim was a disabled person more than 80 years old who couldn't even leave the inside of the house to inspect the work the men did.

"This is the first time we have seen lightning-rod salesmen in the Wichita area in 13 years," Schodorf said. "We thought it was a con that was dead and buried, but it has struck again."

Lawrence man electrocuted

LAWRENCE (AP) — A man was electrocuted when the equipment he was operating struck a large power line in an accident that cut power to most of Lawrence Wednesday afternoon.

The accident happened at the KPL Gas Service's generating plant north of Lawrence.

The man who was killed worked for a private contractor and was part of a crew taking coal inventory. He apparently was drilling into a coal pile when machinery struck a 150-kilovolt power line, said Tom Hall, a KPL spokesman.

Fireman's death reviewed

WICHITA (AP) — A panel will be set up to review the death of a Wichita firefighter, the Sedgwick County Commission decided Wednesday.

Firefighter Tod Colton died of heat exhaustion Sept. 6 while fighting a grass fire.

The panel will be made up of a fire chief from outside Sedgwick County, a representative of an emergency service from outside the county and a leader from the community with no ties to the government.

The panel is expected to report back in two weeks on whether the Fire Department needs to make any changes in policy, said Hank Blase, the county counselor.

Colton's girlfriend, Marla Alexander, and about a dozen members of the Fire Department marched outside the courthouse, complaining that the department was undermanned and that Colton might not have died if more firefighters were at the scene.

THE RIDE
made possible through the fine arts fee

The department of art will organize a series of trips to art museums throughout the current academic year. The student fine arts fee assessed at registration will subsidize the cost of the travel. Please take advantage of this wonderful opportunity to view exciting exhibits and collections in the region. Keep an eye on The Collegian for activities associated with THE RIDE.

The first trip will be to see an outstanding collection of drawings at the Salina Art Center, Salina, Kansas and to visit Lucas, Kansas to see the Garden of Eden (listed on the National registry of Historic Places). The collection of drawings at the Salina Art Center is entitled Training The Hand and The Eye: American Drawings from the Cooper-Hewett Museum. The exhibit includes exploratory drawings, and works in progress by 34 American artists including Winslow Homer, Frederic Church, Thomas Moran, and William Chase. The Garden of Eden was created by S.L. Dinsmoor, an eccentric Kansan. He built a home of native limestone and in the yard surrounding the house he created a concrete wonder that defies description. The first Ride will leave the K-State Union at 8:15 a.m. on Friday, October 5, 1990. Reservations are required.

Contact the Department of Art 532-6605, or stop by room 105 in the Art Building for information or to reserve your seat. Make your reservations by the end of the day on Monday, October 1st.

The cost of the trip will be eight dollars per person, includes bus transportation and entry fees.

Diverse music groups to compete for coveted Opus championship

Interest increasing in annual contest

By Tammy Rose
Collegian Reporter

Seven bands will be tuning up their guitars for the fourth annual Opus Band Competition tonight.

The event will be between the K-State Union and Seaton Hall from 5 to 11 p.m. and is sponsored by the Union Program Council's Eclectic Entertainment Committee. If rain should occur, it will be held in the Union Grand Ballroom.

The bands will compete for cash prizes ranging from $100 to $300.

Five of the bands are from the Manhattan area: the Barnburners, Circus Maximus, C.R.E.E.P., Dr. Zeus and Truck Stop Love. A band from Kansas City, Mo., Frank's Dream, and a band from Wichita, The Grunge, will also be performing.

Russ Perez, UPC adviser, said 12 bands sent in applications consisting of two songs with at least one being an original. A committee of UPC Eclectic members was set up to judge the applicants on originality and vocal and instrumental quality to narrow the field down to seven.

The judges for the competition will be Jeff Shibley, publisher of The Note, Jim Allan, advertising and marketing representative for KDVV-FM, and KSDB-FM staff member Nathan Chaffin, junior in chemistry. Judging will be based on originality, vocal and instrumental quality and stage presence, Perez said.

The bands will feature diverse music, including rock, alternative and blues.

"It's relaxing to listen to the different bands and just hang out with your friends," Raelyn Clark, Eclectic chairperson, said.

Perez said the competition has been successful over the past four years and has been beneficial to some of the bands.

"The UPC hired three of the bands that competed last year to perform for University functions, and anything with a four-year stamina seems successful to me," Perez said.

Clark said more bands applied this year than last, so the interest seems to be growing.

Each band that applies pays a $35 non-refundable fee which goes to paying for promotion, sound equipment and the cash prizes.

"We don't make any money off of Opus, it all goes to putting everything together. We put it on for the students, not to make money. It's a lot of work but a lot of fun too," Clark said.

Pat Walleck, guitarist for the Barnburners, said it would be great to win the money but he just enjoys playing music.

"The Opus competition is the best possible way for people that listen to heavy metal and alternative music to tune their ears down to the blues. It gives people on campus a chance to hear something other than the regular radio music," Walleck said.

Panel discusses African hunger

Government policies help to prevent full use of resources

By The Collegian Staff

Africa has the resources to feed itself. However, many changes must take place, especially in government policy, before it can be achieved, said members of a panel Wednesday night.

The five-member panel of speakers discussed "Can Africa Feed Itself?" as part of African Awareness Month in the K-State Union.

All members of the panel are originally from Africa.

"Government policy has a bigger affect on agricultural production than the water (shortage) factor," said Neba Tangie, graduate student in agricultural engineering. "I would say there is a misapplication of resources."

Tangie said transportation is one of the key problems.

"If the road infrastructure problem did not exist, the lack of water would not be a factor," Tangie said. "To travel a distance from here to Kansas City would take two days if you're lucky. Instead of linking the villages with roads, they build airports."

Tangie said parts of northern Africa receive 300 inches of rain per year. He suggested that the rich northern lands begin trading with the arid portions that rely on arts such as basket-weaving.

George McCauley, graduate student in entomology, cited statistics from the Food and Agricultural Organization, on the amount of land suitable for cultivation.

"Five percent of Africa is arable land, while North America has 12 percent arable land," McCauley said.

He said less than 1 percent of Africa has permanent crops such as coffee and rubber. North America, too, has less than 1 percent.

"I have no doubt that, comparatively speaking, Africa can feed itself," McCauley said.

Philomina Gwanfogbe, graduate student in food and nutrition, said women are responsible for 80 percent of the crop production in Africa and women have always worked in the fields.

However, African women do not have access to the proper training needed, she said. Gwanfogbe said this is a must if Africa is to become self-sufficient.

Finding alternative forms of livestock is also necessary, said Boweditswe Masilo, graduate student in animal science.

"We would not drink the milk of camels because we thought they were useless animals," Masilo said. "I have not seen a study done on the possibilities of using donkeys and

Cantwell alleges officers misused

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Kansas Bureau of Investigation should return to its original task of fighting crime, the Democratic candidate for attorney general said Wednesday.

"The KBI now is performing administrative work such as routine background checks for the governor's office, lottery and racing commissions," said Bert Cantwell, who is trying to unseat Republican Attorney General Bob Stephan.

He said such work should not be done by highly trained law enforcement officers, who should be investigating crime. The attorney general's office supervises the KBI.

"My crime resistance program is aimed at taking politics out of KBI staffing," Cantwell said at a Statehouse news conference.

Cantwell, a Kansas City, Kan., attorney, is a former superintendent of the Kansas Highway Patrol and served as U.S. marshal for Kansas. He also served on the state Racing Commission for nearly three years.

He said Stephan's 1986 campaign manager, John Pinegar, formerly deputy KBI director, was "loaned" to Gov. Mike Hayden to be his campaign manager. Pinegar is now Gov. Mike Hayden's campaign manager.

"He either wasn't essential to the KBI law enforcement mission or else politics is more important than law enforcement to the attorney general," Cantwell said.

Pinegar responded: "That's just political rhetoric."

Poland's leader will step down for democracy

Jaruzelski says his resignation will aid change

By The Associated Press

WARSAW, Poland — President Wojciech Jaruzelski, the only Communist leader to survive politically after democratic revolutions swept the East bloc, told Parliament on Wednesday he will resign early to help Poland complete its transition to democracy.

Jaruzelski's announcement came amid increased calls for his resignation to make way for a popularly-chosen head of state.

Solidarity chairman Lech Walesa has already declared his candidacy for president, and Prime Minister Tadeusz Mazowiecki, Walesa's former adviser and ally, also is considering running.

As Communist Party leader in 1981, Jaruzelski imposed martial law, but peacefully transferred power to a Solidarity-led government eight years later. He was named president by parliament in July 1989 for a six-year term.

Jaruzelski sent a letter Wednesday to the Sejm, or lower house of parliament, asking it to name a date for ending his term.

Jaruzelski announced his planned resignation after a six-hour meeting at which the nation's feuding political leaders agreed in principle to hold early elections for both the presidency and parliament. No date was set for what would be post-Communist Poland's first fully-democratic elections for president and parliament.

The current parliament was elected in June 1989, but 65 percent of the seats were guaranteed to the now-dissolved Communists and their allies.

The president wants parliament "to enable him to transfer the office he holds to a president chosen in a general election," a Jaruzelski spokesman said in a statement.

Jaruzelski is "concerned about preventing unnecessary social emotions and willing to develop democracy," according to the statement, carried by the official PAP news agency.

Elections are expected as early as this fall and no later than spring.

Participants in a meeting Tuesday suggested that Jaruzelski should resign no later than Dec. 13, the ninth anniversary of the day he declared martial law to crush the Solidarity movement, according to sources contacted by the Gazeta Wyborcza newspaper.

Jaruzelski's election as president in 1989 came about with some support from Solidarity parliament members. It was meant to guarantee good relations with the Soviet Union in the first months of Poland's democratic reforms.

But the arrangement was overtaken by events. After Mazowiecki's Solidarity-led government took power in September, revolutions swept through the East bloc, toppling neighboring Communist leaders. The Polish party itself dissolved in January.

On Monday, police draggged away two dozen demonstrators of the Confederation for Independent Poland who attempted to block the Belweder Palace, where Jaruzelski has his office.

The protesters chanted "Jaruzelski must go!" and affixed posters with the caption "Already too long" to the palace's iron gates. They derided the police as "Soviet servants." Some protesters were detained briefly.

A petition demanding the president's resignation was launched recently by the Center Alliance, a political group formed to back Walesa for president.

The 67-year-old Jaruzelski, who often appears remote behind his dark glasses, remains a complex figure in Poland's political life. Responsible for among the most traumatic events in modern Polish history — Walesa and Mazowiecki were among thousands imprisoned by the military government — he also is the only Communist leader in the East bloc to retain office after democratic governments took over.

Firing of General Dugan is government powerplay

Defense Secretary Dick Cheney's decision Monday to fire Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. Mike Dugan seems more like a powerplay than an effort to ensure operational security in the Persian Gulf.

Cheney said he fired Dugan because of comments the general made about potential bombing targets in Iraq, including "decapitation" strikes against President Saddam Hussein.

Dugan's statements may have been inappropriate, but under the circumstances they were not surprising. He told reporters that after receiving a list of conventional targets like air defense installations, air bases, military bases, power stations, roads, railroads and petroleum production facilities, he ordered a "better list" be prepared.

The better list of targets included Hussein, his family and Hussein's mistress.

After a long war with Iran, it seems reasonable to assume that the Iraqis have in place air defenses around their conventional targets, and given Hussein's paranoia, it also seems reasonable that there are air defenses around Hussein's home and that of his mistress.

If the potential threat to Hussein comes as a surprise to the Iraqis, even after Bush's broad hints that the United States wouldn't mind an Iraqi coup, no one believed the Air Force was planning to send B-52s to drop 20 tons of bombs each on vast uninhabited stretches of the Iraqi desert.

More likely the real reason for Dugan's firing is the mistaken lesson governments around the world drew from the Vietnam War. Since Vietnam, no Western country has sent the media into the combat to cover the military.

During Vietnam, and since its conclusion, politicians have blamed the dissent which ended the war on the pictures that were beamed back from the battle zones. More likely, the pictures of American politicians lying about the war's progress turned people against it.

Grenada, the Falklands and Panama all took place out of sight, and the leaders hoped, out of mind of the world's civilians. That these short wars were waged for a principle called democracy, which loosely means that the civilians rule, makes the situation more ironic.

By firing Dugan, Cheney and President Bush have sent a clear signal to all those who think that the rulers in a democracy have a right to know what their government is doing, especially when that government may be preparing to send thousands into battle.

The message is: Keep your mouths shut so we can keep control in our hands, lest the people find out what's really going on.

Religion obstructs choices

"We have to believe in free will. We've got no choice." Isaac B. Singer (1904-), Polish-born U.S. writer.

Brad Seabourn

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

In the very near future, this country will be drawn into a discussion concerning an issue of choice. The controversy will make the disappearance of the foreskin of Jesus seem trifling. If you do not understand what I mean by that statement ... it's a long story (see Collegian, April 12).

The issue I am referring to is abortion.

A recent letter to the editor of the Collegian regarding abortion has given me cause to consider this polemical topic. This letter was exemplary of the sanctimonious brutes who utter such hypocracy. In truth, they have very little regard for quality of human life.

The same pious asses who profess disdain for human suffering are largely responsible for the incalculable torment and death of millions (mostly children) around the world, who are plagued by poverty, starvation and disease due to over-population. It is an over-population "imposed" on indigent and poorly educated masses by the refusal of so-called religious "leaders" worldwide to endorse sex education or birth control methods for the singular purpose of enlarging the coffers of the Church. Yes, there is sanctity (and profit) in numbers.

As if that isn't disgusting enough, these cretins make raucous ceremony of passing the plate to provide food to starving Central Americans or Africans. Yet, if they were truly concerned, the marketing of "Papal Prophylactics" or "Catholic Condoms" could make a serious dent in the world population problem.

The anti-abortion political movement in this country defends its position by relying heavily on the Bible. So what does the "good" book have to say?

You will find, among the many vacuous platitudes, the Bible says essentially nothing about abortion. But, before I go any further, I should define what I mean by abortion.

I define abortion as, "The voluntary decision of a woman to cause a miscarriage of her fetus by any means directly, or indirectly, at her disposal."

With this definition in mind, we find in this "timeless best-seller" that no woman in the Bible is ever said to have borne guilt or to have been punished for causing a miscarriage or for aiding in one.

Since we all know how the Judeo-Christian god loves to ascribe guilt, doesn't this strike you as strange? Why, it quackles the mind to think that every female among the ancient Hebrews, during a period of roughly 1,000 years, carried every fetus to term willingly. Never a rape or incestuous relationship? No hanky-panky with the neighbor's spouse? We are talking about human beings here, aren't we?

Take a look at Deuteronomy 25:11-12. Any wacko god that demands a woman to lose her hand because she attempts to aid her husband during a fight by grabbing the gonads of his enemy, has got to have something to say (in a high voice) about a human problem wrought with such grave moralistic ramifications as abortion.

One reference to abortion occurs in Exodus 21:22-25. "If men strive, and hurt a woman with child, so that her fruit depart from her, yet no mischief (meaning death) follow: he shall be surely punished. ... And if any mischief follow, then thou shalt give life for life, eye for eye. ... " The only penalty here is for doing harm to the mother ... not the fetus. So sayeth the Bible.

It wasn't until 1869 that Pope Pius IX declared abortion a grave moral offense punishable by excommunication. Since Pius IX had already fabricated the doctrine of papal infallibility, his edict on abortion was effective.

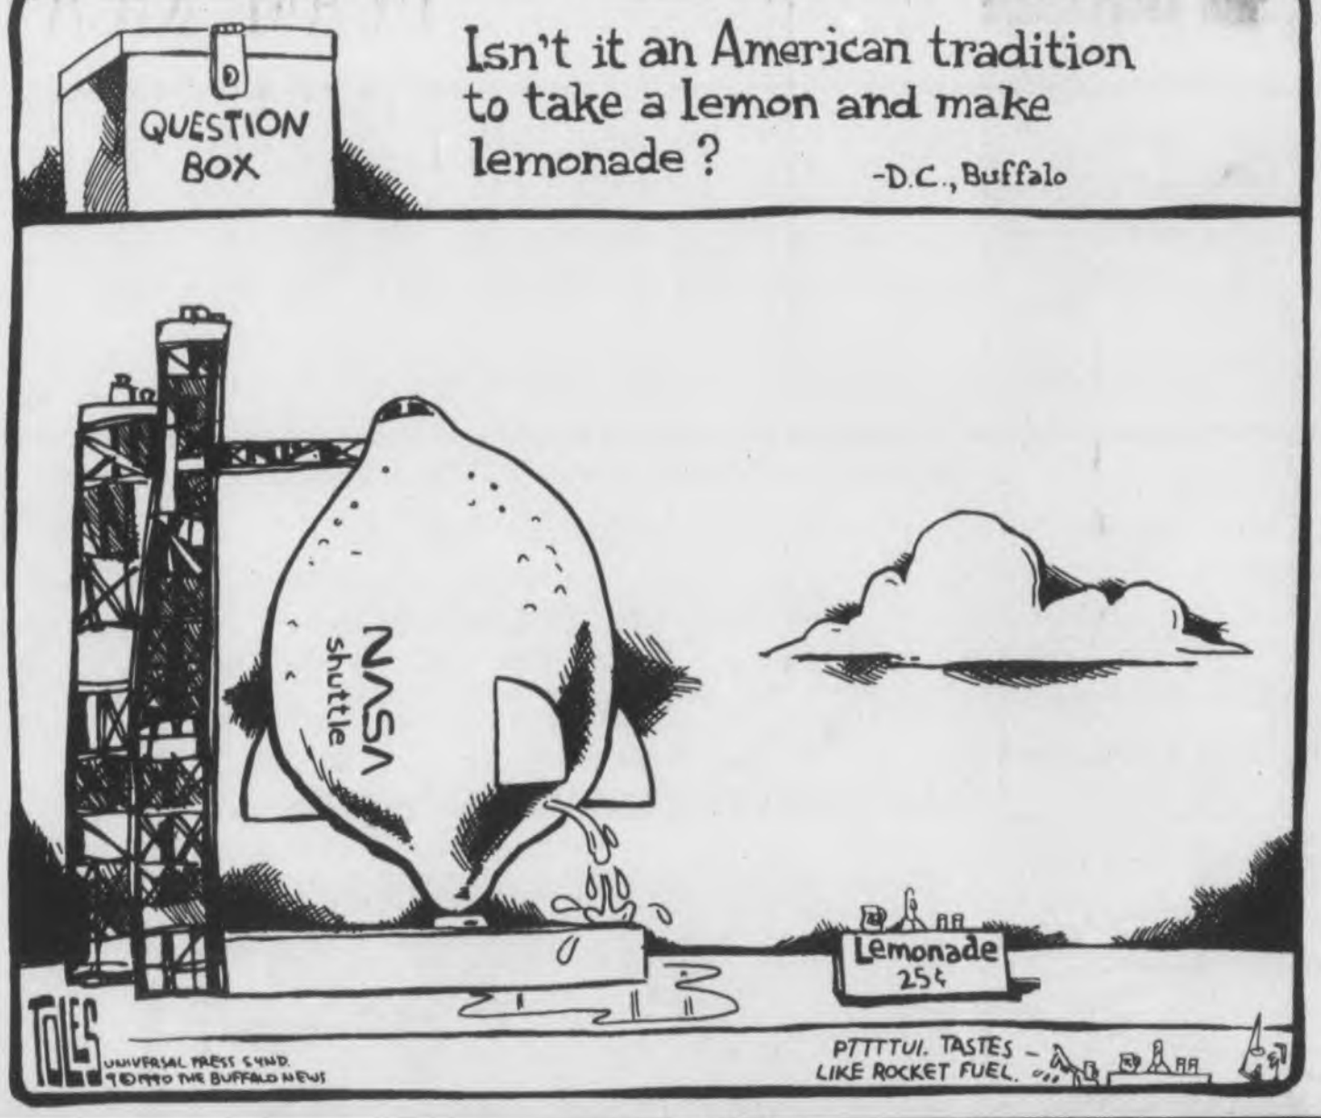
And it was Pius IX who also decreed in 1854 that Mary was free from original sin "in the first instant of her conception." This led to the absurd idea that a soul was formed at the moment of conception, and the equally absurd corollary that abortion destroys an "already formed soul."

The Judeo-Christian belief that abortion is murder is definately founded in human contrivance. Hardly surprising.

But here is the good part.

The Jews, like any society, were plagued by infidelity, as well as the illegitimate offspring such activity sometimes produces, and Numbers 5:11-31 provides a test for marital fidelity of wives (notice there is no such test for men). In this test, the wife must drink what is called "the bitter water."

The bitter water was what you might call a "sacred swill." It consisted of "holy water" (maybe a naturally-occurring abortifacient?) and sweepings from the tabernacle floor. Now, I don't know about you, but my imagination runs rampant and simply pegs the ol' disgustometer as to what may have been on the floor of a tabernacle in a community of goat-herders.



The "swill" was to be harmless to the innocent, faithful wife. However, for the guilty, faithless wife, the Bible says the bitter water "shall cause pain, her womb shall be easily fertilized, but she shall have miscarriages, so that the woman shall become an execration among her people." If we consider the number of times throughout Hebrew history in which the guilty wife was, in fact, pregnant when she drank the swill, we find an indication that the Judeo-Christian god condones ... no, encourages abortion.

But this is not what anti-abortionists (a.k.a. Jews and Christians) want to hear. In a last effort to rationalize their nonsensical beliefs they spew forth the commandment (Exodus 20:13), "Thou shall not kill." Thou shall not kill what? Animals? No, read Deuteronomy 14:6. Not kill one's own people? No, read Deuteronomy 22:22. Not kill the heathen? No, read Numbers 25:17. What Exodus 20:13 really means is, "Thou shall not kill thy fellow Hebrew without good reason."

This does not, however, apply to the human fetus, for no fetus breathes "the breath of life." Genesis 2:7 says, "And the Lord God formed man ... and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul." It is clear from this that the presence of a material body does not establish personhood. Neither does the presence of a fetus in a woman's body establish personhood.

When we discuss abortion versus religious beliefs we are not talking about murder, as the religious would have us believe. We are talking about a woman's right to choose, versus power ... the power to control people's minds and bodies.

And that, my friend, is what religion is all about.

Band misrepresented

Editor,

I am writing to clear our band's, the Barnburners, name in connection with Wednesday's Dopus performance and tonight's Opus competition.

The Barnburners do not hold the same views about the Opus competition as Roach Factory at all. I didn't know what last night's Dopus performance was about when I committed our band to play in it. We played last night only to warm up for tonight's Opus competition, not in any protest to Opus. I want to make this very clear to people. I feel we were totally misrepresented.

Keep selling tickets

Editor,

I went to the KSU-NMSU game Saturday. My friend and I were late; arriving at the stadium at the end of the first half. We were told that we would have to wait until the end of the third quarter to see the game. I then offered to pay the full admission price for the two of us. The attendant said that ticket sales had ceased at the conclusion of the first half.

I have a question for Athletic Director Steve Miller. Why is it that if I am late to a game I am unable to buy a ticket? I am puzzled why you are concerned about paid attendance at football games while my friend and I stand at the gate with money in hand. I know that there were seats available. Football games are unlike a McCain event where my admission during an event would disrupt the viewing pleasure of the other fans.

Might I suggest that you keep at least one ticket window open for those fans (ones who are late) who do wish to support the team by purchasing tickets.

Great start on the season 'Cats. Sorry that I was unable to see the game.

Wins not bought

Editor,

On Monday, the Collegian editorial board accused greeks of "buying" friendship. On Wednesday, the same board accused the K-State athletic department of "buying" wins.

Greeks don't buy friends. They make them, just like any other student. Did the editorial board members buy friends when they paid for tuition at K-State? After all, most K-State students have the similar interest of wanting to go to K-State.

In reference to the athletic department — has it occurred to them the K-State football team is winning this year not because they're buying wins, but because, well, maybe they are simply a good team? With the hard work and dedication of the football staff and players and support from students and faculty (including the Collegian editorial board) it's possible the KSU football season will be a winning one.

Well excuse me now. I'm going to call up some of my friends (both bought and free ones) and go buy a ticket for the next home football game.

Living Color wastes lyrics for sound

By Stacy Lentz
Collegian Reviewer

Living Colour is back — and rocking harder and louder than ever on its latest album, "Time's Up."

Unfortunately, this album overshadows its introspective lyrics with head-banging metal.

On its second album, Living Colour has quickened the tempo and gone to an even harsher brand of rock 'n' roll. "Time's Up" combines meaningful lyrics — lyrics that were meant to be understood — with thrashing music that makes this virtually impossible. The result is an uneven album where thoughtful songwriting is obscured by a heavy-handed accompaniment.

"Time's Up" is a contradiction. For the most part, the songwriting is intelligent. In some cases, however, the lyrics consist of repeating the song title until you give up and skip to the next number.

For example, in the song "Elvis is Dead," the chorus consists of nothing but the title repeated eight times.

COLLEGIAN Report Card
"TIME'S UP"
D+

On the other hand, the album has thoughtful lyrics that discuss the environment and racism. The title track, a collaborative effort by all the members in the band, says, "How you gonna stop the clock when the well runs dry/all the rivers have died/the world is just slippin' away."

Other songs on the album deal with teen-age pregnancy, religion and fighting the system. Guitarist-vocalist Vernon Reid definitely can write lyrics about serious issues, transcending ordinary rock themes to provoke introspection.

While "Time's Up" may be lyrically exceptional, its words are lost in the mix. Living Colour covers up its writing skills with music that sounds like Anthrax, a band acknowledged on the album cover.

"Time's Up" is completely different from the band's first album, "Vivid," which was more hard rock than heavy metal.

Musically, the group shows it can play heavy metal with the best. The song "Type" is also already receiving heavy airplay across the country.

The album has some impressive guest musicians as well. Little Richard and Mick Jagger provide vocals on "Elvis is Dead."

Living Colour has the right idea on "Time's Up," but misses the mark. It wastes great lyrics by throwing them in with a head-banging musical backdrop that does injustice to its songwriting abilities.

Pair of trendsetters to be inducted

Switzer helps racial barriers to be lifted

K-State Athletic Hall of Fame

Veryl Switzer

By Russ Ewy
Sports Reporter

Former K-State football all-American Veryl Switzer summed up his feelings about being one of eight charter inductees to the K-State Athletic Hall of Fame in two words — ecstatic and humble.

"(I am) ecstatic that I have been recognized. (I am) humble that they thought enough of me to give me that recognition as an athlete — to be among the type of inductees that I'll be going in with," Switzer said.

"I have a high regard for those folks. I know practically all of them with the exception of one, (Elden Auker), to the point where I admire them and put them in a special group. To be measured at the level they're measured, I feel great."

During his years at K-State, as a football player and three-time track-and-field letterwinner, Switzer led the 'Cats out of the conference-football cellar in the Big Seven in 1952 to second place in 1953. He was also named to the Big Eight Football Hall of Fame in 1978.

Now an associate athletic director and the assistant vice president for special services at K-State, Switzer played in the 'Cats backfield from 1951-53, where he was a three-time all-conference halfback.

In 1951, he was named to Associated Press' all-America defensive team, as well as receiving second-team all-America honors as halfback in 1953.

"I had success as an athlete at K-State, but there's one thing that I cannot overlook," Switzer said. "The type of support that I had, in terms of my coach, Bill Meek — I give him much credit for my success — (and) the kind of support I received from (my teammates) was significant in my being successful. They made me feel like their equal, and they made me feel important, therefore I felt obligated to achieve my (maximum).

"I think all these factors have contributed to my success, and I've been a humble person in recognizing that," he said. "You have to acknowledge the good things that you experience, and then the knocks and bumps and hard roads are insignificant."

Switzer attributes much of his success at K-State to his high school football team. Starring on Bogue High's six-man team, the Nicodemus native gained confidence by having to play on both sides of the ball.

"In terms of confidence builders, (playing six-man football) contributed to my success at K-State because I was accustomed to scoring a lot as an offensive player," Switzer said. "I was a good tackler because I tackled in wide-open play in six-man. Generally, I was put in a situation where I was the last man between the runner and the goal line, so I had to be deadly in my tackling.

"Before coming to K-State, I had a lot of confidence in myself, of being able to be successful at K-State, to the extent that as seniors in high school we asked our coach to challenge K-State to play their best six football players," Switzer said. "That changed, however, when I arrived on campus and saw the size of athletes I had to compete with to make the team."

After graduating in 1954, Switzer continued in football, playing in the East-West Shrine game and the College All-Star game before going on to play with the Green Bay Packers.

Haylett leads revolution in track and field

K-State Athletic Hall of Fame

Ward Haylett

By Todd Fertig
Sports Reporter

For a track coach who gained acclaim more than 40 years ago, there is still plenty to celebrate.

Today is the 95th birthday of Ward Haylett, who will be enshrined in the K-State Athletic Hall of Fame on Oct. 5.

A member of the Track and Field Hall of Fame, Haylett earned national acclaim coaching the K-State team from 1929 to 1963, as well as helping direct several Olympic and Pan American Games teams.

Haylett lives at the College Hill Nursing Home in Manhattan, and his health will allow him to attend only parts of the hall of fame festivities. Joining Haylett will be his two children, Ward Jr. and Joan Billings, both of Kansas City.

"It all may be just a little bit too much for him," said Haylett Jr., a Kansas City architect and K-State graduate who was a member of Haylett's track team in 1946-47. "Pop really is flattered by the whole thing. To be recognized for something really is special at any stage of your life, but to be his age and be in the first class of inductees, it's really been a kick for him.

"We're sorry he won't be there for all of it, but he's just a once strong, proud man whose body just won't do what it needs to do anymore."

Such was not always the case. Haylett Jr. said that, had his father not served in World War I, he may have become one of the nation's finest all-around athletes.

"He just knew more about athletic events than anyone else back then, and he was fully credible in everything he talked about," Haylett Jr. said. "For a long time after Pop had finished competing, he still could out-run, or out-throw or out-jump anyone he coached."

Haylett coached numerous All-Americans and Olympians in a variety of events. He once coached Bob Mathias, 1948 and 1952 world champion in the decathalon, and Cornelius Warmerdam, the first man ever to pole vault 15 feet.

At K-State he helped Thane Baker develop into a four-time Olympic medalist. Haylett Jr. called his father an astute judge of athletic talent, but said while his father worked with some of the best, he still took time to help anyone.

"He was very sincere in trying to help people become the best they could, in track or whatever," Haylett Jr. said. "Pop always said a kid who put forth a devoted effort would always beat somebody who had more potential but didn't work as hard."

For all his notable accomplishments in track and field, one of Haylett's most treasured moments came on the gridiron. Haylett was pressed into the head football coaching duties during World War II. Though football was not within his father's area of expertise, Haylett Jr. said coaching K-State to a 19-0 win over Nebraska in 1942 was one of his father's favorite memories.

To Haylett, however, it wasn't victories or records or medals that made hard work worthwhile, his son said.

"The thing he got the most out of was that after spending so much time with a kid, pushing them and encouraging them and helping them, then when they finally did something, that really did it for Pop," Haylett Jr. said. "It made him happier than if he'd done it himself."

'Cat alum Grogan off to hot start

By The Associated Press

FOXBORO, Mass. — At age 37, New England's Steve Grogan had to learn a new offense. He's done it so well so quickly that he's the AFC's second-rated passer after two games.

His trademark in his first 15 NFL seasons was the long pass. The new attack is based on a quicker release and shorter throws.

"Temptation for me to go deep?" Grogan said with a laugh. "Once in a while, I've got to keep reminding myself to be patient."

The NFL's oldest quarterback has completed 63.5 percent of his passes for three touchdowns and one interception. His quarterback rating is 98.6.

Last season, he started six games only after Tony Eason and Doug Flutie failed as starters. He completed 51 percent of his passes and threw nine touchdowns and 14 interceptions. His rating was 60.8, one of the NFL's lowest.

But in training camp, he edged Marc Wilson for the starting job which he had gained and lost several times in his long career since being drafted by the Patriots in the fifth round in 1975.

Could he have expected, when camp began, to be his conference's second-rated passer?

"I could have, but I didn't," he said. "With the new offense and trying to get used to new things, I would never have figured that my efficiency would be as good as it's been."

Grogan has been sharp in both games, a loss to Miami and a win at Indianapolis. And he and his teammates still aren't completely comfortable with the system of new offensive coordinator Jimmy Raye.

"I think we read more complication into it than was really there just because it was something we'd never done before," Grogan said, "but as you get involved in it and start to learn what the principles of the whole thing are, it's really not that complicated.

"As we're finding that out and becoming relaxed about what we're doing, we're getting better with it."

Coach Rod Rust said he never doubted that both Grogan and Wilson would pick up the new offense quickly.

"They're both smart and they both have discipline about the way they go about their business," Rust said. "It never occurred to me that they wouldn't learn."

In the new offense, receivers are given more leeway to adjust their routes after they begin running them. Grogan has to get rid of the ball quicker, making him less susceptible to a strong pass rush.

"It's taken the burden off me to have to force the ball downfield," he said. "I'm taking the shorter stuff and letting the young guys make the plays.

"My body doesn't work as well (as when he was younger), but my mind still works well enough."

Rugby club undefeated

The undefeated KSU men's rugby club travels to Wichita Saturday to face the Wichita club.

The K-State club won the Girdlestone Tourney held last weekend in Lawton, Okla., by defeating Oklahoma in the championship, 24-4.

The women's club will face two clubs Saturday in a home match at Gorman Park.

Water-ski team takes 2nd

The K-State water-ski team finished second to a University of Kansas team in competition this past weekend. But the team outdistanced Iowa State and Wichita State.

In women's slalom competition, K-State's Lori Eckerberg finished first with 26 buoys. In the women's trick competition, Chris Tucker finished first with 340 points. Devan Henton was third with 220 points.

In the women's jump, Eckerberg was first with a jump of 49 feet, while Tucker's jump of 48 feet was good for second.

In the men's slalom, James Hailey of K-State took first with 27¼ buoys. In the men's trick competition, James Hailey of K-State was first with 890 points.

In the men's jump, Casey Koehler finished first with an effort of 96 feet.

Twins beat Royals, 1-0

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Shane Mack's two-out single in the 11th inning knocked in Dan Gladden from third base, giving the Minnesota Twins a 1-0 victory over the Kansas City Royals on Wednesday night.

Gladden led off the 11th with an infield single off Jeff Montgomery (6-4). After Nelson Liriano popped out on a bunt attempt, Kirby Puckett singled to right, moving Gladden to third.

After Kent Hrbek was intentionally walked, Gary Gaetti popped out to right, but Mack hit Montgomery's first pitch up the middle to end to game.

Steinbrenner adjusts to changes in life

By The Associated Press

TAMPA, Fla. — In the first month of the rest of his life without baseball bossdom, a wounded George Steinbrenner misses the clubhouse and the "player talk" and is bitter about the commissioner who took it all away from him.

"My heart was not cut out by this, no way," Steinbrenner said in an interview with the Associated Press last week in Tampa and aboard his private jet to New York. "No man, and certainly not Fay Vincent, is ever going to be able to do that."

Nevertheless, Steinbrenner still bristles over Vincent's announcement that the New York Yankees owner had accepted a lifetime ban from day-to-day management of the team. He says he did nothing to justify even a suspension and volunteered to step aside only because Vincent was going to suspend him for two years regardless.

"There was no ban, no suspension, no probation," Steinbrenner insists. And while he accepts the consequences, he adds, "I'm not happy with the way the agreement is turning out."

However it came about, the bottom line is that Friday marks one month since Steinbrenner resigned as managing partner of the Yankees after baseball's investigation into his association with a Bronx gambler.

The 60-year-old Steinbrenner, who usually plays his personal feelings close to the vest, said he has been hurt by the whole experience and is embarrassed, particularly when people approach him and forlornly ask how he's holding up.

"I was not kicked out of baseball," Steinbrenner states emphatically. He notes that his family still owns controlling interest in the team and expects 21-year-old son Hal, a senior at Williams College, to follow in his father's footsteps and run the club.

"I stepped down from the day-to-day operation of the team under an agreement with the baseball commissioner," Steinbrenner said.

Golfer assumes leadership role, responsiblity

By Scott Paske
Sports Reporter

Brett Vuillemin's drive on the ninth hole found an unkind resting place at the base of a tree at Manhattan Country Club.

The scenario is familiar to the average golfer. For most, the next shot would be an a challenge, and the result on the scorecard would probably highlight a nasty fate.

But Vuillemin, taking advantage of a free drop because of a nearby cartpath, launched a 9-iron from 150 yards to the front of the par-4 hole. Two putts later, he moved to the next tee box of his practice round without a blemish to the front-nine total.

"I try to think over every shot like I'm in a tournament," said Vuillemin, junior. "That way, when I get to a tournament, I won't be as nervous over the same type of shot."

Vuillemin's philosophy is part of the leadership role given to him by teammates and Wildcat golf coach Russ Bunker. Vuillemin, the 'Cats' No. 2 player last season behind departed senior Jeff Sedorcek, provides the most returning experience for K-State in the 1990 season.

"He's a leader and a hard worker," Bunker said. "I know the kids look up to him, and respect him as both an individual and a player."

A pair of near-misses last spring served as motivating tools for Vuillemin. The Shawnee Mission East graduate finished one stroke from qualifying for the all-Big Eight Conference team, and just missed an at-large berth to NCAA Regional competition in Columbus, Ohio.

"The Big Eight was a tournament that I set for myself to decide if I was really going to give it a go to improve over the summer, and I did well," said Vuillemin, who finished ninth at Oak Tree Golf Club in Edmond, Okla. "I didn't know how close I was at the time to all-Big Eight because I was disappointed in my last round, so if it would have happened, it would have been what I least expected."

Vuillemin and teammate Richard Laing — K-State's first qualifier for the NCAAs in 17 years — played in summer tournaments against golfers from several of the nation's top programs.

"We did a lot better than I thought we would," Vuillemin said. "We had a chance to play against a lot of the best from some schools in the South and Southeast."

The success led to a prediction for the 1990 'Cats.

"Everyone is working so much harder," Vuillemin said. "K-State has been at the bottom of the Big Eight for so many years, but it won't happen again. I can guarantee it."

Vibraphone king keeps on playing

Smiling 60-year jazz music veteran will light up concert stage in McCain

By Scott Levendofsky
Collegian Reporter

After 60 years of performing, composing, conducting and entertaining, "The King of the Vibes" is still smiling.

Lionel Hampton, the first jazz vibraphonist, will be performing with his big band at 8 p.m. Saturday in McCain Auditorium. Tickets are $15 for general admission, $13 for senior citizens and $7.50 for students.

Hampton, 82, has two distinguishing trademarks — a perpetual grin that lights up his face during each performance and a set of vibes that makes his brand of jazz a unique form of musical expression.

"I'm not going to retire. I'm going to keep right on playing," Hampton said.

Hampton, born in Birmingham, Ala., started his musical career as a drummer. His early idols were trumpet player and jazz great Louis Armstrong and drummer Jimmie Bertrand, who tossed his sticks in the air as lights blinked from inside his bass drum — a style that Hampton uses in his own drumming today.

In 1930, a meeting with Armstrong gave Hampton his first big musical break. Hampton was backing Armstrong on drums at a Los Angeles club when Armstrong asked him to attend a recording session. Armstrong noticed a set of vibes in the studio and asked Hampton if he knew how to play them. They cut a series of tunes, giving Hampton the exposure he needed to catch the attention of Benny Goodman.

"Benny Goodman and I were on stage and had a jam session I'll never forget," Hampton said.

Hampton then joined Goodman in New York, marking the first time blacks and whites played together in a major musical group.

Hampton's entrance into the music business may have paved the way for other blacks to break down racial barriers.

"I may have opened the door for Jackie (Robinson) and others with the exposure I received with Benny," he said.

After four years with Goodman, Hampton formed his own swing band in 1940. The Lionel Hampton Big Band has been touring and performing ever since.

Hampton reflected on the early days of the band.

"We were a pacesetter for big bands," he said.

In addition to his musical talents, Hampton has been recognized as a socially and politically concerned citizen through various philanthropies.

The most notable of these charitable organizations is the Lionel Hampton/Chevron Jazz Festival at the University of Idaho. Talented youngsters compete for scholarships in the music department at the festival.

"We awarded 25 scholarships to the school last February," Hampton said.

Hampton established an Ear Research Foundation and The Lionel Hampton Endowment Fund, which awards scholarship funds to colleges across the country.

To honor his many accomplishments, the University of Idaho recently named their new college of music after him, dedicating it as The Lionel Hampton School of Music.

Hampton said the dedication of the music school was a honor.

"It feels wonderful. It is a great honor coming from an institution as large as the University of Idaho," Hampton said.

He said that of all the artists in the music industry today, he is most impressed with the accomplishments of Quincy Jones. Jones was a musician in Hampton's band before becoming a record producer.

"Quincy was a terrific talent. There was no question in his ability and motivation to make it," Hampton said.

Hampton's new album is titled "Cookin' in the Kitchen." His upcoming tour is scheduled to cover 21 college campuses across the nation.

Endowment creates new chair in College of Human Ecology

By Shannon Meyers
Collegian Reporter

The first endowed professorship in the College of Human Ecology will be awarded to Candyce S. Russell, professor of human development and family studies, Oct. 2, at the Manhattan Country Club.

The Vera Mowery McAninch Professorship in Human Development and Family Studies was donated through the Essential Edge Campaign.

"An endowment of this kind is very special, it allows the University to recognize an outstanding faculty member and to utilize the money for research which would otherwise not be possible," said John Murray, professor of human development and family studies.

"A professorship such as this allows the person that donates money to be involved in a unique way because they are enabling research on a day-to-day basis, and they are able to share in the accomplishments that the research may bring about," said Murray.

He said the selection was made by the provost based on recommendations from the dean of human ecology. Candidates are selected on the basis of research, teaching and support of their students and co-faculty members.

Endowments are contributions made to the University in the form of investments or cash. The interest from that money is then transferred into a special account the endowed chair may use to further his or her research.

Russell, who has been teaching at K-State for 16 years, said she will use the endowment to further her research in the refinement of measuring the validity of the family-functioning model.

"K-State has been very good to me, but this is the high point of my time here. It reflects the University's appreciation of faculty and our contributions to research," Russell said.

Russell said that at a time when faculty salaries are not competitive, having a position enhanced with special funds makes it easier to retain and attract new faculty.

This specific endowment is designated for five years, at that time Russell can be re-appointed or other faculty members may be considered for the professorship.

Vera Mowery McAninch graduated from the College of Human Ecology.

Gas-guzzlers under attack

Senate bill may make automakers increase fuel efficiency

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — America's gas-guzzling cars are under the heaviest attack in more than a decade as the Mideast crisis brings home the country's reliance on foreign oil and Detroit is shuddering.

Today, the Senate is expected to take up a bill that would require automakers to produce cars with an average gas mileage of 40 miles per gallon.

The bill was once given scant chance, but industry lobbyists and members of the Bush administration now say they're concerned the measure may sneak through as Congress searches for a response to the crisis in the Persian Gulf.

The spotlight shining once more on efficient cars could not have caught automakers at a worse time. For years, they have been increasingly pushing performance over gasoline savings.

As the bill's prospects have risen, so have the voices on both sides of the issue.

"It should be called the highway fatality bill," Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner told a news conference called so he could denounce the legislation. If passed, he said, the measure would lead to smaller cars and more traffic deaths.

Skinner said the near hysteria over the Mideast situation may propel the legislation through Congress even though, he insisted, the mileage goals are what he called unrealistic, irresponsible and unattainable. He said he would urge President Bush to veto the bill if it reaches his desk.

But environmentalists say Skinner is being taken in by the automakers, who repeatedly have said they lack the technology to improve fuel efficiency dramatically after years of making cars lighter, smaller and more efficient.

Since 1975, the average fuel economy of cars sold in the United States has doubled, from about 14 mpg to 28 mpg. A third of all models now get more than 30 mpg.

Further improvements in automakers' fleet-wide average, the manufacturers say, would mean restricting buyers to compacts.

"We're at a different plateau now than we were in 1975," said Albert Slechter, government affairs director for Chrysler Corp. Fifteen years ago, he acknowledges, cars were too heavy, engines were too big, and cars weren't designed to save gas.

Such technologies as improved aerodynamic design, front-wheel drive, improved transmissions, fuel injection and smaller, more efficient engines are already being used in many cars without approaching the 40 mpg level of performance, the automakers argue.

Lectures give faculty out-of-class forum to present ideas to students

By Eric Robison
Collegian Reporter

The Presidential Lecture Series gives K-State faculty a chance to present their ideas to students across the state.

The program, instituted by Jon Wefald and organized through new student programs, is in its fifth season.

"We have had the program before, and it has definitely been a success. It allows our faculty a chance to reach out and get possible recruits interested in the University," said Mike Lane, coordinator for the presidential lectures. "The speakers seem to really enjoy the program because it is a fresh new audience they are speaking to, it gives them a break from the classroom."

The series is offered by K-State at no cost to Kansas high schools or community colleges, Lane said.

> presidential lectures coordinator

The series has several lectures in the planning stages. Among them is Hermann Donnert, professor of nuclear engineering. He will give a lecture at Parsons High School on Sept. 26 concerning "EnergyResources for the Future — a Realistic Assessment." Donnert is also scheduled to speak at Dodge City Community College on Oct. 3.

John Havlin, assistant professor of agronomy, presents a lecture on "Careers in Agriculture for Non-Farm People."

"I think the enthusiam is good. Since the program was initiated, enrollment has been increasing, so the program must be working. The more visits we make to these institutions, the more likely we are to attract recruitments. This series seems to give us a link between the students and K-State," Havlin said.

A wide variety of topics are offered from the faculty ranging from lectures in the areas of architecture and design, business, career planning, history, journalism, education, geography and geology, mathematics, music, physical sciences, psychology, political science, agriculture, sociology, speech and theater and veterinary medicine.

"I really enjoy the program, and I think the more we keep going around to the schools, the more we will advertise ourselves because our customers don't really know much about our school. This will make them think we are doing a good thing and will make them remember us," Havlin said.

Woods shows slides of soil reclamation

By Amy Hadlock
Staff Reporter

Lebbeus Woods, professor at Cooper Union in New York, presented a slide illustration entitled "Terra Nova" at the Lee A. Byrant Lecture on art and architecture Wednesday afternoon.

Woods said his presentation dealt with a possible reconstituted earth in the mountains of North and South Korea, the site of the Korean de-militarized zone.

"A new earth or a second nature is the meaning of 'Terra Nova,'" Woods said.

Woods' was the fifth Lee A. Bryant lectureship in architecture and design.

The lectureship is a living tribute to Bryant, a former K-State student, who devoted a decade to alternating periods of academia and employment with architects in Kansas City, Salina, Wichita, Oklahoma City and Dallas.

In 1970, he was a registered architect who had served as a project architect for a wide spectrum of building types. His professional career led him to Kansas City and Chicago. Bryant died in 1981 due to a stroke.

Lynn Ewanow, assistant dean and associate professor in the College of Architecture and Design, said Woods was a perfect choice for the lectureship.

"We asked Woods to lecture because our lecture was to be about art and architecture and his focus is on art and architecture so it worked well to bring the two together," Ewanow said.

While visiting K-State, Woods had a chance to examine several things involved with the College of Architecture and Design, such as the Oz Journal, the journal of architecture and design and several of the architectural studios.

"I was impressed with the format and the design of the Oz Journal," Woods said, "and I was impressed with the studios and excited by the foward-thinking spirit of the school."

Woods studied at Purdue University School of Engineering and the University of Illinois Champagne/Urbana School of Architecture. He has lectured and exhibited throughout Europe and the United States.

He is the 1976 recipient of the Progressive Architecture Citation Award and has served since 1988 as the director of the Research Institute for Experimental Architecture.

Mayors demand drug war money

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The National Conference of Mayors urged Congress Wednesday to pass legislation speeding anti-drug funds to large cities, saying the money allocated under a bill passed four years ago is getting bogged down in state and federal bureaucracies.

Mayor Robert Isaac of Colorado Springs, president of the conference, said that in a survey of 30 cities, more than two out of five said they think they are losing the war on drugs.

"The system, as currently designed, is not capable of doing what it was intended to do," Isaac said at a news conference. "It is not capable of getting the federal anti-drug funds through the states to the cities where the drug war is the hottest."

He called for approval of legislation providing that cities eligible for a minimum grant of $50,000 would receive it directly instead of having it passed through the states. The measure has been approved by the House Judiciary Committee and is pending as an amendment to a crime bill.

Isaac said the survey, conducted in January, showed that city governments had received only 15 percent of the $150 million available in the state and local grant program. He said calculations by the mayors' conference showed they were entitled to 65 percent.

"The money was bogged down in the bureaucracies of the federal and state governments," Isaac said.

Manhattan High students score high on ACTs

By Charlie Gatschet
Collegian Reporter

Test scores indicate that Manhattan High School graduates are better prepared for college than most students nationwide.

MHS students scored composite averages of 22.1 compared to the national average of 20.6 on the American Collegiate Test. Students also scored well on the Scholastic Aptitude Test with averages of 514 on the verbal portion, and 573 on the math portion. The national averages for SATs are 424 on verbal and 476 on math.

"You'd have to say they are better prepared than most students because (the tests) are designed to predict college success," said James Rezac, MHS principal.

Rezac presented the results at the Unified School District 383 School Board meeting Wednesday night.

In addition to high test scores, MHS had eight National Merit semifinalists despite being one of the lower-funded schools.

"We are very poor. We have the second-lowest budget per pupil in the state," said Mary Nichols, school board president.

Most seniors and juniors take the ACT because it is required for admission into most colleges in Kansas and throughout the Midwest. Students from MHS who take the SAT are usually trying to gain admission into schools on the coasts.

Rezac said Midwest SAT scores can be misleading.

"The better students take the SAT to get into more prestigious schools," Rezac said. "The scores are higher because the average students usually don't take it."

More than 300 of MHS's 485 seniors from 1990 took the ACT while 72 took the SAT.

Being a National Merit semifinalist enables students to be more selective in their college choice, as well as providing them with scholarship opportunities.

"It is one of the most prestigious (scholarship) competitions there is," Rezac said.

MHS scored better than the state averages of 20.9 on the ACT and 492 on the SAT verbal portion, and 548 on the SAT math portion.

Rezac said he feels the local emphasis on education is the reason behind the scores.

"We live in a community where education is more highly-prized than a lot of things," Rezac said. "I'd like to think we have a stable and valued school system."

Board members discussed the difference in scores between MHS students who took more than the required amount of core classes in english, math, social studies and natural science. Those students' average ACT composite score was 24.4, three points higher than students who took only the required amount of core classes.

"Those three points make a world of difference," Rezac said.

He said school counselors strongly encourage students to take more than the required amount of core classes.

Theater presents opening comedy

By Stacey Harbison
Collegian Reporter

The Manhattan Civic Theatre kicks off its Silver Anniversary season this weekend with a comedy about one family's pursuit of happiness.

"You Can't Take It With You" opens Friday at the Wareham Opera House.

Dinner Theater and show-only performances are at 8 p.m. on Sept. 21, 22, 28 and 29. Dessert matinees are at 2 p.m. on Sept. 23 and 30.

The Pulitzer Prize-winning comedy was written during the 1930s about family life during the depression, said Diane Dollar, publicist for The Manhattan Civic Theatre. The story contains interesting parallels to the experiences of hippie families in the 1960s.

"It's 60 years old, but it's all very contemporary," said Dollar. "It's a show that the entire family will enjoy."

The play features everything from fireworks and homemade candy to ballet and visits to the zoo.

The plot centers on the madcap antics of the slightly bizarre Vanderhof family. The confusion comes to a climax when future in-laws are over for dinner and the IRS and FBI show up.

Dollar said the FBI visits were not unusual in the 1930s because people were very suspicious then.

Walter Kolonosky, associate professor of modern languages, plays a Russian exile.

"There's a lot of great lines in it," he said. "I think it will go over well."

Kolonosky said the outrageous roles in the play present a challenge for the actors.

"It's a lot of hard work," Kolonosky said. "It's scary, but I'm learning a lot."

Many of the performers have had theater experience on and off the stage, Dollar said. The new faces in the company are nice for the people that attend the Manhattan Civic Theatre's performances regularly.

"It's important to attract the best possible talent," Dollar said. "Theater, or the arts, in any community, is a good addition. Manhattan is fortunate because they have good theater on campus and in the community."

"You Can't Take it With You" is distinguished by its timelessness, Dollar said.

"Any kind of art piece that's done well will stand on its own merit," she said.

Season tickets are $25 in celebration of the Manhattan Civic Theatre's Silver Anniversary. Season tickets include admission to four shows and to all "Etcetera" productions. Other productions in the season are the musical comedies "Nunsence," "Catch Me if You Can" and "Sweeney Todd."

City council of Wichita heads effort for cleanup of polluted water system

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — Determined to keep the federal Superfund program out of downtown Wichita, the city council on Tuesday voted to take over the cleanup of polluted groundwater beneath the heart of the city — a project estimated to cost as much as $20 million.

"Central to my thinking is a rejection of the notion that the Wichita core area should ever become a Superfund site," Mayor Bob Knight said. "There is no likely scenario under which the Wichita core area could survive such an eventuality."

The council's 5-0 vote clears the way for City Manager Chris Cherches to try his innovative approach to paying for removing toxic wastes from groundwater beneath a section of the city that is four-miles long and more than a mile wide.

Cherches' complex proposal involves tax-increment financing, a method of paying for public improvements that never has been tried in Wichita. His plan turns on reducing downtown property values while maintaining the amount of taxes that owners of homes and businesses in the polluted area pay on their properties.

The taxes on the difference between property values now and those after the values were reduced would be put into a fund to pay for the cleanup.

At the same time, Cherches and his staff would go after downtown businesses that caused the pollution problem. Those businesses would be required to pick up a big portion of the cleanup costs, he said.

"It would be critical that the contributors (businesses) would be expected to pay a very substantial amount toward the cleanup costs."

Memorial Hospital's new low-dose, film-screen mammography unit is designed and used exclusively for mammograms. Our service is professionally staffed by experienced radiologic technologists and it is fully accredited by the American College of Radiology.

One out of every ten women will develop breast cancer in her lifetime. The best defense and the key to surviving breast cancer is early detection. Mammograms done in conjunction with monthly breast self-examination (BSE) and annual exams by your doctor provide the most protection. What should you do?

- Practice breast self-examination monthly.
- Have a breast exam by your physician annually.
- When you reach the age of 35, ask your physician to schedule you for a baseline mammogram, and follow the American Cancer Society guidelines thereafter. Between the ages of 40 and 49, a mammogram should be done every one to two years, with a physical breast exam every year. After age 50, a mammogram and physical breast exam should be done every year.

Call Memorial Hospital's Department of Radiology at 587-4240 if you would like more information. We want to help you protect your health.

Liberian conflict escalates

By The Associated Press

ABIDJAN, Ivory Coast — The top U.S. official for Africa went behind Liberian rebel lines Wednesday to meet with rebel chief Charles Taylor and said the man many accuse of prolonging a brutal war is "in a negotiating mood."

Assistant Secretary of State Herman Cohen met Taylor across the border from Ivory Coast, a day after he risked his life to meet rival guerrilla leader Prince Johnson in the Liberian capital of Monrovia, where bullets flew over his head.

"The prospects for increased warfare are growing," Cohen said at a news conference in Abidjan. "I feel the situation in Liberia is deteriorating. More and more people are in danger of starvation."

horses. We have to be as innovative as we can."

Lawrence Gono, graduate student in agronomy, said the government spending needs to change for Africa to become self-sufficient in agriculture.

For example, Gono said the budget for Zimbabwe for the 1990-91 year is $6.9 billion. Of this, 15 percent is set aside for defense.

should take indication they need to expand the economic base so they are not so dependent on Fort Riley.

His organization will stay active and continue to educate people until they hear Fort Riley has no plans to expand, he said.

Linda Peterson, of Burdick and chairwoman of Preserve the Heartland, said her organization would also remain active but without the urgency they have had.

"I was elated when I heard land acquisition was put on hold," she said. "But we can't rest completely until they say it has been cancelled."

Peterson said she called the office of Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., today about the AAS and officials there said the Army can apply for a waiver to complete the study. However, such a waiver would have to be signed by either Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney or Deputy Secretary of Defense Donald J. Atwood.

Ybarra, Hayden's campaign press secretary, said Wednesday. "And we're especially pleased that it is an hour long, because we feel that provides a good opportunity to air the issues."

However, Ybarra added, the Hayden campaign is not happy that Finney will not make more joint appearances.

"We still think that's an indication she doesn't want voters, on a widespread basis, to know where she stands on the issues."

Ybarra said the Hayden campaign is encouraging the originating stations to feed their telecasts of the Hayden-Finney debates to their sister network-affiliate stations.

"This year the budget deficit is too high and there has to be cutbacks," the spokesman said. "At this point, ramifications will be felt everywhere."

Claassen said the issue is not without precedent. Last year, a dispute over a 1.5 percent cutback across the board delayed many producers payments several weeks.

"We are voicing extreme displeasure, but we are not sure what else we can do," he said. "We have to have members of Congress act with Slattery and say this is inappropriate and not what we intended to do to reduce the deficit."

"Since there is no real economic interest in the three countries, and Isreal has been a vital ally to the United States, the United States won't do anything to endanger their relationship," Ali said.

Lookhart said the group agreed there was no simple solution to the crisis and no single side should be held to blame.

Ali is a Palestinian from Jordan, and said most people who attended the forum agreed the United States shouldn't invade Iraq at this point, but only detain the country from any further agression.

Most Arab students don't agree with Saddam Husein's actions, but don't believe the United States should be militarily involved, he said.

"I think the discussion was a success because all viewpoints were expressed." Lookhart said. "The many different viewpoints allowed the students to realize the complexity of the issue."

Ralph said he liked hearing the many different points of view, but said he didn't think the discussion changed anyone's primary opinion.

Lookhart said the next Brown Bag Discussion will be in about three weeks on the environment.

Switzer

"I was drafted as the fourth draft pick my senior year, which was an accomplishment in itself, and the first halfback drafted that year," Switzer said. "I like to think that they drafted me over and ahead of Johnny Lattner, the Heisman Trophy winner. That made me feel pretty good."

Switzer was called to active duty in the Air Force after his second NFL season, but played one year for the military while serving as a lieutenant. After re-injuring a knee upon his return to Green Bay, he then moved north to play in the Canadian Football League — one year for the Calgary Stampeders and two for the Montreal Alouettes before deciding to retire from football.

"I worked to be successful, and I think over time, it paid off. As I reflect back, I wished I would have worked harder as a college student, academically, as well as an athlete," Switzer said. "I realize the value of what hard work can accomplish, having played in all-star games and played in professional ball. I recognize that if I would have worked a little harder, I might have been a little better, and it might have meant more to me in the long run."

Switzer returned to K-State in 1969 after spending 10 years with the Chicago Board of Education. He has been the associate dean and vice president of minority affairs and chairperson for the K-State's Intercollegiate Athletic Council.

Switzer can put his college and professional careers in perspective, with his role overseeing the academic progress of K-State's student athletes.

"As a junior in high school, my coach started talking to me about going to college," Switzer said. "I intended to join up with the Air Force to travel the world, but he felt that I could obtain an education if I took advantage of my athletic ability. I couldn't turn around, I had to keep moving forward, I had to continue down that road.

"Had it not been for athletics I would not have, probably, gone on to college," Switzer said. "From that standpoint K-State befriended me. I had many, many friends inside this University as classmates, as roommates, and as fans. I was treated somewhat unique, particularly as a black athlete, as one of those who pioneered in intercollegiate athletics."

Switzer has also worked toward the improvement of intercollegiate athletics, being grateful to those who paved his way.

"I think I played a significant role in the integration of sports, and I feel great about that accomplishment," Switzer said. "It was important for me to be successful, that I open the door wider. It was opened for me by two former athletes at K-State who were the first two to integrate intercollegiate athletics in the conference and at the University. Harold Robinson and Hoyt Givens had already pioneered, or broke the color barrier.

"Those are the accomplishmnets I look back on and cherish very dearly, because I wanted to make things better for the next person to come along," he said. "I was constantly encouraged by my friends, both black and white, and by community leaders about the worth of what was taking place. It makes me feel good that I was contributing to American culture in the broader sense."

Miller forces issue on Senate

STUDENT SENATE

By Charlie Gatschet
Collegian Reporter

The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics informed Student Senate that Senate will be financially responsible for any damage caused by the annual basketball ticket campout.

In a letter to Student Body President Todd Johnson, Athletic Director Steve Miller said, "Any financial responsibility incurred via the campout, be it damage or any other associated cost, will not be reimbursed through the athletic department, and the responsibility must be maintained by Student Senate."

Barry Beck, business senator, said he thought it was unusual the athletic department would take such a stand when they receive the benefits of the traditional campout.

"This seems like a pretty strange letter from the people who we are giving about $300,000 a year through a tuition raise that they themselves initiated through Student Senate," Beck said.

The letter comes at a time when Senate is discussing legislation concerning this year's campout.

A purple flag will be raised on the east side of Ahearn Field House, not on top of Anderson Hall, sometime before Oct. 14 to signify the beginning of the campout. The Anderson flag pole was taken down earlier this year.

Groups signing up during the first two hours of the campout will be put in a lottery drawing for seating priority.

"I will support this bill we have before us now ... but this (letter) is a bunch of crap," Beck said. "We do a service for them. They don't have to pay for anybody to go checking all the lines, seeing that the flag goes up.

"And then the athletic department says that any problems that come up, we have to pay for," he said. "So in other words, they're saying, 'we want all the benefits that come with the campout, all the publicity, all the enthusiasm for ticket sales, but if there is any cost involved, then Student Senate should take care of it.'"

In other business, Senate unanimously approved a special allocation of $1,073 to support Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week.

Barnburners take Opus honors; bands create rocking good time

The Barnburners captured top honors at the fourth annual Opus Band Competition.

The Barnburners, a local band, received a $300 first prize last night for its performance. The Grunge earned second prize and $200, and the $100 third prize was awarded to CREEP.

Despite the rain, almost 200 fans, groupies and curious people gathered in the Union Ballroom to sit and listen to one of the most popular live music events Manhattan offers.

"It's a lot better outside because people just drop by," said Nathan Chaffin, junior in chemistry and one of the three judges of this year's contest.

The other two judges were Jeff Shibley, editor of The Note, and Jim Johnson, KSDB music director and junior in journalism and mass communications.

The criteria the judges used for the contest included audience appeal, originality of music and presentation, instrumental ability and stage presence.

Opus was sponsored this year by Union Program Council and KDVV-FM, a Topeka radio station. Dan Ballard, host of the station's morning show, co-emceed the event with John Bartel, member the UPC Eclectic Entertainment Committee and senior in secondary education.

CREEP, who was the third band on stage, performed a very visual show with 10 to 12 band members on stage at one time. Three or four women sang back-up vocals for a few Supremes medleys and paraded through the audience with props for the "Jeopardy" song.

Ed Skoog, CREEP vocalist, led the crowd in "Do the Honkey," an audience participation dance. The band used this song to make the political statement "fight racism." Kevin Davis, vocalist, wore the slogan on his shirt.

The crowd gathered in a mob at the edge of the stage to see Skoog take off his shirt and strap himself into a vibrating excercise machine.

"I think it's a lot better this year. The crowd seems to be enjoying it a lot more. I wish it would have been outside, but other that." said Craig Alstatt, member of the Eclectic Entertainment Committee and junior in industrial engineering.

"Live music is essential to the college experience," said Roger Burns, senior in radio and television.

Spanish professor collapses in office

By Shannon Heim
Collegian Reporter

A K-State Spanish teacher was admitted to the St. Mary Hospital's Intensive Care Unit after collapsing in her office in Eisenhower Hall about 11:20 a.m. Thursday.

Margaret Beeson, associate professor in the Department of Modern Languages, had difficulty breathing and lost consciousness while another instructor and a student were in the office.

Kevin Walden, senior in secondary education, said he was talking with his French instructor, Ann Driss, when he heard choking sounds.

"I heard weird noises, and when I turned to look, she (Beeson) was slumped over in her chair and turning purple," Walden said. "Her eyes were open, but she was totally incoherent."

Walden said Driss yelled for help and he ran to tell the secretary to telephone 911.

Walden then ran to Lafene Health Center in search of immediate help. He was sent back to the treatment room, where a nurse told him Lafene's policy is not to treat anyone outside of the building, Walden said.

"I thought that was pretty stupid," Walden said. "I said, 'You can't leave even if someone's dying?'"

Walden left Lafene and returned to Eisenhower to find that a Riley County ambulance and a K-State Police car had arrived.

"This was something that sort of fell through the cracks," said Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene. "We do offer help and support if we can, but we don't really have the equipment to respond to an outside emergency."

Zweimiller said he recommends calling for an ambulance first because often one can arrive on the scene as quickly as a Lafene doctor can.

"We see 350 to 400 students a day," Zweimiller said. "That makes it difficult to respond to emergencies outside. By the time a doctor can get away, it is often no quicker than an ambulance, which is better equipped anyway."

Zweimiller said Lafene is equipped to put those in need in touch with other medical services. But if they are transported to the health center, they can be treated.

Brad Shaw, head of the modern languages department, said Beeson was taken to the hospital by friends and did not go in the ambulance.

A nurse at the St. Mary Hospital said Beeson is in stable condition.

Board of Regents approves resolution; athletics to be secondary to education

By Mary Skinner
Collegian Reporter

A resolution placing intercollegiate athletics in a secondary role to education was approved by the Kansas Board of Regents Thursday.

The regents also reaffirmed their opposition to a bill passed by the 1990 Legislature that may limit their power.

The resolution on intercollegiate athletics acknowledges the fact that there has been no trouble with the administration of athletics throughout Kansas and that none is expected.

It also recognizes that intercollegiate athletics plays a important part of university life, but that at no time should it become before the primary role of higher education.

"The board recognizes and appreciates the contribution of intercollegiate athletics to students and athletes," said Regent Jack Sampson, "but they should assist, never dominate the university."

The regents also expect each institution to enforce and apply rules that will maintain the appropriate image and help install the highest standards of scholastic sportsmanship, he said.

The regents will hold the universities accountable if they do not comply with the rules.

House Resolution 5010 will appear on the November ballot. The regents expressed their opposition to the bill because it might take away some of their independence from the Legislature.

The regents said they will continue to oppose the resolution publicly in press releases throughout the upcoming election.

The bill was intended to focus on the Kansas Board of Education, said President Jon Wefald. The bill, if passed in the November election, will abolish the Board of Education.

If the voters pass it, the Legislature could appoint the board members, possibly rewrite the Board of Regents and take away some of their independence, he said.

Gov. Mike Hayden has also withdrawn his support for the resolution.

Other topics approved by the regents included an approval of a contract agreement between K-State and Kansas Power and Light. The approval of this contract will allow K-State to participate in KPL's Electric Load Program, which will immediately credit the University with $22,000 through the program.

Also, the regent's were reminded of the sales-tax vote in Salina that could ensure the merger of K-State and KCT will appear on a ballot Sept. 25.

"If the Salina city voters pass the bond Tuesday, it would make it a sub-agency of K-State," said Student Body President Todd Johnson.

If the bill is passed, there will be no

Iraq tries to join pipelines with Iran

Hussein attempts to bypass embargo

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Iraq has asked Iran if the two countries can join their oil pipelines, a move that would allow Saddam Hussein to partly bypass the international embargo against his country, U.S. officials said Thursday.

Iran has not yet responded to the Iraqi request, said the officials.

Intelligence experts estimate a link between the two pipeline systems could be completed within a month across the countries' common border, if they decide to go ahead. One of Iraq's major pipelines, which runs along the Shatt-al-Arab waterway, at one point is just five miles from a major Iranian pipeline that goes into Iran's refinery at Abadan.

Such a link would let Iraq export 500,000 barrels of oil a day in return for badly needed cash, food and medicine, said the officials, who commented only on condition of not being named.

The Iraqi request is the latest overture by Hussein toward Iran, with which he fought a destructive eight-year war. He has turned to his former foe in an effort to breach the international blockade imposed by the United Nations after his Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait.

In return for promises of food and medicine, Iran has gotten back thousands of war prisoners and an agreement of shared sovereignty over a bitterly contested border waterway. In addition, Iraq has withdrawn troops from Iranian territory occupied during the 1980-88 war.

A senior Iranian official is in Baghdad negotiating terms of the reapprochement.

And Iran's ambassador to Pakistan said Thursday that Saddam may soon visit Tehran.

Administration officials have played down the importance of the thaw, saying Iran has everything to gain and little to lose. They also note that Iran has promised to abide by the embargo, and say they see no signs it has not.

Nonetheless, U.S. intelligence is keeping an eye on three tankers

ANC to meet with rival group

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The ANC said for the first time Thursday it would meet with the leader of a rival group to end black factional fighting, after ANC leader Nelson Mandela rejected government measures to halt the violence.

The statement opens the possibility for the first meeting between Mandela with Inkatha leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi to seek an end to the unrest.

The battles have pitted Xhosas and other blacks linked to the ANC against Zulu supporters of the conservative Inkatha movement.

On Wednesday night, high-level ANC and Inkatha delegations met in Durban to discuss the conflicts. It was the first meeting between top officials of the two black opposition movements since 1979. Another session was planned next week.

The ANC has previously rejected direct meetings with Buthelezi. Its statement Thursday blamed combined forces of Inkatha vigilantes and government security force elements for the violence in Natal and the townships.

Husband finds wife at brothel

TERAMO, Italy (AP) — A truck driver who went to a bordello expecting a discreet dalliance instead came upon a shocking surprise — his wife.

It turned out the woman, a homemaker by day, had been working as a call girl by night unbeknownst to her husband.

According to the account, a friend gave the 35-year-old truck driver the address of an exclusive bordello in Teramo, a city in central Italy, and recommended he ask for a particular woman working there.

"After a half-hour wait, when he finally obtained the prohibited meeting, the woman he dreamed of and whom he knew only by her working name turned out to be his wife, housewife by day, high-class call girl by night," the newspaper said.

The report said the wife tried to run away, but the husband caught her. She filed charges against him after he hit her, the newspaper said.

Cell gene defect corrected

NEW YORK (AP) — Scientists have corrected a crucial defect in cells taken from cystic fibrosis patients, a step called a milestone toward eventually treating the disease through gene therapy or new kinds of medication.

The cells carried the abnormal gene that causes cystic fibrosis, and researchers fixed the defect by giving them a normal copy of the gene.

"It's a milestone," said Paul Quinton, a cystic fibrosis researcher at the University of California, Riverside, who was familiar with the work.

Suspended dogs may race

KENOSHA, Wis. (AP) — Fifteen greyhounds suspended from racing at Dairyland Greyhound Park in connection with a Kansas investigation into illegal live-lure training could race in Kansas, officials confirmed Thursday.

The dogs sent to Dairyland from Kansas trainers were suspended this week after the trainers were charged in Kansas with cruelty to animals alleging they trained dogs using live lures.

The Wisconsin Racing Board has suspended the trainers, William and Rodney Boatright of Mayfield, Kan., for at least 90 days pending the outcome of the investigation, Executive Director Terence Dunleavy said.

Rural arrest areas equal urban

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rural areas have arrest rates for drug and alcohol-related charges as high as cities do, according to government researchers who recommend rural states pool resources to deal with the problem.

The General Accounting Office, in a report released by several rural-state senators Thursday, also found that most prison inmates in sparsely populated states have abused alcohol or drugs.

Substance abuse is so common among convicts that the available treatment programs are completely overwhelmed, GAO said.

"There is a problem in the rural parts of this country," said Sen. Kent Conrad, D-N.D. "It's not just an urban problem. We need resources to deal with it."

FBI reopens civil rights case

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The FBI has re-opened its civil rights investigation into the case of a Kansas City minister who was struck by a police officer during an arrest in May.

On Sept. 7, Jackson County Prosecutor Albert Riederer dropped charges of assault and armed criminal action against Kansas City Police Officer David Ross because, he said, the case was not winnable.

The FBI began its initial investigation soon after the incident in May but closed it several weeks ago because local prosecution was pending, said Max Geiman, a spokesman for the FBI.

"Since the prosecutor made his decision, we're simply finishing our reports on the matter," he said. "This action is not a commentary on the merit of the prosecutor's actions."

Illegal aliens held in custody

LEAVENWORTH (AP) — Ten illegal aliens were arrested Wednesday, most of them in Missouri, after federal agents raided a Fort Leavenworth construction site.

Ron Sanders, district director of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, said 20 agents were sent to a military housing project Wednesday following two months of surveillance.

Officials said they expected to find about a dozen illegal aliens at the site, but some workers ran into nearby woods when the agents arrived. Three undocumented Mexicans were taken into custody and were being held in jails in the Kansas City area.

Sanders would not say who tipped the agency to the illegal aliens on the construction project, but officials said illegal aliens have been found at other projects of some of the companies working at Fort Leavenworth.

As the agents were returning to Kansas City, they apprehended seven illegal aliens being taken from one tobacco farm to another in Platte County, Mo.

Biting bat proves to be rabid

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A bat that bit a Kansas City woman as she slept in her house last weekend was rabid, city health officials said.

The bat was captured and examined Tuesday, and the woman is undergoing treatment.

Health officials Wednesday cautioned residents to be careful in handling sick or dead bats.

Bats are not uncommon in buildings, but rabid bats are, said Gerald Hoff, chief of the city's communicable disease control division.

PREPARING FOR THE WORST

Soldiers train for desert deployment

By David Frese
Features Editor

Four U.S. Army Reserve soldiers had just completed a chemical weapons training session at Fort Riley Wednesday when it began to rain.

Sgt. Kim Morgan pulled his black, army-issue gas mask from his face and wiped the sweat from his brow. It was barely 75 degrees outside and a far cry from the desert climates Morgan and his compatriots will be heading for to do their part in Operation Desert Shield.

The four reservists are members of the 13th Quartermaster Detachment, a 15-person Army Reserve water purification unit out of Great Bend that arrived in Fort Riley Sunday.

They are expected to leave for Saudi Arabia within a week.

"We were expecting it," said Sgt. H.R. Prilling of his detachment's call to duty. "But it's still, like, all of a sudden, you know. Here we are."

Since Sunday, the group has been preparing in the areas of nuclear, biological and chemical warfare training. They have also been practicing common tasks such as basic first aid and survival and weapons training that they will perform during their six-month tour in the desert.

Wednesday's drill was designed to prepare the soldiers in the event of a chemical gas attack. The soldiers hurriedly put their gear over their heavy chemical weapon protection suits.

"They already had their suits on, so all they had to put on were their boots, their mask and their gloves, in the order of importance," said Pfc. Matt Rabe of Fort Riley public affairs, while the four soldiers put on their protective clothing. "They put the mask on first to keep breathing. If they hadn't had their suits on, they would've had eight minutes to put their entire suits on. Which is not that much time. The mask itself you have 15 seconds to get on — which is not very long."

Prilling said his detachment's job is to go to different water sources and clean the water up for use in showering, cooking and drinking by military personnel. Not a glamourous job, he said, but a necessary one.

> "We've been trained, and we're ready for this. We've got a mission to do. I'm ready to go.
> — Sgt. H.R. Prilling
> 13th Quartermaster Detachment
> U.S. Army Reserve

"We're just a water purificatrion unit," Prilling said. "This, gas masks and stuff, is just training. But we're getting ready for any possible option."

Such options include leaving behind family, friends and children here in the states. Prilling, 43, was the oldest of his detachment and in the middle of a child custody process.

"I've lost three kids because of this," Prilling said, hanging his head down. "But that's all right. When I get back I'll take care of business, and my three kids will be with me again."

The Middle East crisis has been compared to the Vietnam War in many aspects, but Prilling said there are many differences.

"In Vietnam we had superior firepower in everything," he said. "If you look at it this way, Iraq has basically everything we have, and we now have to have military superiority in manpower and equipment.

"We've been trained, and we're ready for this," Prilling said. "We've got a mission to do. I'm ready to go."

Sgt. 1st Class Ray Demel, the 13th's noncommissioned officer in charge, said he was also prepared. He said he felt his detachment was in tip-top shape, and years of practice have made him ready.

"I've been in the reserves 15 years and I have two years active duty, but I've never been called up," Demel said. "I wasn't surprised we were called up now, though. I kind of expected it with the situation over there — the high demand is water.

"I'm ready to go and anxious to go," he said. "I'm not anxious about combat — not happy — but I'm very patriotic. I'll do my job."

Despite his sworn duty as a member of the Army Reserves, Demel said it was hard to leave his family behind. He said his daughter Melissa's tenth birthday is coming up Oct. 1. By that time, he should be on the sands of Saudi Arabia.

"We had a little early birthday party before we left," Demel said. "She got a doll she wanted — Jordan — from the New Kids On the Block. That's the substitute till I get home."

New vision required for local businesses

Would someone please stop the crying?

With the recent grand opening of the Sears store in the Manhattan Town Center, those responsible for maintaining the life and vitality of downtown Manhattan have been singing tunes in several different keys.

Some have been happy, some sad. But the number of sour notes heard — as was the case after J.C. Penney left the area — is alarming.

Would someone please explain why?

First of all, there's the curious argument that the Town Center is killing downtown. Since when did downtown Manhattan end where Poyntz Avenue and 3rd Street meet? Curious little thing, this mysterious boundary line. Seems a bit like a boundary overseas that was torn down when it was discovered that all of the bickering that led to its construction was a bit ridiculous.

Therein lies the real problem here. Manhattan is one of the most stratified cities in the Midwest when it comes to having a series of shopping districts promoting their own interests with virtually no regard to the economic health and welfare of the city as a whole.

There are merchants associations for Village Plaza, Westloop, Aggieville, downtown, etc. The list seems to grow longer as the days pass and the problem worsens. Could it be that the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce needs to get tough and bring the selfish activities of these groups into line?

True, the system of capitalism we have in this nation allows for competition, and healthy competition in the business industry helps all businesses become better in the long run.

However, it is also true that a community — and Manhattan has long been considered a community in the truest sense of the word — has the best interests of the entire population in mind when important economic decisions are considered.

It's high time that the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce bring together all of the groups governing these shopping areas in an effort to promote Manhattan as a whole rather than the interests of the businesses that congregate in one geographical area.

Only then will Manhattan be able to stop the bellyaching. Salina, 65 miles to the west, and Topeka, 60 miles to the east, are fine examples of cities with relatively new malls whose downtown areas are vital, beautiful parts of their cities.

And it's no coincidence that these two cities have gained All-America distinction in the past few years.

Manhattan could be such a city, but a new vision is required. And tear-filled eyes will find it difficult to focus on such a vision.

Football and forensics teams deserve praise

Yes, the football team — thanks to the alphabet — is ranked No. 1 in the Big Eight. That we have won our first two games of the season is a wonderous fact in itself — but number one! Wow. The football players deserve the awe and praise in their accomplishment they have received so far.

Yet, the football team is not the only K-State team ranked highly among the colleges and universities around the country.

The forensics team has been ranked No. 2 in the nation, coming off one of the most successful seasons ever.

So what?

Well, the team has beaten out the best liberal arts colleges across the country to earn this position. It has been a regional power even in the down years. The forensics team members' competitiveness is as strong as athletic teams, and they have proven their ability to beat the best.

This year's ranking proves the respect the team has earned among the universities and colleges all over. They know K-State is the ones to beat.

Forensics coach Craig Brown and his team see forensics as the academic equivalent to university sports teams and have taken this view as a challenge to compete as those on the playing fields.

And, this year they have won.

The sad fact is few recognize the team's accomplishments seriously. Even with the ranking, the team's talents are taken with a grain of salt and a giggle.

However, students need to be aware that these people are as much champions and deserving of kudos as the much celebrated athletic teams (who get attention even in losing years). Academic prowess should be rewarded and congratulated as much as athletic ability.

The forensics team and other academic competitive teams need to be recognized for their accomplishments.

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

I was sitting in my apartment, which my landlord assured me is not a for-profit business, reading a Collegian editorial about elitists or greeks or something when my roommate, Martin, came running in the front door.

"The oppressed have spoken, D.L.," he said. "The tally is at last counted. The traveler has come!"

I pitched the Collegian into the wastebasket and leaned back in my chair. I noticed that on Martin's perennially black t-shirt was a red circle with a slash through it over the word GREEKS.

"The elitists shall fall, D.L. The elitists shall fall!"

"Which elitists did you have in mind, Martin?" I said. "Has Stanley Koplik resigned?"

"No, D.L. The GREEKS shall fall. At last this University will be free of the elitism that rots its very core, putrifies its very existence."

"Oh, greeks are an elitist group, then?"

"Of course you are, D.L., you can't hide from me. You represent the last bastion of elitism that prevents this sacred Kansas State University from reaching its goal of total ethnic diversity. The University should completely disassociate itself from you and your evil elitist systems."

I frowned. "You mean we're holding back the sacred Kansas State University that already has such a predominant number of ethnic groups represented on its faculty and in its administration? You mean that Kansas State University?"

"Yeah," Martin said, wiping back his bleached blond hair. "The only Kansas State University around."

"The same Kansas State University that has a one-room country club for well-moneyed alumni out at the sports complex?"

"Well," Martin said, "that's the athletic department, and they have all those athletes, you know. It's OK to look down on them. Every other scholar at every other university does. I mean, sure they're using their talents to get themselves scholarships to get themselves an education like every legitimate scholarship recipient is, but can they recite the entire "Grand Inquisitor" chapter of The Brothers Karamazov from memory? But we were talking about K-State. We have to deal with K-State elitism."

"You mean like the Honors program or all of the student honoraries like Blue Key, Gold Key, Mortar Board, Spurs, Chimes and all those greek letter honoraries like Sigma Delta Pi and Theta Alpha Phi?"

"Well, those are different. Those are service organizations for people with good grades who are real active."

"Who get together and associate with other people with good grades who are real active."

"Well, they wouldn't want anyone with low grades to be a part of them."

"Because, I suppose, people with low grades are, what, less active and less capable of service?"

Martin thought about that a second. "I suppose you'll say now that the University itself is elitist because we look down on people who don't go on to post-secondary educational institutions."

"Or," I said, "who go to junior colleges, or trade schools or technical schools. Remember, there's a reason people say we don't want K-State to become a technical school."

"Because we believe in getting a well-rounded education, D.L. What's wrong with that?"

"Nothing," I said. "Except that it assumes we know what a well-rounded education is while the trade and technical schools do not."

"But GREEKS have closed meetings. What are they trying to hide?"

"What is the Collegian Editorial Board trying to hide, Martin? I've never seen any public announcements promoting public attendance of their meetings."

"But, that's different, D.L., all these groups perform a service. What do GREEKS do?"

"You mean besides all those large fundraisers they hold to help various philanthropies?"

"Blood money, D.L.," Martin said. "Nothing but blood money."

I shrugged. "Whatever."

"You see, even you have no defense. The GREEKS shall fall. Diversity shall be met."

"Martin," I said. "I'm confused. Where did you get the idea that greeks were holding Kansas State University back from its goal of diversity?"

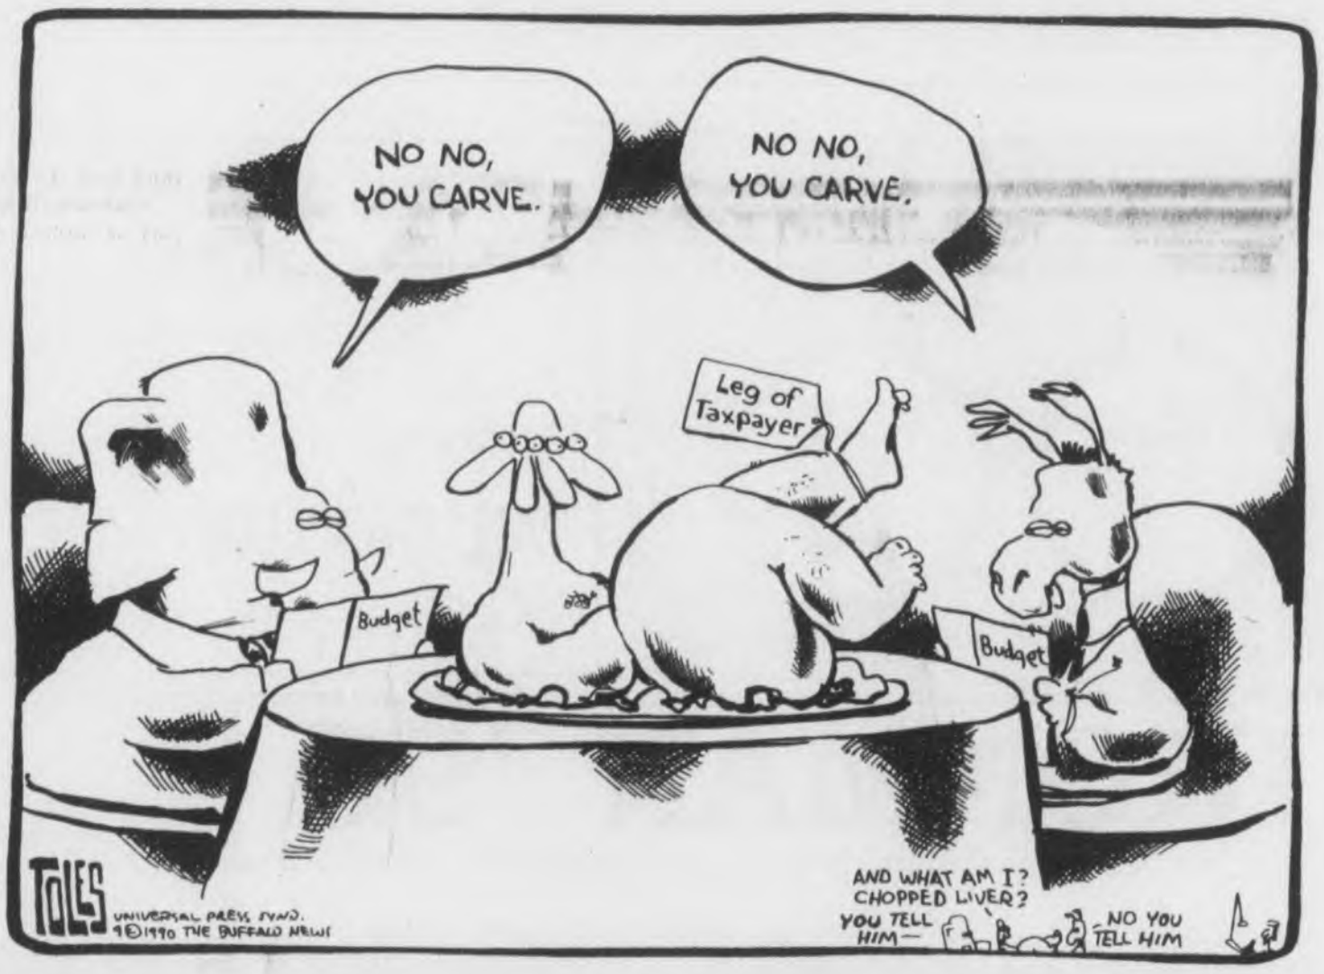
Martin pointed to the Collegian I had thrown in the trash. "From the Collegian there."

"The Collegian, of course, representing the great model of ethnic diversity on the K-State campus."

"Is it?" Martin asked.

"Why, all one has to do is look at the faces of the columnists every week, or take a walk through the Collegian office to see the great diversity present."

"Well, that's different, the Collegian performs a service."



"I see, so it's OK that they don't practice what they preach?"

"Listen, D.L.," Martin said. "I know that K-State has a little bit more elitism in it than just the GREEKS. But you've got to start eliminating elitism somewhere, don't you? I mean do you expect the administration to be the one to diversify itself? To become some sort of model we all aspire towards? Be real."

"After all," I said. "They're just the administration. They're below students like you and I."

That's what I was afraid of.

Story inaccurate

Editor,

We, Roach Factory, wish to clarify and correct a few misconceptions printed in your Wednesday article "Dopus contest protests judging."

First of all, "protest" is a wrongly held conception. Dopus was a simple joke. No harm or protest was expressed or intended in our interview — which does not vaguely resemble your article.

Second, neither the Moving Van Goghs nor the Barnburners had any part in the conception of Dopus. Nor do we think they appreciated your including them in our so-called "protest."

Third, during the course of our interview, we said time and time again that Dopus was a concept that had long since been abandoned. Apparently, you found it so controversial you had to refer to it in present tense and turn a simple gig with another band into an embarrassing situation for all involved. Neither the bands, the sound company nor the bar owner wish to be implicated in any way.

We wish to express our distaste with your printing of our personal views of the Opus competition. It's one thing to take quotes out of context, but we believe these quotes were used to make for a more controversial article. None of the positives we stressed about Union Program Council were mentioned.

But that wouldn't have been very controversial, would it? Your article, if not unfair, is definitely poor journalism.

The views we did express were intended to support original, alternative music — not just our own. There are a number of excellent bands in Manhattan — the Moving Van Goghs, Tuber, Truck Stop Love, the Barnburners and Circus Maximus, to name a few — who deserve to be listened to seriously. I am sure their "groupies" crowded the stage Thursday night at Opus.

Contrary to Joe Montgomery's uneducated comments, the music scene in Manhattan is alive and well, it simply lacks a bar in which to prosper and grow.

Support live music in Manhattan.

Effort still needed

Editor,

I read Wednesday's lead "SHELF reaches goal, may be group's end," with some amazement. I was further amazed and dismayed to learn that SHELF's president no longer saw the need for an active organization to focus attention on our libraries.

Despite increased attention to the needs of our libraries, caused in part by SHELF's activities in conjunction with student government and University administration, it will take continued efforts to undo the effect of years of underfunding. Sustained and active support will be necessary to keep our message in front of the Board of Regents, the legislature, and the governor. I invite SHELF and its members to join Friends of the Libraries in this effort.

Friends of the Libraries was organized six years ago to advance awareness of the needs of libraries and to solicit contributions for the KSU libraries. Although the Friends can, and do, make special gifts to the libraries, we cannot (and do not try to) replace state funding for basic library functions. The main goal of Friends of the Libraries is to unite and focus the K-State and Manhattan communities in support of KSU libraries. We are committed to increase funding for our libraries. Groups like SHELF and Friends of the Libraries must continue to be active if we want our libraries to address the teaching, research and service needs of our University.

Attitude insensitive

Editor,

I found the attitude of Rachel Smith, at least as evidenced in her letter to the editor from Sept. 19, mean and all too common.

To quote Smith, "It is unfortunate that not everyone can afford the same financial benefits in life. Not everyone is able to go to college, own cars, go on UPC trips and belong to a sorority or fraternity." She forgot a few items: food, clothes and a dry place to sleep. It is unfortunate that not all can afford these things but, "After all, this is capitalist America."

IN FOCUS

A family touring the exhibit stops to view the Nightstalker, one of three robotic creatures. Some young children were frightened by the robot, calling it scary.

DINAMATION!

Zoology of the Future visits Manhattan

ABOVE: Both old and young visitors view lifelike displays and dioramas that line the passageways of the museum. RIGHT: The Nightstalker is one of many futuristic creatures imagined by Scottish paleontologist Dougal Dixon. Dinamation, a California-based company, has provided the three robotic animals of the future for the Zoology of the Future museum. The robotic creatures are operated by an air compression system and have audio effects housed in their base.

The continents have drifted together creating whole new masses of land and shifting climatic zones. Rabbits and rodents have evolvedinto carnivorous predators. Humankind no longer exists. It's 50 million years in the future.

This is the premise of the exhibit created by Dinamation Inc. on display in the Manhattan Town Center from Sept. 15 to Dec. 29.

Workers have spent many hours setting up the display and, using black walls and flashing lights, creating the special effects that give the display a suitably ominous atmosphere, said Donald Wixom, director of the Sunset Zoo, which is cosponsoring the exhibit.

The exhibit is based on the book "After Man: A Zoology of the Future" written by Dougal Dixon, a Scottish paleontologist specializing in evolution.

Dixon uses plate tectonics, the force that causes continental drift, as a focal premise for his theories in the book.

Dixon predicts that 50 million years from now, most of the continents will have drifted together to form one large mass. Eurasia, Australia and North America will be one continent with California floating of the west coast as an island. South America will also be an island.

This movement of the continents will have put them in different climatic zones and affect the nature of the animals that inhabit the area.

"I have made certain assumptions in my vision," Dixon said in informational materials about the book. "The greatest is that the natural vegetation zones — tundra, coniferous forest, deciduous forest, desert, grassland and tropical jungle will still be here in 50 million years' time.

"That may not be so. There may be a totally different range of conditions existing at that time," he said. "In that case, the zoology of the time will be totally different than mine."

Dixon's theory is that the human race was killed off by its own development of knowledge. Human culture became more and more advanced and used more and more resources. When the resources ran out, human beings couldn't function anymore. Dixon said human beings changed their environment to adjust to current needs without regard to the long-term consequences.

Human beings became so advanced, they lived outside evolution. So, once they lost the means for their advanced technology and were forced to live naturally, they were not able to. Human beings, he said, were the cause of their own demise.

"I see life continuing to survive and develop despite any harm that mankind does," Dixon said. "Whatever damage civilization may do to the natural environment, there will always be living creatures that survive. These survivors will always change and adapt ensuring that life continues on our planet after we have long gone."

Dinamations' exhibit of the animals that could exist 50 million years into the future shows creatures that make nightmares. There are even three life-size, automated replications of Dixon's futuristic animals.

"I like to say the exhibit is a mixture of science and imagination," Wixom said. "Dixon based all his drawings on scientific guesses as to how the animals will evolve."

Dixon's knowledge and imagination created animals like the Nightstalker, which evolved from the modern-day bat. The bats, after the continents had shifted, settled on an island with no predators and plenty of food. This allowed them to grow to sizes of several meters and dwell on the ground. Slowly, their wings evolved into long, powerful legs. Their back legs, once needed for grasping, now grew longer and up over their backs to become hands. According to Dixon's theory, what had once been a small flying animal had evolved during 50 million years into a large, predatory walking beast.

The 2-meter lifelike replica of the Nightstalker was scary enough to cause some visitors to scream when rounding a corner and coming face-to-face with it.

"You might notice when you read about Dixon's animals, most of them evolve from animals that humans now consider pests, like rodents and rabbits," Wixom said. "That's all that was left over that we weren't able to kill off before we were killed off ourselves."

The rodents and rabbits have evolved into chirits, bardelots, rabbucks, night gliders and truteals. They have grown as large as 3 meters tall. Some even became predators in Dixon's theory.

"When I look at all of this, I'm kind of glad we're not going to be around for it," said Suzanne Endicott, second-year student in veterinary medicine, with a smile.

Wixom said people of all ages have come to the exhibit and attendance has been especially high on the weekends.

The exhibit is presented as a thought-provoking program and as one man's scientifically-based opinion.

"The vision I present is not a firm prediction," Dixon said. "It's merely an exploration of the possible. The pathways of evolution are infinite. Anyone starting with the same assumptions as myself, and using the same reasoning along the same natural and scientific lines will inevitably come up with a completely different view of animal life on Earth 50 million years in the future. That vision will be just as valid as mine."

In preparation for the opening of the traveling exhibit, Manhattan Parks and Recreation employees and volunteers from the Friends of the Sunset Zoo finish washing and painting temporary walls.

'Cats, Huskies prepare to battle again

By Scott Paske
Sports Reporter

Place a call to the Northern Illinois football office before Saturday, and you'll be greeted by the following:

"Good morning, Huskie Football. Beat the Wildcats. How may I help you?"

No evidence of panic from a 1-2 team that was expected to spend most of its season courting postseason bowl scouts.

"No, we're not really that worried yet," said Northern Illinois coach Jerry Pettibone. "We've still got good players and a lot of season left. They're not going to panic because they expect better things through the final eight games, and I do, too."

Pettibone ought to know. With 13 senior starters and a Heisman Trophy candidate back from last year's 9-2 team, the Huskie coach brings a talented, veteran crew into Saturday's non-conference matchup with K-State. Kickoff is slated for 6:35 p.m. at Huskie Stadium in DeKalb, Ill.

"We still have a lot to play for," said Pettibone, whose team dropped K-State 37-20 last season in Manhattan. "Kansas State is the first major conference opponent ever to come to our place. We're really looking forward to it."

So much so that the Huskie athletic department is forecasting the possibility of the largest crowd in NIU history. That fact, coupled with NIU's sub-par start, has 'Cat coach Bill Snyder concerned.

"It's a little frightening to me, because I know the quality of players that they have, and I know the quality of their program," Snyder said. "I'm sure they're focused on what's been going on, and I would imagine that their kids are highly motivated right now."

Pettibone expressed mutual concern toward K-State's first 2-0 start since 1982 — a beginning that included a 52-7 rout of New Mexico State last weekend at KSU Stadium.

"Don't think our kids haven't noticed," Pettibone said. "They know Kansas State has won big and piled up some awfully impressive numbers.

"It doesn't surprise me because I see the evolution of a program at Kansas State under Coach Snyder. I see a year of engrainment. Bill has had a year to put in his system, and his kids are comfortable with it. Their execution is so much better now. It's really showing."

K-State's execution, especially on defense, will be vital to Saturday's outcome. The Huskies feature a Wishbone attack, led by senior quarterback Stacey Robinson. Robinson had 22 carries for 168 yards and two touchdowns against the 'Cats last season.

"We debuted Stacey last year, and

Doran adjusting to life after another move

Lady Cat assistant coach Sue Doran came to K-State along with Coach Susan Yow from Drake. The duo hopes to win a Big Eight title.

Assistant coach follows mentor Yow to several stops on coaching road

By Russ Ewy
Sports Reporter

Patience is said to be a virtue, and Lady Cat assistant coach Sue Doran is betting that hers will pay off in the future.

After spending the past 11 seasons under new Lady Cat head coach Susan Yow, Doran is still waiting for the right time to break the ties and move on.

"I really haven't had the bug bite me, until maybe two years ago (to step into a head coaching position)," Doran said. "I think the reason for that was I just felt that I had a lot to learn, and Coach Yow is a great person to learn under. I enjoy working with Coach Yow, and I think right now we're a very good team, and there are things we want to accomplish as a team.

"I enjoy what I'm doing, and I just haven't been to a point where I'm unhappy, and I think I'd be happier as a head coach. I think somewhere down the road it will happen, but I'm just very content where I am right now and it's still challenging to me. I think if it ever got to where I wasn't challenged as an assistant coach, then I think I'd go and look for a head coaching position."

Doran first joined Yow's staff at East Tennessee State in 1980 and has followed her on stops at Drake and now K-State.

"When I was at East Tennessee State, we always looked at that as a middle-major program," Doran said. "That was a program that really did not have the resources to break into the Top 20.

"I felt like when we were at East Tennessee, we did all we could do with that program. We took that program as far as it could go," Doran said. "So it was either keep it there, or try to move on to a place where you could go farther as an individual coach."

Yow and Doran guided ETSU to a 21-9 record in 1981 and won the Southern Conference regular-season title in 1983, before moving on to Drake in 1986.

"When Drake contacted Coach Yow, she asked me if she made the transition if I would go with her as an assistant coach, and I told her I would," Doran said. "I think it would have done more for my career as an assistant coach to be at Drake than to try to stay at East Tennessee State.

"When we went to Drake, they had had just unbelievable success as a women's basketball program. Drake was a lot like East Tennessee State. I think Drake had a lot bigger commitment to women's basketball financially, but they were looked upon nationally as a middle-major program. They weren't a Big Eight, a Big Ten, an ACC, or SEC," she said. "With that regard, Drake was a lot like East Tennessee State in peoples' eyes, but in our eyes it was a step up because the commitment the administration had to the program was much greater."

Doran said the desire to move upward didn't stop there for both of them.

"Again I had to make another career move there — did I think that it was better to stay at Drake and try to get the head coaching job, or did I think I should come to Kansas State and try to be a part of building a program that had national prominence," Doran said, "then possibly move from that type of situation to a head coaching job?

Now at K-State, Doran said she's excited about what the future will hold and is looking to make her career moves to this point pay off.

"I think Kansas State has a tremendous commitment to women's basketball, and I think the Big Eight Conference is one of the premier conferences, in the Midwest particularly, also in the country," Doran said. "So it was just a logical step. If you're looking to try to get into a Top 20-type situation, a Kansas State would give you a must better chance of doing that than a Drake.

"I think that anytime you make a career move like that it's a gamble," she said. "In the long run, I could make better moves being an assistant at Kansas State than I could being a head coach at Drake. Now whether or not that comes to pass, I don't know, but I'm not the kind of person that's going to look back and think, 'What if?'"

As for her job, Doran says being in a Division I school in a large conference, recruiting is different.

"The whole time we were at Drake we recruited some very, very good athletes, and so many times we heard in the end 'I'm going Big Eight or Big Ten,'" Doran said. "We heard that for four years, and that's something that you can't change. You can't fight that.

"(At K-State) it's not like you're having to go into a recruit's home and say that we think it can be done here. We're saying it has been done here and we're going to get it done again," Doran said. "From that standpoint, we're not going in selling a dream or a wish, we're just selling the tradition and the commitment that Kansas State has."

Doran is also active nationally. Being a member of the Women's Basketball Coaching Association, as well as serving on the WBCA's Coaching Women's Basketball magazine editorial board, Doran enjoys the organization's purpose.

"Our organization is made up of junior high, high school and college coaches — all levels of college like Division I, II, III, NAIA," Doran said. "It's a way to get exposure of women's basketball at all levels out to women's basketball coaches of all levels.

"The WBCA is really striving to meet the needs of women's basketball coaches on all levels, not just focusing on the college part of the game," she said.

A member of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes, Doran helped start a program while at Drake and continues to work sports camps during the summer for the FCA.

"I ran the program at Drake," Doran said. "They did not have one, and the last two years I was at Drake, I had some athletes approach me wanting to start a group. With the help of a local church there and the help of those students we started one.

"The thing I like about FCA is that being an athlete is tough enough by itself, and I think being a Christian athlete is that much tougher," she said. "It's a group where people can get together with like-values and get support from each other."

KC's hockey team opens camp

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Two weeks will be enough time to build a competitive team in the International Hockey League, Doug Soetaert, the Kansas City Blades' head coach, said Thursday.

"That's enough time to accomplish what we want," Soetaert said. "I know after two weeks of training camp, players are usually tired of it anyway, so that's the right amount of time to get these guys prepared."

The Blades' training camp opened Thursday. But players weren't taking the ice for the first time until Friday at Bode Ice Arena in St. Joseph.

Soetaert expected 43 players on the ice — eight players under contract to the Blades and 35 free agents.

FAN FORUM

Support vital

Sports Editor,

The last time that a K-State team scored 50 points in a game, half of the current student body wasn't born yet. The 'Cats have barely missed shutouts two weeks in a row. The last time K-State blanked an opponent, Gerald Ford was president. These accomplishments, and the way our football team played on Saturday should be a great source of pride for the football program.

Anyone who confuses this program with the one that Bill Snyder inherited is sadly mistaken — Wildcat players now have a "can do" attitude. Coach Snyder is building a program, not quick fixing for a season. Steve Miller and the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics have risked a lot to provide the financial support needed. Everything has changed.

Everything, that is, except for one thing — the doubters. For a long time, many fans said, "I don't want to go see us lose." Well, now we are winning. So, what do they say? "It was a weak opponent." It is time to quit making excuses and support our team. I know K-State fans are the best in the nation, but we are too skeptical. Let's get out there and prove we're the best fans.

On Sept. 29, I want to see a huge crowd cheering our deserving Wildcats on to victory, and tonight, I'd like to see a lot of those people at the football complex to show our team that even on the road, we are behind them every step of the way.

From 7:30 to 8:15 p.m., the band, cheerleaders, Willie the Wildcat, ICAT and a local radio station will be there, but our team needs to see you out there. We will have free soft drinks, t-shirts for the first 100 people and other prizes. It will be fun, and it would mean a lot to our team.

Don't forget, the last time K-State started the season 3-0, our team went to a bowl game.

Swim meet crowns champions

As two people left the Natatorium adjacent to Ahearn Field House Thursday night, one said, "You ran off a great meet, Steve."

They were referring to Steve Martini, director of intramurals, and his work with the first big three-day intramural event.

The meet, labeled as a huge success by Martini, began Tuesday night with the preliminaries and concluded Thursday night with University finals.

"It went really well. There was a good turnout, especially in the fraternity division, and the women had a good turnout," Martini said. "It sounded like it was pretty good competition from the sound of the crowd."

In the fraternity division, which was up in the number of participants from last year, Sigma Nu emerged as the champion by beating Sigma Chi, 75-65. Phi Gamma Delta finished third with 59 points.

Sigma Nu was led by Andy Alderson and Brian Demmitt, who helped the team capture the 200-yard medley relay title. Alderson also captured the 50- and 100-yard breaststroke, and Demmitt won the 50-yard freestyle and the 100-yard individual medley.

In the women's division, Katy Stevenson of Delta Delta Delta stole the show with three individual titles. She won the 50- and 100-yard freestyle and the 50-yard butterfly.

However, Stevenson was not enough. Alpha Delta Pi won the team title with 76 points, followed by the Hydras with 70 points and Pi Beta Phi with 56 points.

The residence hall team championship was captured by the men of Haymaker 8, who squeaked by Marlatt 6 by four points, 54-50.

Seminar class teaches students different aspects of cultural life

By Carl Richert
Collegian Reporter

K-State's budget cutbacks within the past year have taken their toll and sliced into one freshman course, Freshman Seminar.

Originally 20 sections of the course scheduled this fall, but over the summer the course was cut in half, allowing only 150 freshman to take the class, said Michael Donnelly, course director and associate professor of English. The seminar is billed as an experience of a broader appreciation of the arts.

Although space is now limited for freshmen, he said, the class will still provide an opportunity to see various types of cultural life and the guidance to appreciate it.

Ann Warren, instructor of English, calls the class an introduction to college.

Students entering the University supposedly arrive with a wide variety of attitudes toward higher education, Warren said. The University offers this class, now in its third year, to allow those students to express those views.

The purpose of freshman seminar is to let freshmen see what the University offers outside the classroom, to encourage the students to express their own feelings and to provide a closer, more personal contact between classmates and faculty, Warren said.

"The feeling of having personal contact in the classroom is rewarding for students, but the faculty (especially big lecture professors) really enjoy it," Donnelly said.

Shawn Riffel, freshman in political science, said her adviser recommended the class after learning that Riffel was interested in attending cultural events.

"Our class discusses topics with fresh perspective on the events," Riffle said. "We are extremely diverse, but no one is judgemental."

Students attend one event each week and write a reaction paper due the next class period. In class, they have opportunity to give verbal opinions on the event.

Classes meet once a week for two and a half hours. The two credit-hour course is presented in the A/Pass/F format and is offered only in the fall semester.

Tallgrass preserve attracts tourists

Konza Prairie area draws enthusiasts from 2 countries

and

Nature enthusiasts from all over the United States and Canada will come to the Flint Hills near Manhattan Saturday to view an 8,600-acre preserve of the tallgrass prairie.

The Konza Prairie Research Natural Area, which stretches south of Manhattan along Highway 177 to Interstate 70, schedules an open house once every two years.

The visitors' day began six years ago to let visitors see more of the prairie than just the nature trail, which is the only part of the prairie that is normally unrestricted.

Assistant Coordinator Gary Merrill said it is probably the most intensively studied grassland in the world.

"Since it is a research facility, the prairie is restricted. This opens it up so people can see the research throughout the day," Merrill said.

Displays will be set up at the headquarters to show what research is being done. One display shows the different flowering times of the prairie's wildflowers.

While the displays show the research that is underway on the prairie, an introductory slide show describes the Konza Prairie, its habitats and the ecological studies that occur at the prairie. The prairie will hold tours ranging in length from one-half mile to five miles. Merrill explained there will be van tours to go see the bison herd.

"This is the first time we have taken people to see the buffalo," he said. "Our aim is to have 200 head of bison."

The purpose of the bison herd is to study the ecological effects large native grazers once had on the prairie.

Merrill said there also are plans to re-introduce elk and pronghorn antelope.

Konza Prairie derives its name from the Kansa Indians, after which the state is also named. Much of the research area was once the historic 10,000-acre Dewey Ranch.

"In the 1950s, C.P. Dewey was a railroad lawyer who has been described in various ways," Merrill said. "He made his fortune in Chicago buying real estate cheap and selling it high. Eventually he invested in land in Kansas. He sold his ranch here in Riley County in 1930."

After passing through several owners, the ranch was purchased by the Nature Conservatory in 1977 to add to a narrow strip of research prairie along Interstate 40. The nonprofit organization purchased the land for K-State, to be used for ecological research.

"There are roughly 100 distinct research projects being conducted on Konza Prairie. About half of those are being done by scientists in the K-State Department of Biology," Merrill said.

He also noted research projects by the agronomy, biochemistry, civil engineering, entomology, geography, geology and plant pathology departments. About one-third of the research is conducted by scientists not associated with the University.

"The Konza Prairie has been recognized as an international center of grassland research, and people are also recognizing the prairie as an important aspect of Kansas," said John Zimmerman, professor of biology.

Range burning experiments also are conducted on Konza Prairie.

"The prairie probably burned every five years naturally, under presettlement conditions," Merrill said. "Burning increases the amount of water reaching the soil and eliminates old grass residue that can inhibit the sprouting of new grass in the spring."

In addition, Konza Prairie is the site of national long-term ecological research.

Kansas family farms in danger

LOU DOUGLAS
PRE-LECTURE PANEL
David Orr "Refugees or Homecomers: The Reinhabitation of Rural America."

By Scott Levendofsky
Collegian Reporter

Low-input farming, economic changes and conscious government policy implemented to destroy the family farm were the topics of the Lou Douglas Pre-Lecture Panel Thursday in the K-State Union.

The panel consisted of Vic Studer from the Kansas Research Center; Gary Coates, professor of architecture; and Leonard Bloomquist, assistant professor of social anthropology and social work. The three panelists discussed environmental issues that will be addressed by David Orr at the Lou Douglas Lecture on 7:30 p.m., Sept. 25 in Forum Hall.

Studer, whose rural center studies environmental issues on 35 farms across Kansas, said that in recent history, agriculture has focused on short-term solutions instead of realizing the long-term consequences.

Studer said the results of these short—term solutions are putting rural communities in transition.

"Most projections indicate that by the turn of the century there will be only a few thousand farms in Kansas," Studer said.

Solutions to the weeding out of the small farms and chemical and pesticide reduction is found in a low-input farming program, she said. Low-input farming entails producing more diversified products and cutting production, resulting in strong conservation and a cleaner environment.

Bloomquist focused on Kansas' demographic trends in the 1980s. Very few spots in Kansas experienced a population increase in the decade, citing the areas around Garden City and the agricultural stretch between Salina and Wichita as increasing spots.

Bloomquist said the rest of Kansas has experienced a steady decrease in population, especially north-central Kansas as well as the south-east.

"Overall, the '80s were not good. We are faced with a very dismal future," Bloomquist said.

He said he believes economic

PRIMO begins group focus

By Cindy Jeffrey
Collegian Reporter

From the Middle East crisis to crushing aluminum cans, K-State's newest student organization has opened its first semester with a new focus.

PRIMO, which stands for Political Reaction to Issues of the Modern Order, kicked off its schedule of events with a brown bag luncheon discussion Wednesday at the K-State Union Plaza. The group followed the luncheon up with its first general meeting at the International Student Center Thursday night.

Chiquita Cornelius, executive director of the Kansas Business and Industry Recycling Program Inc., was PRIMO's first speaker. Cornelius spoke of waste disposal and the explosion of public awareness about recycling efforts.

Each day, four pounds of trash are generated per person in the United States, Cornelius said.

"Some states are in a crisis situation," she said. "New Jersey ships one half of their waste 500 miles."

Cornelius said Kansas is in good shape, with a landfill in each of its 105 counties. Most of the landfills have life of 40 to 50 years. This means Kansas has the advantage of time for adequate planning, she said.

"We need to start to recognize that what we put in the trash is not trash — it has value, and we need it back," Cornelius said. "One ton of paper represents 17 trees, and 40 percent of landfill is paper or paper products."

Nellis to serve on NASA panel

Mission to help shuttle journeys

By The Collegian Staff

Duane Nellis will be one of 20 people serving a one year term on an advisory panel for the NASA space shuttle's Earth Observation Program.

Nellis, head of the geography department, said he was first contacted by NASA in early summer and was recommended by one of NASA's staff members due to his link with the use of space shuttle photography.

Since then, he has met with other members of the panel and five astronauts that have been a part of past shuttle missions, Nellis said. The other advisory panel members come from government agencies, private foundations and university backgrounds.

"My particuliar interest as a geographer is remote sensing, which is the use of a mechanical sensor to monitor the Earth's surface," Nellis said.

James Underwood, professor of geology, said there are four planetary science divisions in the NASA program, each involving 100 to 150 individuals from various universities. Underwood, who has worked with NASA and Earth observations for 18 years, said the average budget for each program is $10 million a year.

The purpose of the Earth Observation Program is to enable the use of astronaut observations and photographs to increase the understanding of Earth processes.

"We prepared a draft report with suggestions to improve the Earth's observations program. That report was given to Earth Observation Program administrators for review, and in a spring meeting we will receive their feedback," Nellis said.

The panel is divided into four committees, with interest placed on atmospheric sciences, oceanography, earth sciences and biosciences.

Nellis said the panel made 11 primary recommendations, but the program targets only three key recommendations for NASA.

The first recommendation is to put an optical quality window in the space shuttles, because the present window does not provide enough clarity, Nellis said.

The second recommendation is to increase priority and effeciency of relaying the collected information that is associated with the Earth Observations Program.

The final recommendation is for the space shuttles to serve as platforms for testing new remote sensing systems as they relate to monitoring the atmosphere, oceanic system, bio-sphere and geomorphic systems.

Candidates discuss strategies

Manhattan NOW chapter will not endorse Hayden, Finney

By Elvyn Jones
Staff Reporter

Political discussion dominated Thursday night's meeting of the Manhattan chapter of the National Organization for Women.

Phyllis Wisneski, Manhattan NOW chapter president, said a state NOW conference will be meet this weekend in Parsons to make decisions on where the organization should put its money in the coming campaign.

"The organization will not support either candidate for governor," she said.

Teresa Parsons, Manhattan NOW chapter vice president, said Joan Finney's anti-abortion views are all that make her unacceptable to the organization.

"It's a conflict," Parsons said. "In terms of support of women and children, Joan Finney has a very good record, except on the issue of choice.

"I don't feel we can sell out," she said.

Wisneski said the chapter would be active in the campaign on the local level and would support the re-election of state representatives Katha Hurt, D-Manhattan, and Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan.

Both Hurt and Hochhauser were present at the meetings to discuss their campaigns and speculate what effect Finney's gubernatorial race will have on their re-election.

"I think Democrats will stay away from the polls," Hurt said. "Republicans will go to vote for Finnney and then vote for other Republican candidates."

Hochhauser said she expects much cross-over voting, but a light turnout would hurt Democratic candidates on the local level.

Hurt said she is in a tough race against her Republican challenger Kent Glasscock.

She said it is hard to find funding for programs of concern for women, such as education and affordable health care, because of the $2.65 billion highway construction program enacted by the legislature in 1989, which Glasscock supported.

This figure represents only part of the program's cost, she said.

"There will be another $1.7 billion in debt due after 1997 nobody knows how to fund," she said. "Something has to be done to reduce that program."

In addressing the same issue, Hochhauser said more highway construction has been promised than can be built with the appropriated money.

"Some communities — perhaps Manhattan, or Minneapolis or Beloit — are going to be out in the dark when they come to actually build the highways." Hochhauser said.

Marathon features drumming contest

Competition's goal to raise charity funds

By Heather Anderson
Collegian Reviewer

Many may cringe at the possible noise factor of 30 drummers pounding away in the "Bop 'Til You Drop" marathon drumming competition in Aggieville's Triangle Park this Saturday.

But Westron Wynde owner Vicki Shult, event coordinator, said it will give people an opportunity to see how enjoyable drums are to listen to as instruments.

"Many people think of drums as just noise and not instruments," Shult said.

"One of the things we're trying to do is raise awareness of the drums as a pleasant instrument to listen to by themselves," she said.

The competition, through pledges made to the competitors, will benefit the Manhattan Energy Assistance Fund. MEAF is a nonprofit organization that helps needy Manhattan residents pay their energy bills in the winter, Shult said.

The drummers themselves will also benefit, with a grand prize Simmons R2000 electric drum set. Second prize is a CV700 acoustic drum set with a power rack, and third prize is a Gibraltar power rack. Additional prizes will be awarded, all donated by Westron Wynde.

Shult said there will also be a wimp award given to the person who drops out first.

The competition begins at 9 a.m., and will continue in the park until there is one drummer remaining or 10 p.m., whichever comes first.

"Because we have to follow the city's noise ordinances, if there are still people going at 10 p.m., we'll take it inside the store for as long as we need to or call it quits and draw for the prizes among the remaining competitors," Shult said.

She said many of the competitors are K-State students, but some will be traveling from Topeka and Wichita.

Brian Fitzgerald, senior in architecture, is entered in the event.

"I've never played that long, but hopefully I can last about eight or 10 hours," he said. "Of course, I'd like to finish and win the grand prize, but I don't know how good everyone else is."

Fitzgerald plays in a band with some friends for fun, but he said the band doesn't really have a name.

"We're basically a jam band — we play songs we like and make up some new ones."

He said although he has seen better grand prizes, the amount of prizes given is impressive.

"I will gladly accept anything I win, because drums are pretty expensive," he said.

Fitzgerald said he looks forward to doing the event not only for himself, but because "charity events are pretty few and far between these days, and anything I can do helps."

Shult said "Bop Cops" will enforce the event, determining when a player has quit and checking for possible drug abuse.

"We want to make sure there isn't any chemical assistance, because we want it to be fair," she said.

Shult said this is the first competition for drummers of this sort that she knows of.

"Other people have done things for guitar players, and we thought it was time to do something for drummers," she said.

She said she thinks the audience will be surprised with what it hears.

"For the first hour or so, I imagine everyone will be trying to get their own licks off," she said. "But after a while, I think they will start listening to the people next to them, and play as sort of an ensemble.

"It should be one big drum jam."

THE RIDE
KSU STUDENT TRIPS TO ART MUSEUMS
made possible through the fine arts fee

The department of art will organize a series of trips to art museums throughout the current academic year. The student fine arts fee assessed at registration will subsidize the cost of the travel. Please take advantage of this wonderful opportunity to view exciting exhibits and collections in the region. Keep an eye on The Collegian for activities associated with THE RIDE.

The first trip will be to see an outstanding collection of drawings at the Salina Art Center, Salina, Kansas and to visit Lucas, Kansas to see the Garden of Eden (listed on the National registry of Historic Places). The collection of drawings at the Salina Art Center is entitled Training The Hand and The Eye: American Drawings from the Cooper-Hewett Museum. The exhibit includes exploratory drawings, and works in progress by 34 American artists including Winslow Homer, Frederic Church, Thomas Moran, and William Chase. The Garden of Eden was created by S.L. Dinsmoor, an eccentric Kansan. He built a home of native limestone and in the yard surrounding the house he created a concrete wonder that defies description. The first Ride will leave the K-State Union at 8:15 a.m. on Friday, October 5, 1990. Reservations are required.

Contact the Department of Art 532-6605, or stop by room 105 in the Art Building for information or to reserve your seat. Make your reservations by the end of the day on Monday, October 1st.

The cost of the trip will be eight dollars per person, includes bus transportation and entry fees.

'Postcards' showcases extraordinary actresses

Streep and MacLaine give insight to backstage life

By Richard Jones
Collegian Reviewer

"Postcards From the Edge," the newest product of the extraordinary talents of Meryl Streep and Shirley MacLaine, opened last weekend at the top of the box office heap.

Written by actress Carrie Fisher, "Postcards From the Edge" is a thinly disguised autobiography of actress/singer Debbie Reynolds' and singer Eddie Fisher's daughter.

Starring MacLaine as 1950s musical star Doris Mann and Streep as her troubled daughter Suzanne Vale, the film takes off through a fury of sex, drugs and alcohol.

Dennis Quaid pops up as Jack Falkner, a movie producer who seduces drug-addicted Suzanne near the opening of the film and awakes next to her nearly lifeless body the following morning.

Suzanne survives her drug overdose, but must then take on the challenges of therapy and dealing with her mother. In order to get a job in the industry, Suzanne must live with Doris and once again become her responsibility.

So the story goes. The bad news is the plot is anticlimactic and holds very little to enthrall the viewer. The good news is the dialogue is so well-composed and the talents are so entertaining that this movie has another leg to stand on when the plot gives out.

Having proved herself time and time again in the dramatic category and more recently in comedy with a hysterical performance in "She-Devil," Streep now combines the two with equal success. Is there nothing she can't do? As a matter of fact, there is.

COLLEGIAN
Report Card
"POSTCARDS"
A-

The last scene of the film features Streep singing — of all things — a country and western song. Two versions of it, no less. Her voice is great, as she proves in an earlier scene of "Postcards," but it was entirely too frightening to see the lead of "Sophie's Choice" get down and dirty with a country song.

MacLaine also entertains with song and proves herself as capable as Streep. Prior to this film, a total of 13 Academy Award nominations have been claimed between the two superstars.

Quaid was his usual fabulous self as the arrogant producer. His role may have been minor, but his talents aren't. He has continued to be an impressive screen presence.

Additional well-known talents spring up with the appearances of Gene Hackman, Richard Dreyfuss, Rob Reiner, Mary Wickes, Gary Morton and Conrad Bain. Oliver Platt, from the recent movie "Flatliners," turns up in a cameo role.

The film's soundtrack, arranged by Carly Simon, is no less star-studded. Songs in the film were written by Shel Silverstein, Stephen Sondheim, Cole Porter, Paul Shaffer and the late Gilda Radner.

In one particularly memorable scene, Suzanne dreams she is traveling down a pale white corridor surrounded by photographs of Judy Garland, Marilyn Monroe, Elvis Presley and other celebrities who have succumbed to the fatal effects of substance abuse. Grabbing a huge bottle of pills from a medicine cabinet, she turns around to see the horrible image of Nancy Reagan.

"Postcards From the Edge" is about the price of fame and, as Suzanne puts it, people who are "designed more for public than for private."

To forego this film would be to deprive yourself of an insightful look at another side of film stars. Whether today's stars suffer the same crises as those depicted here or not, this is the story of what they all must overcome.

what the required activities will consist of, and then the instructors have some flexibility to make additions in the schedule.

The program coordinators said they hope to continue and broaden the cultural experience for next year, but would also like to attend more cross-cultural events in the future.

Donnelly said he would not like to see this course required for all freshmen because of the proverbial saying, "You can lead a horse to water, but you can't make it drink." He said not all students would enjoy or even appreciate this course.

and added to the diversity theme of Opus with heavy blues, including two Stevie Ray Vaughn songs.

The Grunge played sixth, using very heavy metal sounds with heavy guitar and a few screams. Included in the set was an original song entitled, "Eric's Got a Gun."

Some audience members began slam dancing while the bands played.

Russ Perez, UPC program adviser, said he wasn't too concerned about the violence, even though they had no way to control the crowd.

"This is my first one," he said. "I'm pleased it's going really smoothly. I got a little worried during CREEP, but this one (The Grunge) will be over in 10 minutes, so I don't think it will be a problem."

Cornelius explained how her organization helps recycling centers get started with information about what is currently recyclable, where it can be sold, how it is processed and how to make the public aware.

Cornelius gave tips on how to begin recycling for individuals. She suggested requesting recycled paper at copy centers, identifying what recycling is being done on campus now and identifying the major wastes and what happens to them.

"One of the goals of PRIMO is to get recycling started," said Jodi Lookhart, president of PRIMO and senior in political science and international studies. "Our first step will be to contact other groups for a combined effort."

"It is difficult to become aware if there isn't information," said Tom Jones, senior in political science and one of the founders of PRIMO.

PRIMO evolved after a core group from the Political Science Club decided to disband last fall and re-focus its efforts on a new group, Lookhart said. Instead of lectures, the new group targets participation, discussions and the attraction of students from outside political science as its goals.

"When students get involved in discussions, that's when the classroom comes alive," Lookhart said. "The brown bag discussion series are planned with this kind of involvement in mind."

The group decided a new name, PRIMO, would attract more students, especially outside of the political science department.

The next brown bag discussion series will be at 12:30 p.m. Oct. 3 at the Union Plaza. The next general meeting will be at 7 p.m. Oct.2.

anchored at an Iraqi pipeline terminal in the Persian Gulf. U.S. officials say they are worried the oil-laden vessels might head for nearby Iranian waters and unload the oil to be sold through Iran.

"So far we have no indications of Iraqi tankers in Iranian waters," said State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler.

"We would expect Iran would take appropriate measures to prevent circumvention of the embargo in their territorial waters," Tutwiler said.

The CIA estimates that the naval blockade by the United States and its allies has stopped most of Iraq's oil shipments. The little that escapes the blockade goes mostly to neighboring Jordan, officials said.

The administration has turned a blind eye to those transfers — which violate the embargo on Iraq — because it says Jordan has scaled back its oil dependence on Iraq and Kuwait from 90 percent of its needs to 40 percent.

Iraq only profits from the sale by getting Jordan to forgive some of its wartime loans, officials say.

Jordan, which had been getting oil from Iraq at cut-rate prices, will be unable to buy much of it elsewhere unless it gets a large infusion of foreign aid, the officials said.

U.S. officials said they are considering how best to help Jordan, which has also been inundated with thousands of refugees from Kuwait.

he's a quality player, don't get me wrong," Snyder said. "But we made him good quicker than they thought he was going to be. We got him off on the right foot."

Robinson set an NCAA single-season record for quarterbacks with 1,443 yards. He finished 1989 as the nation's 11th best rusher, and flirted with an NCAA single-game record for rushing yardage by a quarterback with 281 in the season finale against Cincinnati.

So far this season, Robinson has drawn plenty of attention from opposing defenses. He has 288 yards through three games, considerably lower than his average of 118.2 yards per game a year ago.

"Teams are aware of Stacey, and they're trying to take him out of games," Pettibone said. "We've seen nine-man fronts with two people tackling Stacey every time he comes down the line."

Snyder joked about K-State's plans to stop the signal caller.

"We're going to put 12 men on the line, and four guys are going to tackle him when he has the ball," Snyder said. "Actually, though, what we did against him last year was sound. We think we have a good scheme against option football teams."

Opponents have forced Northern Illinois to throw the ball in its first three games. In a 28-17 win over Eastern Illinois, Robinson responded by completing 12-of-15 passes for 211 yards.

Robinson struggled in a 23-14 loss to Toledo last Saturday, completing just 5-of-22 attempts.

"If you can force them to throw the football, you'd think you would have a better chance," Snyder said. "I think with any option-oriented football team, you'd like to be able to make them throw when you want them to."

Pettibone said his defense would have its hands full stopping the 'Cats' skill position players.

"K-State has two of the best receivers in the country in Michael Smith and Frank Hernandez, and a great one to throw it to them in Carl Straw," Pettibone said. "And with Patrick Jackson, they've done an excellent job of getting him the ball. I know if I was coaching him, I'd want the ball in his hands as many times as I could get it to him."

"This would give K-State our first branch campus while also moving us into the fifth or sixth largest community," he said.

The last item discussed by the regents dealt with the Margin of Excellence and a 10 cent cigarette tax proposal to fund the MOE's third year.

The proposal was drawn up by the Council of Presidents, which includes all the presidents from regents' institutions.

"This proposal suggests to the Board of Regents a source of revenue to complete the third year by using a tax source," said Stanley Koplik, executive director of the regents. "This shows that the board is steadfast in the preseverance of the Margin of Excellence."

Koplik and Regent Robert A. Creighton will be on the K-State campus today to meet with administrators and faculty.

changes and developing an appreciation for the quality of rural life are possible solutions in reversing the population decrease.

"We need to change people's mindset," Bloomquist said. "There is often a negative image attached to rural areas, when in fact, rural areas offer a valuable quality of life."

In dealing with farm operations, Coates said the fossil fuels used by the new corporate techno-farmers are finite resources.

"You can't have a society dependent on finite energy sources," Coates said. "As we continue down the path of fossil fuels, we are going to be faced with problems — and we better be ready for it."

Coates said most of the farm and environmental problems in question were the result of conscious public policy.

"These problems were created by government policy, and the only way to solve the problem is through government legislation and policy," he said.

Bush to see African leader

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — South African President F.W. de Klerk arrived Sunday for talks with President Bush on ways in which the United States can help that country bring about a peaceful transition to a non-racial system.

But the visit, the highlight of which will be a lengthy White House discussion today, has been clouded by an upsurge of violence that has claimed more than 750 lives in black South African townships in recent weeks.

Still, Bush's encounter with de Klerk is something of a milestone in U.S.-South African relations. No South African head of state has visited Washington since 1945 and the two countries were barely on speaking terms as recently as a few years ago.

De Klerk said on arrival Sunday he was bringing a message of hope for the future of his country and for all of southern Africa.

"We are proceeding irreversibly on the road to a new South Africa, where justice, the guarantees of constitutional democracy and the rule of law will bring lasting peace and prosperity to all our people," de Klerk said.

His stay here ends Tuesday night.

A senior administration official who briefed reporters on Friday said the invitation to de Klerk recognizes the "bold leadership" he has provided in seeking a way out of the apartheid era in South Africa.

During the talks, Bush will explore "what role the United States can play in helping to promote the negotiating process in that country," said the official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

"Our interest is to promote a peaceful transition, through negotiations, to a post-apartheid, democratic, non-racial South Africa," he said. Congress has approved $10 million to give impetus to the negotiating process.

The official said the visit was not designed to bring about an end to the economic sanctions the United States imposed against South Africa in 1986. South Africa has fulfilled some but not all of the requirements the legislation imposes for the sanctions to be lifted.

The sanctions included a ban on new U.S. investment in South Africa and suspension of landing rights for South African planes in the United States.

Officials have said the sanctions can be lifted once South Africa's remaining political prisoners are released and the state of emergency is lifted in Natal Province. Emergency rule was ended elsewhere in South Africa earlier this year.

De Klerk said Saturday before his

Regents to focus on MOE funding

By Jan Puls
Staff Reporter

Funding for the third year of the Margin of Excellence is the highest priority on the Board of Regents' agenda, said Regent Chairman Robert Creighton at a news conference Friday.

Creighton and Regent Executive Director Stan Koplik met privately to discuss various issues and concerns with administrators, faculty, staff members and students Friday. K-State was the seventh stop for board members on their annual tour of all the regents schools.

"We believe that there is an excellent chance that the third year of the Margin will be funded," Creighton said. "The governor stated in his State of the State address last year that the third year is a dream deferred. It was impossible to fund it last year."

Gov. Mike Hayden supports the Margin and wants it funded this year, Creighton said. He plans to fund the program with a 10-cent tax on cigarettes. The tax is expected to generate about $20 million.

"The request the Board of Regents is making to the Legislature this year is $57.5 million new money added to our base budgets," Creighton said. "It is unrealistic to think we could get all of that from the general fund, so the Governor's proposal for a new source of money is important to the strategy of getting the Margin funded for the coming year."

The proposed qualified-admissions policy for state universities is another recurring concern among regents schools, Creighton said.

Kansas has an open-admissions policy which allows any high school graduate to attend a state university. The new admission proposal would limit enrollment to students with at least a 2.0 grade point average in core high school courses, a 23 on the ACT college entrance exam or a rank in the top 30 percent of their class.

"I don't believe there is any member of the Board of Regents opposed to the open-admissions policy, and yet we're all committed to the qualified-admission requirements," Creighton said. "Qualified admissions is not a closed-admission policy. It is not a policy to exclude at all. All we're asking is that students prepare themselves before they come to our schools."

Regents schools will not lower their standards to accommodate unprepared students, Creighton said. Unprepared students waste the resources of the University as well as their own money.

Retaining money freed by reorganization efforts at K-State was a main

DeLaFont's act ends in arrest

Recent area shows unmarred by police

By Shannon Heim
Collegian Reporter

"Hypnotist" Richard DeLaFont was arrested for performing hypnotic exhibitions at a nightclub in Hays Tuesday.

DeLaFont, whose real name is Thomas L. Williams, was arrested during his performance at The Home. Kansas statutes prohibit hypnotic exhibitions in public.

DeLaFont

Tom Drees, county assistant attorney from Ellis County, said officers had planned to arrest DeLaFont after the show. When a volunteer fell off his chair on stage, however, the officers asked DeLaFont to stop.

Similar charges were filed against the owner of the nightclub, Ken Gottschalk, on Thursday. Lawerence Younger, Hays chief of police, said Gottschalk was charged because he had been warned that the act was illegal after a performance at The Home several months ago.

Last year, DeLaFont was fined by the Riley County Police Department after he performed at Bushwackers in Aggieville. He appeared at Bushwackers again this year from Sept. 10-13 but was not arrested.

Although advertisements for the performances of "hypnotist Richard DeLaFont" ran in the Collegian and were posted in Bushwackers, the RCPD said it was unaware of the shows.

"We weren't aware that the individual was there, so we made no plans with officers for taking action," said Lt. Buddy Mays, RCPD.

Mays said officers walking in Aggieville last year overheard talk of the hypnotist act, and after filing a report with the county attorney, charged DeLaFont with the misdemeanor.

The Hays Police Department was aware that DeLaFont was going to be at The Home.

"He hands out information that specifically says he is a hypnotist and that he alters the state of mind," said Younger.

The officers got there after he had

Kuwaiti students affected by invasion

3 K-Staters unable to return to U.S.

By Elvyn Jones
Staff Reporter

Three K-State students from Kuwait were unable to return to school this fall because of the invasion of Kuwait by Iraq.

Imad Dashti, graduate student in economics; Nael Al-Buloushi, senior in computer engineering; and Khaled Al-Buloushi, senior in industrial engineering, are stranded in the gulf region, said Abdullah Khayrallah, senior in graphic design and a Kuwaiti national.

Two of the students returned to Kuwait during summer break and were stranded when the country was occupied, Khayrallah said.

Khaled Al-Buloushi was in Manhattan during the invasion but left for Saudi Arabia about a month ago with the intention of going to Kuwait, he said.

"He wished to find out about his wife and children," Khayrallah said.

He said the Manhattan Kuwaiti community has not heard from him since his departure but has communicated with Imad Dashti.

Hussain Dashti, graduate student in architecture, said his brother, Imad, called him two weeks ago from a pay phone in Baghdad, Iraq, after a dangerous drive from Kuwait.

His brother had returned to Kuwait to get married this summer and had returned to Kuwait from his honeymoon three days before the invasion, he said.

"He can't leave now, and I don't believe he wants to," Dashti said.

The call was being monitored, and his brother had to avoid certain subjects, he said.

"Any time I would mention violence, he would change the subject," Dashti said. "The operator would break in and ask if we were done yet."

His brother was able to tell him something about life in Kuwait after the occupation and the fate of his family, he said.

"My father has asked my cousins to come live with him," Dashti said. "We have a big house, and it is less exposed to violence than where my cousins lived.

"Two of my cousins are in the military," he said. "They have been arrested for being in the resistence."

Dashti said his brother told him that they had a little food stored in the house but that it would not last long. His brother said the people of Kuwait are volunteering for work previously done by foreign workers.

Khayrallah said he had a plane ticket for an August flight to Kuwait, but the invasion came before he was scheduled to visit home.

Though he is lost the price of the ticket, Khayrallah said his main concern is the well-being of his mother and other family members.

"I have a large family, seven brothers and three sisters," Khayrallah said. "All are married and have children."

Khayrallah said he is greatly concerned for two brothers in the army and one in the national guard who might have been in the fighting during the invasion or targeted for special treatment by the Iraqi army.

"My brother (in the national guard) might have been in the fighting around the palace," he said. "They could all be dead; I haven't heard anything."

While worrying about their families in Kuwait, the students are trying to cope with other problems stemming from the invasion.

Association plans protest of actions

By Dan Scott
Collegian Reporter

The Kuwaiti Student Association plans a demonstration today in front of the K-State Union from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

"It's going to be a quiet, peaceful demonstration," said Abdullah Khayrallah, senior in graphic design and president of the association. "There's not going to be any shouting going on."

Khayrallah said the group will sit in front of the Union and hold signs. No formal speeches are planned.

"If anyone wishes to talk to us, to ask questions, we will be happy to answer," Khayrallah said. "We want to show our presence on campus."

The demonstration is being held in conjunction with National Free Kuwait Day. The day is being proclaimed by governors, mayors and university presidents across the nation, according to a press release issued by Citizens for a Free Kuwait, a Washington, D.C.-based organization.

"We went through the application and were approved," Khayrallah said of getting Monday proclaimed National Free Kuwait Day at K-State.

As of Friday afternoon, K-State President Jon Wefald had no knowledge of such a proclamation.

"Nobody has contacted me," Wefald said. "This is the first time I've heard about it."

The K-State group is a branch of Citizens for a Free Kuwait. Khayrallah said he and others were contacted about forming a group at K-State through the Kuwaiti Embassy in Washington, D.C. He said the group was organized in the first week after the Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait by Iraq.

The K-State group has five members, all Kuwaiti citizens.

"Three are still in Kuwait that go to K-State but can't make it now," said Hussain Dashti, graduate student in architecture and member of the association.

Dashti barely avoided getting caught in Kuwait.

"I left a week before the crisis," Dashti said. "I heard about it when I was in London on my way to the United States."

Several weeks ago, the group circulated a petition condemning the invasion. Khayrallah said they obtained more than 600 signatures. The petition will be presented to Congress by the Kuwaiti Embassy.

Japanese remarks prejudiced

TOKYO (AP) — A Japanese Cabinet minister's offhand suggestion that American blacks ruin white neighborhoods reflects the deep prejudices and provincialism that still hinder Japan's much-touted internationalism, analysts say.

Justice Minister Seiroku Kajiyama's public comments Friday, in which he compared blacks to prostitutes, were the latest to aggravate relations between Japanese politicians and U.S. minorities. Blacks also have heard themselves belittled in recent years as illiterate and financially irresponsible.

Each incident has drawn howls of U.S. protest. Yet such comments keep cropping up because Japan, for all its export savvy and love of Western goods, remains in many ways as isolated from Western thinking as it has for most of its long history, observers say.

"Japan is a society of fundamental discrimination against other ethnic and racial groups," said Patricia Steinhoff, former head of the University of Hawaii's Center for Japanese Studies.

"Japanese politicians used to be able to get away with this kind of thing, but now all of a sudden they can't" because of adverse publicity, she said. "I don't really think they know where to draw the line."

Saudi Arabia cancels holiday

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Saudi Arabia canceled all official celebrations of the kingdom's National Day holiday Sunday as a gesture of solidarity with the Kuwaiti people.

The official Saudi Press Agency said a statement from the royal court had informed Saudi embassies worldwide to refrain from official celebrations because of the suffering endured by the Kuwaiti people since the Aug. 2 Iraqi invasion.

Gaps apparent in blockade

DHAHRAN, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Seven weeks after the United Nations imposed sanctions on Iraq, military equipment and other material with war potential continues to slip through the naval web, U.S. officers said Sunday.

The officers said shipments marked for delivery to the Jordanian port of Aqaba are actually being taken overland to Iraq.

The amount and type of cargo passing through Aqaba is classified information. But officers familiar with the situation indicate the flow has been fairly extensive. They say their suspicions are based partly on confidential intelligence data.

One cargo vessel, intercepted by the U.S. Navy within the past week, carried British-made Land Rovers painted in military camouflage, they said. They said they could not reveal where the cargo was coming from. Another ship was carrying a load of scrap metal, aluminum, silica and other materials that are "basic components in the manufacture of explosives," one officer said.

Soviets allow church service

MOSCOW (AP) — Patriarch Alexi II, head of the Russian Orthodox Church, led a Divine Liturgy in the Kremlin's Uspensky Cathedral on Sunday, the first full service allowed in more than 70 years in Russia's most important cathedral.

Before the 1917 revolution, the 15th-century church was the most sacred in the country. Under its five golden-onion domes, czars were crowned, patriarchs were buried and conquered princes swore allegiance to Russia.

Since 1918, however, it has been a museum and closed to ordinary worship. The government's decision to allow the Sunday service was an important symbolic step in the revival of the Orthodox Church, long repressed by the Communist Party because of ideological opposition to religion.

Teen welfare families increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government spent more than $21.5 billion last year on welfare programs for families started by teen-agers, according to a report released Sunday.

The amount is $1.7 billion higher than for 1988 — partly because of inflation and expansion of Medicaid benefits but also due to an increase in births to teen-agers, according to the Center for Population Options report.

The figures illustrate the need for greater efforts to prevent teen-age pregnancies — including sex education, family-planning counseling, support for delaying sexual activity, access to contraception, and medical services, including abortion, the report said.

Man survives grizzly attack

CODY, Wyo. (AP) — A hunter recovering from a grizzly bear attack says he didn't think he would live when the bear had his head in its mouth and started to chew.

"I just knew she was going to kill me," Ed Higbie said from his hospital bed.

But Higbie got lucky. Apparently he broke one of the bear's legs with the one shot he fired before the bear overtook him. A hunting companion heard that shot and Higbie's shouts and killed the bear.

The Cody real estate agent was attacked on Sept. 12 while he and some friends were hunting elk in rugged terrain in the Teton Wilderness near Yellowstone National Park.

Honeymoon begins in tree

STATELINE, Nev. (AP) — It was not the marriage made in heaven that they had envisioned, but newlyweds Kenneth and Stephanie Miller were in good spirits after the hot-air balloon they exchanged their vows in crashed into a tree.

The balloon, with six people aboard, was launched at Gardnerville, Nev., 15 miles east of Lake Tahoe. But an unexpected easterly breeze caught it and sent it west as the Rev. Miriam Lee tied the knot at 10,000 feet.

The balloon deflated after it struck a tree on Kingsbury Grade, near Lake Tahoe. The basket fell slowly to the ground, and no one was hurt.

"We do specialty weddings but we don't guarantee such exciting landings," Lee said.

Oukrop awarded KPW honor

Carol Oukrop, director of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications, was named the 1991 Kansas Press Women Communicator of Achievement Saturday at the Kansas Press Women state conference in Colby.

KPW is a state organization of more that 200 communicators whose goal is to uphold and uplift the communications profession with an emphasis on womens' roles.

Oukrop has served as assistant professor, associate professor, professor, department head and director at K-State. She was instrumental in transforming K-State's journalism program from department status to school status. The K-State journalism program was re-accredited in May 1990 under Oukrop's leadership.

Oukrop said the journalism faculty members worked hard in the drive to re-accredit the department.

Being named KPW Communicator of Achievement was a great surprise, she said.

By winning the state achievement, Oukrop automatically becomes a nominee for the National Press Women Communicator Award.

Tuttle Creek site for UPC rappelling

Students beat fear while trusting rope

By The Collegian Staff

"Going over the edge is the hardest part of rappelling," said Chris Rockey, junior in elementary education. She was one of about 40 people who attended one of the total of four two-hour courses Saturday and Sunday on rappelling at the tower at Tuttle Creek Dam.

Students and community members were given the opportunity to rappel through a program sponsored by Union Program Council Outdoor Recreation Committee.

Participants had to pay a $25 deposit and $8 to rappel.

> —Eric Wolf
> junior in agriculture education

"We supply the equipment and give a short demonstration on how to rappel, but we are mostly here to provide safety," said Tim Rice, assistant instructor.

There is one meeting before the actual event to explain the equipment and how it works.

Jennifer Tuvell, chairperson for the Outdoor Recreation Committee, said, "This trip has always been really popular. We have added more sessions to better accommodate people."

"Most people rappel because it is a new experience for them to try, and it is something that you can not do by yourself — special equipment is needed," Tuvell said.

Participants in the event did not have to provide any equipment. The only requirement was wearing snug-fitting clothing, since loose clothing can get tangled in the ropes.

Doug Schwenk, event instructor, has been rappelling for seven years.

"It is safe. There are two ropes around you at all times, with breaking strengths in excess of 4,500 pounds," Schwenk said. "Rappelling is not really physically demanding. You control your speed with a rope."

Participants are required to sign agreements releasing the U.S. government and UPC of any responsibility in case of an accident. "Other than a skinned knee, no one has been hurt," Rice said.

"Most of the people that come out to rappel don't know how," Schwenk said.

Eric Wolf, junior in agriculture education, said, "I have always wanted to rappel, but I didn't want to join the Marines to learn how, so this was a good opportunity."

The UPC Outdoor Recreation Committee offers this event and a rock-climbing trip every year.

"The rock-climbing trip allows people to use some of the skills they learn rappelling," Schwenk said.

Agriculture college tightens belt

Classes untouched despite cut budget

By Danette King

The College of Agriculture has stood by its commitment of not cutting classes as budget monies are reduced.

Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture, said he believes the college will not cut classes even if the budget is further reduced.

Woods emphasized the importance of educating students by saying that the College of Agriculture will go through belt-tightening actions in operating and staffing before cutting classes.

"We did not cut any classes (due to budget reductions) because we felt it was critical to the program," said Woods. "With the College of Agriculture being so heavily involved in teaching, research and extension, state funds are extemely important, especially in research and extension."

Woods said responsibility for the planning of the budget lies with the associate deans and with his position.

This team set up a plan for 1990-91 fiscal year that includes five management goals.

First, the fiscal-year budget is planned around allocated monies, and if no changes are made during the year, the college will be able to operate successfully on the planned budget.

Second, a potential decrease in federal funds would lead to the reassessment of the budget as well as a change in recruitment policy.

The college's recruitment policy is now open and the college is trying to fill a variety of openings, including an associate director of Cooperative Extension position that was vacated early this summer.

Third, a budget reduction would decrease the flexibility of the departments and central agencies within the College of Agriculture.

Woods commented that this would most likely be a 2-percent decrease across all departments within the college.

Fourth, all departments have been instructed to stay within the preset budget and to assess their position within that budget throughout the fiscal year, Woods said.

THE RIDE

KSU STUDENT TRIPS TO ART MUSEUMS
made possible through the fine arts fee

The department of art will organize a series of trips to art museums throughout the current academic year. The student fine arts fee assessed at registration will subsidize the cost of the travel. Please take advantage of this wonderful opportunity to view exciting exhibits and collections in the region. Keep an eye on The Collegian for activities associated with THE RIDE.

The first trip will be to see an outstanding collection of drawings at the Salina Art Center, Salina, Kansas and to visit Lucas, Kansas to see the Garden of Eden (listed on the National registry of Historic Places). The collection of drawings at the Salina Art Center is entitled Training The Hand and The Eye: American Drawings from the Cooper-Hewett Museum. The exhibit includes exploratory drawings, and works in progress by 34 American artists including Winslow Homer, Frederic Church, Thomas Moran, and William Chase. The Garden of Eden was created by S.L. Dinsmoor, an eccentric Kansan. He built a home of native limestone and in the yard surrounding the house he created a concrete wonder that defies description. The first Ride will leave the K-State Union at 8:15 a.m. on Friday, October 5, 1990. Reservations are required.

Contact the Department of Art 532-6605, or stop by room 105 in the Art Building for information or to reserve your seat. Make your reservations by the end of the day on Monday, October 1st.

The cost of the trip will be eight dollars per person, includes bus transportation and entry fees.

American influence not necessarily good

Andrei Sakharov had this great theory that goes something like this: Eventually the superpowers will converge and their economic systems will be as one. Then there will be peace and happiness.

By popular demand, the Soviet Union has undergone even more governmental and economic changes over the past few weeks. Though it seems they're going through changes faster than they actually change, it should remind America how much we don't.

According to the new 500-day plan, brought about by a little-known Soviet economist Stanislav Shatalin and adopted by just about every Soviet leader as his own, times in the Soviet Union are soon to be a-changin'.

Land may soon be privately owned, and prices on goods will be set by the market, rather than the centralized bureaucracy. There will be credit, and there may soon be only one kind of worthless money. Hard-currency trade will be allowed, and there will be unemployment insurance for those who lose jobs through reforms.

That's certainly a lot to swallow. It also shows how much influence the United States is having on them. And if they're trying to be like us, then perhaps the Soviet Union should have higher aspirations.

The people there are marching in the streets demanding bread, of all things. Go to any Food-4-Less here in Manhattan and you have your choice: wheat, white, Rain-bo, Wonder, Roman Meal, generic brands, bread with raisins, bread with pecans, bread with walnuts, and on and on and on.

In fact, Soviet rebel-with-a-cause and Russian president Boris Yeltsin once visited an American grocery supermarket and said if his people could have seen it, it would spark another revolution.

Any self-respecting Soviet citizen would sell his or her children for just a normal old pair of Wranglers, whether they'd fit or not. Yet you can go to the mall here and find any kind of blue jeans you want. Stone-washed, tapered-leg, button-fly, zipper-fly, black, white, green, beige, holey, ripped, old or new.

Soviets are striking because they don't have any cigarettes while we Americans smoke with reckless abandon.

Yes, America has the best of everything. Unfortunately, we also have the worst of everything. Though we can say anything we care to, most of us don't care to. We can walk to Bonanza, fill ourselves and go to bed without wondering how many children in the world sleep hungry. We have the power to vote, yet election officials brag when they have 48 percent voter turnout.

A little revolution would do our fair country a world of good. We are the nation of the status quo, where it's safe to say, "If it ain't broke, don't fix it. If it's broke, keep your mouth shut or you'll rock the boat and get someone's attention."

We are the land of the free and home of the brave. Perhaps that line of our national anthem should be changed to land of the bought and sold and the home of the bereaved because our great Uncle Sam is coming home drunk on payday to beat his wife, Lady Liberty.

God bless America. Because we need it.

God bless the Soviet Union. May they have better luck with freedom than we did.

No easy solution to crisis

Kevin Zwink

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

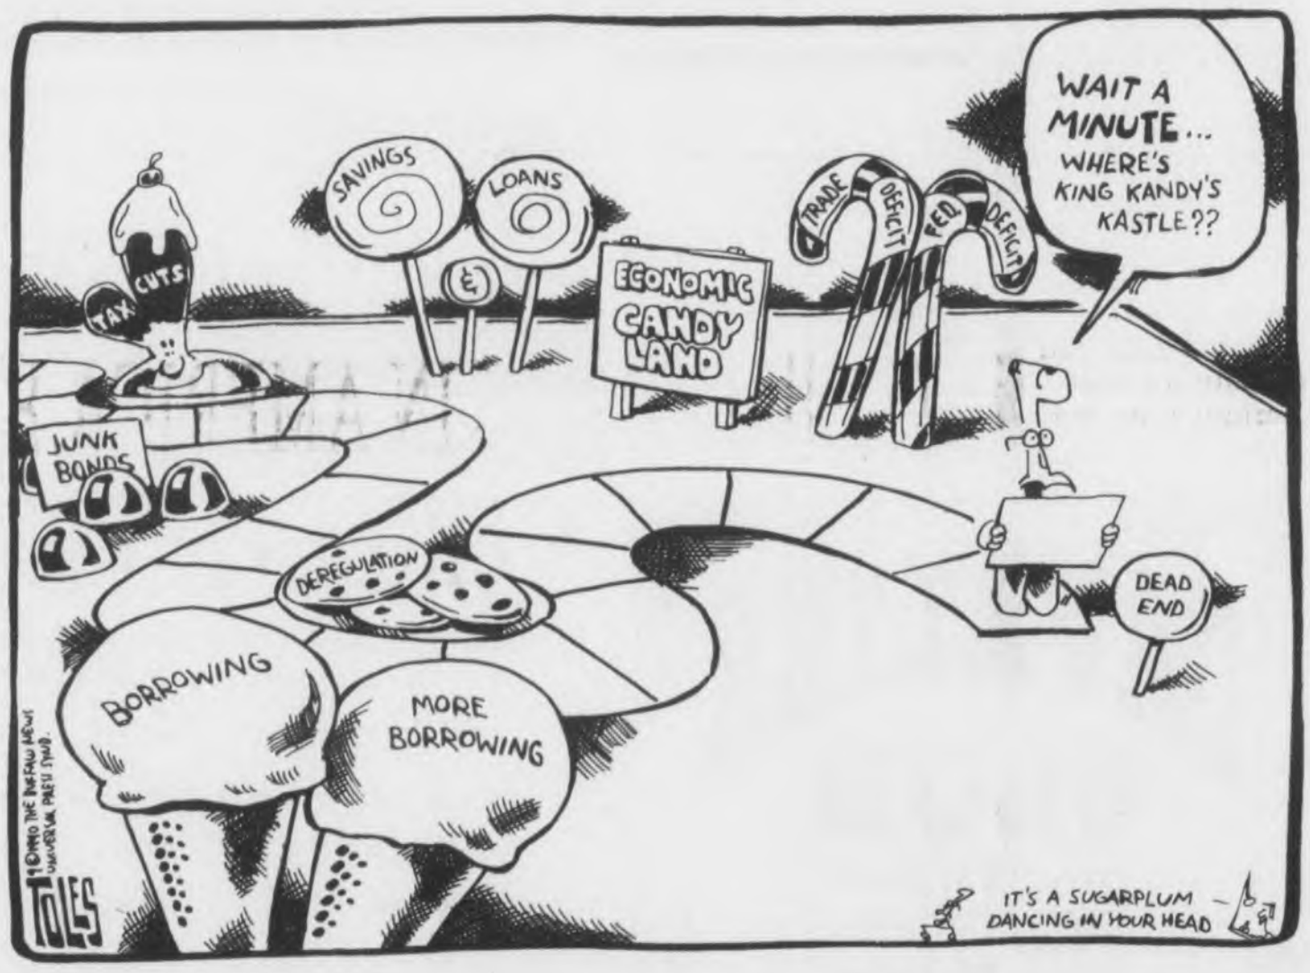
Does growing up in this world mean that I, as a single individual, must learn to be a spectator? A powerless member of an overpopulated audience continually overwhelmed by so many seemingly idiotic world developments. Since Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait, I've learned to play the role of powerless spectator watching the Gulf crisis escalate to its present precarious position. My characteristic American-average-citizen attempts at ignoring this international development have failed. My feeble telepathic messages of love have failed. I now participate by observation. The crisis is a crisis. A reality. What are the implications of this reality?

There will be no quick, easy solutions. The hope for an instant resolution to this crisis, which is a stated motive for United States deployment, does not seem possible. President Bush's motives are clear in his dealings with these Middle East developments. His actions rest on the hope that the United States can flex its muscles and Iraq will cower into submission. A show of machismo will merely reaffirm our immense, undeniable worldwide popularity. We're so great.

Chances are that it will be necessary to strike. Most definitely air strikes will be more effective than they were in Vietnam. Vegetation is a little more scarce. Perhaps citizens of Iraq will see what a farce their king is and have him assassinated. I wonder how many of our country's leaders have played with this thought?

No matter what options Saddam Hussein chooses, there are long-lasting implications. If he decides to withdraw from Kuwait and submit to all of President Bush's orders, there will still be the need for strong military presence in the Middle East. It will be imperative to assume our honored role as World Police.

Our actions appear to be those of an aggressor. We're right, and they're wrong. We shouldn't leave a face-saving option open to them because they need to be humilated and learn their lesson. Maybe it would have been better to let the Middle East solve their own problems. We could have remained only indirectly involved, as we have been in most of the other Middle East problems. We are directly involved in this situation.



It may have been a decisive element in deterring a modern-day Hitler when the United States acted so quickly. That is if he is truly a certified megalomaniac. It's been suggested and sounds reasonable that the United States should now turn over military charge to a multinational organization. I doubt the American ego could deal with this. We will remain in charge in hopes that all of our actions will be met with international approval.

One of the saddest things I've experienced while growing up is the truth that money is so essential to living. Utopian fantasies are an adult reaction to the understanding that what lies at the core of human existence is an economic principle. We must not underestimate any economic lesson we're taught.

The United State's fight for freedom's cause is a legerdemain used to conceal economic motives and induce mass patriotic hypnosis. Don't get me wrong. I love America. But Iraqis love Iraq. Germans love Germany. And the Japanese love Japan and etc. If the American way of life is threatened, then action is required. If the Iraqi way of life is threatened, then action is required. Or as Hitler says, "When the race is in danger of being oppressed ... the question of legality plays only a secondary role." If an individual's boundaries of freedom are encroached upon, then they have a right to defend those boundaries through any means necessary.

Sanctions without force will probably prove ineffective. There are many ways of getting around them, and they all will be tried. But sanctions will probably prove more effective than usual due to international support and Iraq's lack of self-sufficiency. But a nation will be in danger of being oppressed. Legality will play a secondary role. The end results will not be a cowering submission but a direct and bloody conflict. War in any form will happen.

I suppose this is all a part of maturing. I'll learn how to deal with war as an honest and responsible person. I suppose I should feel honored at the chance to be involved in a holy war. I suppose I'll learn to be a spectator and watch war on television. And when I'm older, I can tell my kids what a terrible thing war is and always to respect their country and to believe in the leaders of state. I'll tell them that they know what is going on because if they didn't, they wouldn't be in such a powerful position. Then I'll give them each five bucks and send them on their way.

War unnecessary

Editor,

As everyday passes, more Americans are sent to Saudi Arabia. Each time a new American soldier sets foot on Saudi soil, the odds are increased that the United States will become involved in a war with Iraq to be fought in both Iraq and Kuwait.

Sadly, I have heard some students make comments such as, "We'll kick their asses in a week — two at the most." In Korea it took $18 billion and 33,647 dead Americans to figure out that we were in a war we shouldn't have been in. In Vietnam the price was higher: 56,565 dead and more than $180 billion. Have not we learned anything from recent U.S. history?

The Iraqis are hardened soldiers. They have one million men who have been fighting Iran for 8 years. Assuming we indeed win a war with these people, the toll of lifeless American men and women will be high. CNN reported that President Bush wants to increase American troops in Saudi Arabia to 265,000. If we go to war, many of them will come home wrapped in plastic. Instead of blood flowing through their veins, there will be stagnant formaldehyde pooling in their bodies, preserving them until they can go through a glorified funeral.

The only way I think we should maintain a military presence in the Middle East would be as part of a U.N. peace-keeping force. This force would not be 90 percent American but rather made of equal numbers of Soviet, Chinese and U.S. soldiers, the three large members of the U.N. Security Council. Why aren't the Kuwaitis at K-State seeking military training so they can go home and liberate Kuwait? It disgusts me to see our military used as a mercenary group. The Bush administration tries to legitimize this possibility of war by saying that Kuwaiti and Saudi Arabia will pay the bill. I believe economic sanctions are the best way to force Iraq to withdraw from Kuwait.

If we do end up in a war with Iraq, I think we should change the name of the Defense Department back to the Department of War because we sure the hell will not be defending our borders on the other side of the globe. We will offensively be gaining access to Iraqi and Kuwaiti oil fields. I would rather pay a slightly higher price for gas. Who knows, maybe we will finally realize how perversely wasteful we have been and try to conserve rather than have Iraqi nerve gas saturate the sands in the Middle East. Maybe it will take another 50,000 dead Americans to make us realize that we shouldn't be in this war. God, I hope not.

Patience needed

Editor,

I have a few words of wisdom for Coach Bill Snyder and Athletic Director Steve Miller. Please be patient. I know it must be frustrating to put millions and millions of dollars into a program only to see it improve but have attendance stagger. But I also know that fan support is not going to happen overnight. Just as it is going to take a long time to make K-State football into a contender, it will take an equally long time to convince the fans that they have a winner. The fans were fooled in 1982, and I think they are waiting to make sure that they are not fooled again.

I know this sounds weak on their part, but I believe that, in time, the fans will realize Snyder is putting a quality product on the field. Unfortunately, time is not on our side. Our sports budget is $2 million in debt and can't afford too many more bad football seasons. But you have to spend money to make money, right? Miller has stuck out his neck for this whole program and I can understand his concern, but he has to realize that K-State has been a consistent loser for 20 years. It will take a while for that support we once had to build back up.

I went to all of the games last year and have been to both games this year. The difference is like night and day. The talent has risen, but the big difference is in the players' attitudes. They now believe they can win. However, that didn't happen overnight. It took at least a year, and maybe it will take that long for the fans to come around. I believe if the team keeps up the effort they are now giving, the attendance will increase — but not all at once like the athletic department wants. Just give it some time, guys.

Album reflects diverse sounds

COLLEGIAN Report Card
SOUL ASYLUM
B

By Stacy Lentz
Collegian Reviewer

They're wacky, bizarre and definitely diverse — and they're back.

Soul Asylum follows last year's "Clam Dip and Other Delights" with its shredding release "Soul Asylum and the Horse They Rode In On."

Soul Asylum has invented its own brand of music, combining funk, industrial, rock and country. Trying to classify the sound is impossible. Let's just say it's everything but Top 40.

The album is an excellent example of Soul Asylum's diversity. Songs range from ballads like "We 3" and "Nice Guys Don't Get Paid" to the hard-core rock on "All the King's Friends."

"Soul Asylum and the Horse They Rode In On" is a refreshing change for record buyers who think all songs on a given group's album sound the same. Soul Asylum seems determined to create a broad landscape of sound — every song shows a different side of the group. The band varies everything from tempo to instruments to entire formats of songs.

The album, produced by Steve Jordan, always leaves you guessing about what type of song will be next.

Lyrically, Soul Asylum is laid back. For example, check out these lyrics from "We 3:" "When you're young and defensive/it comes off offensive/and it's hard to repay the tolerance you borrowed." This is about their most profound statement. This lack of insightful songwriting is the only pitfall of the album.

Vocalist Dave Pirner's voice always seems hauntingly familiar, yet makes you think you're listening to a different lead singer on every track.

This is the sixth album for the group, formed in Minneapolis in 1983. Their first album, released in 1984, included the alternative hits "Tied to the Tracks" and "Long Way Home."

Drummer Grant Young joined the group in 1985. The group released its first album with Young, "Made to be Broken," the same year. Soul Asylum signed with A&M in 1987 and released its A&M debut "Hang Time" in 1988.

Soul Asylum has also toured frequently and developed a diverse image. The band members justify this diversity — according to their autobiographies, one member of the band is married, one is a father, one lives above a massage parlor and one is good at reading maps.

Every aspect of Soul Asylum's new album is original. The group lives up to its name, capturing your soul with a crazy and off-the-wall sound that gives new meaning to the word unique.

Husky rally stops 'Cats

By The Associated Press

DEKALB, Ill. — Quarterback Stacey Robinson ran for three touchdowns, including the winner with 40 seconds left, and threw for two more as Northern Illinois rallied to beat K-State 42-35 Saturday.

It was the 10th win in a row at home for the Huskies (2-2).

With 51 seconds left, Rich Favor picked off a Carl Straw pass at the K-State 36 and returned the ball to the 32. Adam Dach gained 23 yards on the first play and Robinson scored on a 9-yard run to break a 35-35 tie and climax a 21-point comeback in the fourth quarter for the Huskies.

The Wildcats (2-1) got a pair of touchdowns from Frank Hernandez. He grabbed a 13-yard TD pass and a 6-yard scoring aerial from Straw in the second quarter when K-State scored 21 points to take a 28-13 halftime lead.

Robinson hooked up Mike Strasser for two passing touchdowns in the second half, including one for 60 yards at the opening of the final quarter. It was the only two passes Robinson managed to complete in six throws. He rushed 20 times for 145 yards.

Dach had 128 yards running on 14 carries as Northern had 403 net yards rushing. Pat Jackson led K-State's ground game with 27 carries and 102 yards.

Straw completed 27 of 36 passes for 327 yards. Michael Smith caught eight of his passes for 136 yards.

Washington knocks Southern Cal from ranks of unbeatens

By The Associated Press

Washington didn't need any luck to thrash fifth-ranked Southern California. The Huskies had everything else going their way.

Unheralded quarterback Mark Brunell overshadowed highly regarded Todd Marinovich and got plenty of help from his teammates as No. 21 Washington manhandled Southern Cal 31-0 Saturday.

"If somebody had told me it was going to be 31-0, I'd have thought that they'd have the points and we'd have zero," Washington Coach Don James said.

Washington (3-0) led 24-0 at halftime and wasn't threatened in handing Southern Cal (2-1) its first shutout loss since Arizona State beat the Trojans 24-0 in 1985. That also was the last year that Washington beat Southern Cal.

Meanwhile, top-ranked Notre Dame capitalized on a deflected pass off the chest of a Michigan State defender in beating the 24th-ranked Spartans 20-19. It was the second straight week the Irish turned a deflected pass into a big play.

"There's definitely somebody looking out for us," quarterback Rick Mirer said.

No. 1 Notre Dame 20, No. 24 Michigan St. 19

With Notre Dame trailing 19-14 at Lansing, Mirer's pass bounced off the chest of linebacker Todd Murray and into the hands of Adrian Jarrell, giving the Irish a first down at the Spartans' 2. Three plays later, Rodney Culver's 1-yard run allowed Notre Dame to go ahead with 34 seconds left.

The Irish trailed 19-7 before a 2-yard touchdown run by Ricky Watters with 13:13 left in the game narrowed the Michigan State lead to 19-14.

Mirer completed 14 of 21 passes for 155 yards.

No. 2 Florida St. 31, Tulane 13

Florida State improved to 3-0 as Brad Johnson threw a 44-yard touchdown pass and went a yard on a quarterback sneak for another score.

Johnson's touchdown pass ended a six-play, 87-yard drive during which he completed three straight passes for 35 yards. Johnson marched the Seminoles 73 yards before scoring on a sneak in the third quarter.

No. 4 BYU 62, San Diego St. 34

Ty Detmer completed 26 of 38 passes for 514 yards and three TD passes to Andy Boyce for Brigham Young (4-0).

San Diego State's 6-foot-8 Dan McGwire, brother of Oakland Athletics first baseman Mark McGwire, threw for 361 yards and three TDs in a losing cause.

No. 7 Michigan 38, UCLA 15

Jon Vaughn ran for 288 yards, including 1, 23 and 63 for touchdowns for the Wolverines (1-1), who overcame a 353-yard passing performance by freshman Tommy Maddox of UCLA (1-2).

Elvis Grbac completed nine of 11 passes in the first half for Michigan, but the Wolverines stuck to the ground in the second half behind Vaughn, who set a record for rushing yards for a UCLA opponent. The previous high against the Bruins was 219 by Marcus Allen in 1981.

No. 8 Nebraska 56, Minnesota 0

Mickey Joseph ran for two touchdowns and passed for two in Nebraska's 42-point first half.

Joseph, making his second start in place of injured Mike Grant, ran 4 and 1 yards for TDs and passed 27 yards to Jon Bostick and 1 yard to Chris Garrett for scores in a 28-point second quarter.

No. 10 Virginia 59, Duke 0

Shawn Moore threw for three touchdowns and ran for another in another rout for Virginia, which has beaten Kansas, Clemson, Navy and Duke by a combined 194-31.

Moore threw scoring passes of 36 and 40 yards to Herman Moore, who tied a school record with his 20th career TD catch.

No. 11 Oklahoma 52, Tulsa 10

Two early touchdown passes from Steve Collins to Artie Guess set the tone as usually run-oriented Oklahoma worked on its passing game against Tulsa.

Oklahoma (3-0) threw 25 passes, six short of the school record set in 1938, and its 12 completions were three short of the school mark.

No. 12 Texas A&M 40, N. Texas 8

Lance Pavlas threw for three first-half touchdowns and Darren Lewis became the career rushing leader for Texas A&M (3-0).

Pavlas completed 10 of 15 passes for 160 yards, and Lewis ran for 132 yards to increase his total to 3,711, eight more than Curtis Dickey's school mark.

Mississippi 21, No. 13 Arkansas 17

Defensive backs Chris Mitchell and Chauncey Godwin combined to tackle Arkansas' Ron Dickerson at the 1 on the final play of the game.

Quarterback Quinn Grovey ran left, then pitched to Dickerson with the last 12 seconds running off the clock.

"We knew he would probably keep it or pitch," Mitchell said. "Chauncey turned Dickerson around and I came up hard just trying to keep

Sigma Chi wins Ironman

Fraternity tops foes to take title

By The Collegian Staff

Sigma Chi fraternity completed the Ironman '90 competition Saturday with a win in the obstacle course to win the 11-team event sponsored by Campus Crusade for Christ.

The Sigs claimed championships in four of eight events in the two-day competition and outdistanced Beta Theta Pi for the team crown with 141 points. The Betas were second with 106.

Sigma Nu and Tau Kappa Epsilon tied for third with 86.

The Sigs stayed near the top the entire way, winning titles in the Manmakers and Tug of War in Friday's opening round. Alpha Tau Omega, which finished fifth with 85 points, kept pace with wins in the swim relay and basketball tournament.

The Sigs pulled away in the first event Saturday. They won the bicycle relay, while an accident by an ATO rider knocked them out of contention. The Sigma Nus and Betas captured titles in the 6-mile relay and Circuits respectively.

"This was the seventh year for our competition, and it was as good of a turnout as we've ever had," Ironman director and CCC member Brian Anderson said. "We usually challenge the top 11 or 12 fraternities from the intramural standings the previous year to compete, and we were pleased with this year's field."

Below are the team standings. Twenty points were awarded 20 for first, 18 for second, 16 for third, and so on.

Special teams, defense key KC victory, 17-3

By The Associated Press

GREEN BAY, Wis. — Kansas City made defense its chief priority Sunday in a 17-3 victory over Green Bay, forcing the punchless Packers into a series of mistakes.

The Chiefs sacked Don Majkowski six times in his first start of the season. They recovered two fumbles, including one at the goal line by Green Bay's Brent Fullwood that prevented the Packers from taking the lead in the third quarter.

They intercepted two passes, one a 33-yard return for a touchdown by Stan Petry with three minutes left. And they got another punt block from Albert Lewis to set up a field goal.

"Majkowski can't do it by himself. Our front line put a lot of pressure up front and pressure makes a lot of people look rusty," said defensive back Kevin Ross, who intercepted a pass, caused Fullwood's fumble at the goal line and recovered a fumble.

Green Bay was trailing 7-3 and had a first down on the Chiefs 2 after a pass interference call on Lloyd Burruss.

Fullwood got 1 yard on first down, then fumbled on second as he was near the goal line. Kansas City's Dino Hackett recovered with 47 seconds left in the third quarter.

"Percy Snow and I hit him. I don't know who got there first. We were just trying to stop him at the goal line," Ross said.

"The fumble at the goal line was the critical play. They were going to go ahead," said Chiefs Coach Marty Schottenheimer.

Fullwood refused comment until he could look at the videotape. Officials in the replay booth did just that after the play but upheld the call on the field.

Lewis later got his seventh-career punt block to set up Nick Lowery's 20-yard field goal, and Petry sealed the victory with his 33-yard interception return with 2:59 left.

"I would sum it up as a tough day," said Majkowski, who completed 19 of 31 passes for 171 yards. It was the second straight year the Chiefs kept the Packers out of the end zone. They beat the Packers 21-3 last December, essentially knocking Green Bay out of the playoff picture.

"We just have to eliminate those turnovers in order to be competitive," said Majkowski. "They had a very good pass rush and good secondary. We just didn't connect at times."

Trailing 10-3, the Packers went on a fourth-and-10 from their own 20 late in the game and Petry intercepted and returned for the game-clinching touchdown with 2:59 left.

"This is a fine defense, and it certainly appears that they have our number," said Packers coach Lindy Infante, who is 0-2 against Schottenheimer, whom he coached with in Cleveland.

The Chiefs took a 7-3 lead in to halftime when Christian Okoye's 5-yard touchdown run with 59 seconds left capped an 80-yard drive.

Steve DeBerg had completions of 18 yards to Emile Harry and 24 yards to Pete Mandley in the drive. A third-down pass interference call in the end zone on the Packers' Mark Lee gave the Chiefs a first at the Green Bay 5 and Okoye carried in on the next play.

After a scoreless third quarter, Louis Cooper picked up the blocked punt by Lewis and returned it to the Packers 5. The Packers stopped Okoye for a 2-yard loss after he'd gained four on first down and the Chiefs ended up with Lowery's 20-yard field goal with 10:31 remaining to take a 10-3 lead.

Ross then recovered a fumble by Green Bay's Michael Haddix at the Kansas City 45 with 5:56 left to squelch another drive.

The Chiefs took the second-half kickoff and moved from their own 9 to the Green Bay 19.

But on a fourth-and-7, the Chiefs faked a field goal and holder Kelly Goodburn was stopped 2 yards short of the first down. The Packers took over and were moving for a score when Fullwood fumbled.

Chiefs pass test; Wildcats to face theirs

David Svoboda
SPORTS EDITOR

One test has been passed, and the other looms on the horizon.

The Kansas City Chiefs passed their test Sunday, downing the Green Bay Packers 17-3. The Chiefs, in winning, successfully bounced back from last Monday night's heartbreaking defeat against Denver.

And the Chiefs did it on the road, no less. But more on that later.

The team yet to take its exam will do so at 6:30 p.m. Saturday in KSU Stadium.

Coach Bill Snyder's Wildcats, fresh off a 42-35 loss to Northern Illinois in a game they led by 14 points after three quarters, will be the team taking the exam.

If previous test performances under similar circumstances are any indication, this test might be of the type the Wildcats would want to drop, if given the option.

But these are the 1990 Wildcats, and here's betting Snyder's troops won't fold up like a cheap accordion, as did the past few K-State teams after tough losses.

For now, let's jump back and talk about the Chiefs.

Coach Marty Schottenheimer's bunch was smarting — if that's a word that can do justice to what the players and coaches felt — following their Monday loss. Schottenheimer barely slept the night after the game.

That's OK, Marty. I barely slept myself that night. I felt like I had my guts ripped out and fed right back to me for breakfast.

It was a hurt not even extra strength Alka Seltzer could make go away. I didn't speak to anyone for a solid hour after the game was over.

And if I felt that way, imagine what the players must have felt. It must have been sheer agony to be on that plane between Denver and Kansas City that night.

Ah, how the thrill of victory beats the hell out of the agony of defeat.

Schottenheimer's troops, playing with confidence rarely showed by Chiefs teams of late, went out and won a big game against the Packers Sunday, and in so doing came of age in the NFL.

Yes, the game was error-filled, and it was far from a work of art. But this is the kind of contest the Chiefs have made a habit of losing in past seasons, and the mere fact they won Sunday proves this team is shedding the baggage it has been carrying for far too long.

Character is what it's all about, and this Chiefs team has it in abundance. I've been burned by predictions before, but here goes with one I wasn't sure I'd make before Sunday: the Chiefs will be in the playoffs this year.

Simply put, they've arrived.

But has K-State arrived, or were the first two wins of the year flukes against weak teams?

What Saturday's heartbreaking loss did was put things into their proper perspective, I believe.

This is a much-improved football team. The coaching is solid, execution was fairly consistent, and the character appears to be there.

But the true test of whether or not this team is different from any of the other units that have worn the purple and white down through the years will come this Saturday.

The contest with Northern Illinois is over. It's done with, through, finito, history, outta here, gone. New Mexico is the opponent this week.

There is a lesson to be learned from Saturday's defeat. That lesson is that defeat is a bitter pill to swallow. It tastes awful going down, and you'd just as soon die as to have to take another.

The feeling that players like Pat Jackson had immediately following the game is healthy. He said he felt sick at his stomach. I hope he did. If he felt that way, it shows me that this team will not accept a performance that is less than its best under any circumstances.

That, my friends, is a huge step in the right direction.

But whether the K-State football program has taken the same type of steps its professional counterpart has taken remains to be seen.

The Chiefs made a solid step into the NFL's elite Sunday by beating a playoff-caliber team on the road in a game immediately following a tough road defeat.

If K-State can beat New Mexico in KSU Stadium on Saturday, or, as Snyder would say, at least play to the best of its ability and show improvement over the effort displayed in the Northern Illinois contest, then a test has been passed here.

It all comes down to a serious gut check. Time to see if real men wear purple and white.

I'm betting they do.

Golf team opens season

The K-State men's golf team will swing into action Tuesday in the 19th annual U.C. Ferguson All-College Classic.

Westbury Country Club in Oklahoma City, Okla., will be the site for the two-day, 54-hole tournament. Players will open with 36 holes on Monday and play 18 holes on Tuesday to conclude the tournament.

Seniors Bobby Donnellan and Greg Roberts, sophomore Jim Brenneman and freshmen Sean Robertson and Will Siebert will compete. Senior Brett Vuilleman and NCAA tournament qualifier Richard Laing are not competing at Westbury.

"Brett and Rich will not be going on this trip," said K-State Coach Russ Bunker. "We're looking for three other guys to complement them, and we felt this would be an effective way of determining that.

"Even without those two players, we should be able to challenge for the team title," Bunker said. "However, I consider a top four or five finish more likely."

Other teams rounding out the 15-team field include Texas Wesleyan, a national power in NAIA, last year's tournament winner Texas Lutheran, Cameron University (Lawton, Okla.) and Oklahoma City University, which will be competing on its home course.

Farr throws complete game

Pitcher gets 12th win in Royals' 4-0 blanking of California in finale of series

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Steve Farr's best friend is the spacious place where he makes his living.

Royals Stadium held Dick Schofield's long fly ball for the final out as Farr pitched the first complete game of his career to lead the Kansas City Royals to a 4-0 victory over the California Angels Sunday.

"I thought it was out the minute he hit it," said Farr, who stopped the Angels on five hits. "That's one advantage to pitching in this place. A lot of guys don't want to play here, but I'll pitch here 15 years.

"(Manager John Wathan) wanted to bang me out of there in the seventh, but I said let me try to finish it. I pleaded with him. I came close to getting banged out of there two or three times, but I kept getting that one batter out."

Farr, who has made 50 appearances in middle relief this season, struck out three and walked three. At 12-7, he leads the Royals in victories.

"He a gamer who just takes the ball in any role and is very effective at it," Wathan said. "Those guys who can do that and be effective at it are few and far between.

"I kept checking with him after the seventh and asking him how he felt, and he kept saying 'I don't know, I've never gone this far before. I've never pitched this many innings before.' He wanted the shut out in the worst way, and I was just worried about hurting his arm, but it was a cool day and he was fine."

Chuck Finley (18-8) walked six in six innings as California lost for the sixth time in seven games. He likely will get two more starts as he tries to become the Angels' first 20-game winner since Nolan Ryan in 1974.

"Finley threw all right. There were some things out there that frustrated him," Angels manager Doug Rader said. "They are all pulling for him to win 20. I think we're losing a little bit of the joy that's supposed to be involved in what we're doing."

Mike Macfarlane doubled leading off the Royals' fourth and walks to Bill Pecota and Kurt Stillwell loaded the bases. Rookie Brian McRae lined a two-run single that made it 3-0 and extended his hitting streak to nine games. Stillwell later scored when Gary Thurman grounded into a double play.

Kansas City took a 1-0 lead in the second when Russ Mormon led off with a triple and scored on Finley's wild pitch.

Bears, Bengals stay unbeaten

By The Associated Press

The Bengals, Giants and Bears remained unbeaten in varying fashions on Sunday. Cincinnati used quick-striking offense, New York did it with overpowering defense and Chicago won with special teams.

All three moved to 3-0, with the Bengals and Giants cruising over New England and Miami, respectively. The Bears, however, got a big break and converted it into Kevin Butler's 52-yard field goal with four seconds remaining for a 19-16 victory over Minnesota.

Vikings punter Harry Newsome fumbled a snap with 25 seconds left. The Bears recovered on the Minnesota 39, failed to make a first down, and Butler kicked his fourth field goal of the game.

With just 1:55 remaining, the Vikings (1-2) tied it on a 17-yard pass from Wade Wilson to Hassan Jones.

"It ranks right up there," Butler said of his game-winning kick. "Any kick that wins a game ranks right up there."

The Bengals grabbed a 31-0 lead on the way to a 41-7 rout of New England, which fell apart with four fumbles, two interceptions, two blown coverages on defense, a botched punt and an end zone interception nullified by a holding penalty. Cincinnati's Jim Breech hit a 46-yard field goal in the first period that gave him a league-record 152 consecutive games with a score, surpassing the NFL mark set by Fred Cox of Minnesota.

"I was glad to get it out of the way early," Breech said. "When I saw it fly through I said, 'Yeah!' It got that over, and it got us off to a quick start."

The Giants completely shackled Miami's offense, which managed only 39 yards rushing. Dan Marino had a mere 115 yards passing and New York kept the ball for 40 minutes, 18 seconds in a 20-3 win. Ottis Anderson scored on a pair of 1-yard runs as he became the NFL's No. 8 all-time rusher with 9,433 yards, moving ahead of Earl Campbell.

In other games, it was San Francisco 19, Atlanta 13; Philadelphia 27, Los Angeles Rams 21; Los Angeles Raiders 20, Pittsburgh 3; Denver 34, Seattle 31, OT; and Tampa Bay 23, Detroit 20.

Redskins 19, Cowboys 15

The Cowboys couldn't duplicate their last two trips to Washington, which they won. Chip Lohmiller kicked four field goals, one from 55 yards, and Darrell Green ran an interception back for a touchdown.

Washington bothered Troy Aikman all day, sacking him eight times, forcing a fumble and picking off two passes.

The Redskins played the second half without QB Mark Rypien, who sustained a sprained knee.

Oilers 24, Colts 10

At Houston, Warren Moon became the all-time leading passer for the Oilers and produced three touchdowns. Moon hit Lorenzo White with touchdown passes of 13 and seven yards in the second quarter, White's first touchdown catches of his pro career. He also hit a 6-yard touchdown pass to Ernest Givins with 3:03 to play.

Moon completed 29 of 39 passes for 308 yards, giving him a career total of 19,289. He surpassed the club record of 19,149 yards by George Blanda.

Drew Hill had 10 receptions for 123 yards for Houston (1-2). The Colts fell to 0-3 and lost top-draft choice Jeff George with a stomach ailment in the second quarter. When both of George's replacements, Jack Trudeau and Mark Herrmann, were injured, George had to return.

Chargers 24, Browns 14

At Cleveland, Billy Joe Tolliver threw two touchdown passes to Anthony Miller and Henry Rolling returned an interception 67 yards to set up a third score. Cleveland (1-2) led 14-10 at halftime and the Chargers (1-2) had not scored in the second half of their first two games.

But Tolliver found Miller for a 23-yard touchdown in the third quarter, then Rod Bernstine scored from the 1 after Rolling was knocked out of bounds at the 6 on the interception. The points were the first allowed in the second half by Cleveland (1-2) this year.

Bernie Kosar was picked off three times after throwing 152 straight regular-season passes without an interception.

Saints 28, Cardinals 7

At New Orleans, Rueben Mayes, who missed last season after Achilles tendon surgery, scored three of New Orleans' first four touchdowns of the season. Mayes' TDs came on runs of 10 yards in the third quarter and four and 14 yards in the fourth period, giving him his first three-touchdown game as a pro.

John Fourcade, who had the NFL's lowest quarterback efficiency rating, 17.7, threw a 14-yard TD pass to Eric Martin with 22 seconds left in the first half, breaking a scoreless tie.

Phoenix (1-2) got its only points on its first TD pass this season, 37 yards from Timm Rosenbach to Ricky Proehl. Rosenbach was the second-lowest quarterback in NFL rankings at 35.4.

Tragic death mars small-college game

By The Associated Press

KIRKSVILLE, Mo. — Autopsy results are expected Tuesday on Derringer Cade, a Northeast Missouri State football player who collapsed on the sidelines and died Saturday in an incident that seemed tragically similar to the death of college basketball star Hank Gathers.

"The kid was having a tremendous game, the game of his life," John Ware, assistant head coach at Northeast Missouri State, said Sunday. "It did remind us of Hank Gathers. It has made football seem like a very unimportant thing around here today."

Cade, 20, had no history of medical problems, according to Ware. He collapsed in the final minutes of Northeast's game at Bolivar, Mo., against Southwest Baptist and died a short time later at a Bolivar hospital.

Play was halted with 4:31 left and Northeast Missouri, leading 13-3, was declared the winner in the NCAA Division II game.

Bill Cable, sports information director at Northeast Missouri State, said the cause of death would be listed as unknown until autopsy results are available on Tuesday. Speculation by medical personnel at the scene, Ware said, centered on a possible undiagnosed diabetic condition.

Cable said services will be 2 p.m. Wednesday at Soldier's Memorial Chapel at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., with burial at Ozark Memorial VFW Cemetery in St. Robert, Mo. Smith Cade, the player's father, is a Command Sgt. Major at Fort Leonard Wood.

"The players and coaches will meet Monday to decide whether they want to play this week's home game against Missouri Southern," Cable said.

Like Gathers, Cade died while doing what he loved best.

Gathers, the Loyola Marymount star who had a history of heart trouble, died moments after making a thunderous dunk in a West Coast Conference playoff game on March 4.

Cade had just sacked the quarterback.

Rollin' On The River

Margaret Clarkin/Staff

The 20th Annual Kansas State Association of Residence Halls Kaw River Canoe Race began Saturday morning at the Rocky Ford fishing area. Low water levels slowed the race.

By Dan Scott
Collegian Reporter

More than 500 students canoed Saturday in the 20th Annual Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls Kaw River Canoe Race.

Plagued by shallow water and a lengthy first leg, the race bogged down, forcing coordinators to shorten it from eight legs to five. This shortened the 60-mile race to just under 40 miles.

"The water level was very low this year," said Kelli Zuel, an adviser for the event.

Zuel said the river's water level was a primary reason the race fell nearly three hours behind schedule.

"I was hitting the sand with my paddle quite a bit," said Thomas Annis, junior in computer engineering. "It was pretty slow going."

The water was about three to six inches deep for about 300 yards at one point, said Anthony Golden, freshman in engineering.

"We had to jump out and start pushing. I've shallow-water canoed before. You either get out, or you just stand there," Golden said.

The first leg of the race was supposed to be about 10 miles long. It proved to be much longer.

"We had to start the race at Rocky Ford fishing area instead of at the Kaw River access ramp because of road construction," said Sam Robinson, chairperson of the event. "A state park employee told us it was six miles, seven at the most, from Rocky Ford to the old starting point, so we figured it was about 10 miles in all."

Robinson said he estimated the leg to be between 13-15 miles.

When the canoeists were 45 minutes overdue for the first checkpoint, Robinson went looking for them.

"I was afraid maybe they went off on a tributary that we didn't know about," Robinson said.

"It took a long time to get to the bridge by the old starting point," said Annis, who canoed the first leg with Tess Forge, freshman in agriculture.

Brian Spanjer, freshman in secondary education, said, "I thought we were going to be paddling into Missouri. It was a lot more work than I planned on."

The canoes carried two people, one male and one female, a change from previous years when three people canoed at once. Zuel said she was unsure of how this affected the race's speed.

"With the water being so low, having three people in the boat might have slowed them down even more," she said.

Robinson said the switch to two canoeists was made for safety reasons.

"It was really unsafe last year," she said. "We had a lot of canoes tip over. No one got hurt, they just got wet."

This year the water was too shallow for the most part to worry about capsizing the canoes. Usually, the tipping occurred at the checkpoints when crews were changed. An unsteady move often meant a harmless plunge in the cool water, Robinson said.

The race began at 8 a.m., as 28 canoes were launched in groups of three or four every 2¼ minutes.

"There was 22¼ minutes between the first canoes launched and the last ones," Zuel said.

Each of the 28 teams had 16 canoeists, two for each of the scheduled eight segments in the relay race. With the shortened race, not all team members canoed.

The students that did race found the river, although not swift, to be physically challenging.

"I hurt right now. I really hurt," Forge said after climbing out of the canoe. "I know I'll be sore in the morning."

The shallow waters and sharp turns caused some maneuvering pains as well as physical pains.

Margaret Clarkin/Staff

Kelley Rubison, junior in biology, sleeps while waiting at the third checkpoint for her team, Goodnow basement and 2nd floor, to come in.

After being launched, the canoes had a wide, straight run of about 100 yards. Then the course turned sharply to the left toward a shallow, narrow bottleneck.

"We had canoes bumping into each other," Robinson said. "Some started spinning in circles."

Team 17, named Smith/Smurth Serious, won with a time of 7:17:36. The team was made of residents of the Smith and Smurthwaite houses.

Dust and Ashes to visit K-State

Trio stresses devotion to God, building loving relationships

By Rebecca Sack
Collegian Reviewer

They're not Peter, Paul and Mary. Though they may have a physical resemblance to the folk trio, Dust and Ashes members Lee Domann, Tom Page and Mary Lou Troutman have a sound and message all their own. The trio is touring northeastern Kansas, performing music in a variety of styles for a variety of people.

The University Parish of United Methodists will host a Dust and Ashes concert at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday at the College Avenue United Methodist Church, 1609 College Avenue, across from Frank Myers Field.

The group began at the same time Joan Baez and Bob Dylan were popularizing songs with social-commentary and social-action themes. Dust and Ashes also uses themes of peace and justice for the earth, but it combines these concerns with a belief in the importance of a life of personal devotion to God.

The most important part of the concert for Dust and Ashes is after the music is over, when the band members can meet the audience. The key to their Christian ministry is building loving relationships among people.

Dust and Ashes considers all life to be sacred and its music provides glimpses of God's kingdom as it understands it. The group has recorded six albums and performed at colleges and universities, churches, national church events, the Grand Ole Opry House and on radio and television. The group recently decided to tour full-time, forsaking careers for music ministry.

"They really focus on relationships," UPUM Program Director Sheryl Witmer said. "And that, I think, is a powerful part of the program.

"It's not only a concert but a celebration of life," Witmer said.

This year, the parish's theme is "Celebrating New Life!" and this concert is the band's gift to the community.

"We're trying to invest our money into programs and people," Witmer said.

UPUM is two years old as a ministry and is involved in Sunday-night fellowships, informal Bible studies, community service for volunteers and food drives for the Flint Hills Bread Basket. Last year, it organized a recycling project in conjunction with Earth Day. The Dust and Ashes concert is only one more contribution to the campus.

The concert will be free, but the audience will be asked to take part in a free-will offering after the performance.

University loses district lawsuit

By Danette King
Collegian Reporter

A federal district court judge in Topeka ruled against K-State in a lawsuit over the violation of the First Amendment right to freedom of speech last week.

Nicolass Konijenendijk was awarded more than $376,000 after a jury decided that the former assistant director of the international grains program had been terminated on unjust grounds.

Konijenendijk said the reason he was fired stemmed from his accusation that there was a misuse of state funds in the international grains program, said Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture and a defendent in the lawsuit.

Charles Deyoe, head of the department of grain science, was listed as the other defendant.

Konijenendijk came to K-State from the Netherlands in 1984. He received notice that his contract was not renewed in December 1985 and was dismissed in 1986.

$100,000 of the award money was described as being for the emotional distress Konijenendijk experienced after his dismissal. The rest of the award was on the basis of back pay and benefits.

Woods said he had not known of any statements about the misuse of funding until after the termination decision was made.

"There was absolutely no validation, in my judgement, that there was any misuse of funds in the international grains program," Woods said.

"I am disappointed in the outcome of the trial, for I perceive that the process and procedure were correct on our part," he said.

The University is covered for such incidences by the Tort Claims Act which funds for the "liability for the faculty and administrators in execution of their responsibilities," Woods said.

Woods said the money for the claims act is from state funds and not from university monies.

Richard Seaton, University attorney, said the responsibility of Canoe rules puzzle teams

By Dan Scott
Collegian Reporter

A fourth of the 28 teams involved in the 20th Annual Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls Kaw River Canoe Race were disqualified before finishing the race, said Sam Robinson, senior in political science and chairperson of the event.

Six of the disqualifications were for lifejacket infractions. The other disqualification was due to a person standing up in a canoe.

"I was disappointed with the captains' attitudes that were disqualified because they knew the rules," Robinson said.

However, some felt the rules were not defined clearly enough.

The teams were disqualified if a canoeist unfastened the lifejacket before getting out of the canoe or if the lifejackets were not fastened when canoeists started paddling.

"We didn't know this," said Stefany Klaus, junior in family life and community service and a team captain. "We didn't know wearing them meant they had to be fastened."

The official rules handed out to each team captain say lifejackets must be worn at all times while canoeists are in the canoe. The rules do not mention fastening the lifejackets.

Record turnout at Konza open house

By Candace Plett
Staff Reporter

Ideal weather helped bring a crowd of more than 1,000 to the semiannual Konza Prairie Visitor's Day Saturday.

The Konza Prairie Research Natural Area headquarters is in a river valley surrounded by the rising slopes of the bluestem-covered Flint Hills.

"We like to show off the place," said John Briggs, assistant scientist in the division of biology.

Briggs said the open house is conducted by volunteers, mostly K-State biology faculty and students.

"It's a lot of work and definitely a lot of fun," he said.

He indicated the crowds gathered at the headquarters and smaller groups exploring the surrounding hills.

"They come from around the state and from other states," he said.

Briggs, who led a half-mile guided tour of research plots, conducts long-term ecological research on the Konza Prairie.

"Because of its location, close to the University, it's an excellent site," he said. "That's why it's attracting so much attention from big national projects such as NASA."

Duane Nellis, professor of geography, collaborates with Briggs by providing remote-sensing expertise. He brought four students and another professor to the open house.

"Satellite technology is used to analyze various aspects of the prairie and to support and enhance research," Nellis said.

"The people are great, and it's exciting out here," said LaVonne Fink of Emporia. "Everyone should have the opportunity to see the tallgrass prairie at least once."

Fink has helped with the last three visitor's days. She said the attendence has increased every year, and this year 2,000 were expected.

She said all the complimentary tickets for the bison tours and wagon rides were gone by noon.

Andy Clawson, sophomore in animal sciences and industry, attended the open house with his parents, Kirby and Mary Clawson, of Satanta. He said they came to learn about the prairie research and take in the scenery.

"We are from the flattest county in the state," he said. "There are no trees except around farms and towns. There's also very little grass, with most of the ground in irrigated corn. So this is really interesting."

"The research is very important," said Herb Gunter from Chicago who calls himself an "avid 22-year prairie nut."

"There are still a lot of plants we know little about. We won't be able to use fertilizer forever. Someday we may be able to use native plants instead of the perennials we have now," he said.

Gunter heard about the open house at the North American Prairie Conference in Cedar Rapids, Mich.

Morgan looks to congressional win by taking strong stands on issues

By Alan Wilds
Staff Reporter

Scott Morgan says he hopes taking strong stands on issues will win him the 2nd District congressional race.

Republican challenger Morgan, who made a campaign stop at K-State Thursday, said a congressman must make a decision one way or the other on any given issue.

During a brief interview, Morgan had a chance to reflect on his campaign as well as some of the issues he considers important to the 2nd District.

Morgan accuses incumbent Jim Slattery of not defining his positions while Slattery maintains his intention to run on his record of tax fairness and federal deficit reduction.

"Slattery wants to be everything to everybody," Morgan said. "That seems to be a problem with Congress in general, but in the 1990s, this country is going to want people that will take a stand."

Morgan visited with University officials and spoke to fraternity and sorority members Thursday evening.

He said he answered questions concerning student loans and abortion.

"One of the most critical issues in this campaign that has really surprised people is the abortion issue," he said. "It should be of specific interest to the college age group as well."

Morgan said he has taken a strong pro-choice stance on abortion and accused Slattery of sitting on the fence concerning the issue.

Morgan said he believes government should stay out of the decision as to whether or not abortion is right or wrong.

"The federal government should support freedom of choice the same way they support freedom of speech," he said.

Nancy Malir, Slattery's press secretary, said Morgan is trying to make the abortion argument into a campaign issue because both candidates are on the same side.

"Trying to tell someone you are more pro-choice than someone else does not have any meaning," she said. "Abortion is a difficult issue because there is so much gray area."

Morgan supports expanding Fort Riley and said that the issue is extremely important.

"In the Manhattan-Junction City area, Fort Riley has definitely been the biggest issue up to this week," he said. "I'm hoping I gained a lot of support from the people in Junction City for taking a stand and supporting expansion."

Malir said Morgan has tried to make the fort's expansion a campaign issue even though Slattery has said that he also supports expansion.

Morgan said he believes expansion at the fort will not occur for a long time, but he said one of his priorities if elected would be to build a coalition in Washington D.C. to support the fort.

Morgan plans to campaign throughout the Riley County area intensively.

"I'm running a hard conservative campaign on fiscal issues and being liberal on things like abortion," he said. "I feel very strongly about my campaign because every-day people are paying more and more attention to it."

concern presented to regents by faculty and students Friday.

"Every member of the Board of Regents supports what is going on here at KSU," Creighton said. "We are going to do our very best to protect your base budgets so you aren't penalized for your strategic planning."

Michael O'Keefe, budget director for Kansas, supports reorganization efforts at K-State, Creighton said. He has advised Hayden to veto the education appropriation if the Legislature cuts from the University's base budget.

"I'm counting on the Legislature being aware of the incentive mechanism," Koplik said. "The Legislature calls upon us to be more responsible, more accountable, more effective and more efficient, and we demonstrate that and then they take away the money — frankly I can't see that happening."

started but before he had any volunteers, Younger said.

"He (DeLaFont) went on stage, got volunteers and had them rotating their arms and dangling their heads," Younger said. "He also made some comment about cologne that turned the girls on. When the volunteers appeared to be hypnotized, the officers went on stage and asked DeLaFont to stop."

DeLaFont refused to stop his act and made comments about the police to the audience over the microphone, Younger said. The crowd started shouting at the police.

"He was then told he was under arrest and if he did not cooperate he would be charged with inciting a riot, Younger said. "He was taken to jail where a $100 bond was posted."

According to the statute, volunteers could also be charged with a misdemeanor for participating. However, this was not done in Hays or Manhattan.

"With the comments DeLaFont was making and the attitude of the crowd, the officers just felt fortunate to get out without making more out of the incident than there was, Younger said.

The occupation has caused one unusual problem for the Kuwaiti students.

"We sent a copy of our passports to the Kuwaiti Embassy to prove we are Kuwaiti," Khayrallah said. "The Iraqis are issuing false Kuwaiti passports."

The four Kuwaiti students on campus have organized a Kuwaiti Student Union through the Student Governing Association so they can set a table in the K-State Union, Khayrallah said. The table will inform K-State of the plight of their country, he said.

An earlier request to set up a table under the umbrella of the Arab Students Association was turned down because the organization did not wish to sponsor any activity that might be divisive, he said.

The jury was left with the decision of whether Konijenendijk's freedom of speech had been violated.

"We will be filing some motions with the judge for relief," Seaton said.

The relief could come in the form of a retrial, he said.

An appeal will be considered only after the judge makes a decision about the relief, Seaton said.

"I'm not going hat-in-hand with the particular objective of getting sanctions lifted," he said.

De Klerk will meet with congressional leaders, but the Congressional Black Caucus announced Saturday it had canceled a scheduled meeting with de Klerk, saying only that the decision was in response to "recent developments in South Africa and after extensive consultation with anti-apartheid activists."

The decision may have been related to the recent upsurge in violence in the black townships. African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela, who was here in late June, has held pro-apartheid security elements of the police and military responsible and said that Americans should demand from de Klerk an explanation for this situation.

South African officials themselves have not dismissed this possibility.

The Lawyer's Committee for Civil Rights Under Law, a private, Washington-based group, has challenged de Klerk to ensure that "police and military assassination squads are fully exposed and completely disbanded."

that they need to be fastened," Robinson said. "If it's unfastened it doesn't do any good because when you fall out of the boat, it will just get ripped off."

Jason Ly, freshman in architectural engineering, said the penalty was too stiff for the infraction.

"It's a little technicality," Ly said. "It's not like it's a race for money."

Ly suggested that minutes be docked from a team's time in the future for lifejacket infractions.

A Putnam Hall team was disqualified when the strap attached to the top part of the fastener broke free of a team member's lifejacket. This prevented the lifejacket from securing properly to the canoeist, causing the lifejacket to hinder the canoeist's paddling motion, said Mike Burgoon, freshman in electrical engineering technologies. The canoeist then unfastened the bottom of the lifejacket to free his movements.

The fastener itself was operable, so the team was disqualified.

Isenhour released from duties as dean

Former college head reassigned to chemistry faculty

By Gregory A. Branson
Government/City Editor

Thomas Isenhour was reassigned from his duties as the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences Monday.

"I have heard I am to be released, and I am shocked," Isenhour said in a statement released early Monday afternoon.

He said in an interview Monday evening that he did not find out about his reassignment until Monday morning.

Reading from a prepared statement at a press conference Monday afternoon, Provost James Coffman said Isenhour is returning to full-time status in the Department of Chemistry after serving as dean since August 1987.

Coffman said Isenhour's duties as dean of the college have ended as of Monday.

"I have not been fired from the faculty," Isenhour said in the statement. "But I understand I am being fired as dean."

Coffman said he would not comment on why Isenhour had been reassigned. He did say there was no specific instance that prompted Monday's action.

"As with any personnel matter, my comments can't go beyond the news release on this matter," he said.

During the interview, Isenhour said he was not given an explanation of why he was reassigned.

Isenhour has been criticized since last January when several classes in the college were cancelled because of budget constraints.

Isenhour said in the statement that this decision on his part may have directly led to his dismissal as dean.

"I have been aware since January that the administration of the University was very unhappy that Arts and Sciences did not go forward with plans for additional classes last spring because of budget cutbacks," he said in his statement. "I can't believe that this financial management decision on my part, about which the administration was fully advised, could lead to a decision to terminate my services."

Plans for reorganization may have been another reason for the move.

In his statement, Isenhour said he thinks the College of Arts and Sciences may be relegated to a supporting role for the professional programs on campus. He said he does not support this idea.

"I have refused to agree that the college that teaches over half of the students should not provide leadership in instruction and scholarship in the University," he said.

Resources will play a major role in the final decision in the college's role after reorganization, Coffman said.

When Isenhour was appointed as dean in 1987, goals were set to bring the college up to the same level of distinction in relation with the University's peers as K-State's professional programs.

Coffman said that these goals are still in place and that Isenhour had success when trying to raise the level of resources for the college.

"The intent here is not to throw the baby out with the bath water," Coffman said, "but to build on the positive things for the future."

Trees cut for parking lot; SAVE questions decision

By Eric Henry
Collegian Editor

The removal of 15 trees east of Umberger Hall Monday concerned several members of Students Acting to Save a Vulnerable Environment.

Jonathan Morris, junior in mathematics and president of SAVE, watched as several trees, some more than 40 feet tall, were leveled by a bulldozer. The trees were being removed to make way for the construction of B-11 parking lot and the rerouting of a storm drainage area.

"I received a call saying several large trees were being destroyed east of Umberger," Morris said. "We were concerned to know if any efforts to save the trees had been made and also if any prior consideration had been made to best utilize the existing trees and landscape."

The trees are being removed by Bayer Construction. Kelly Briggs, city superintendent for Bayer, said it had been contracted by the state of Kansas to construct B-11 parking lot and to reroute the storm-drainage area.

Lawrence Garvin, director of facilities planning, said the removal of the trees and rerouting of the storm-drainage area contributes a solution to a substantial storm-drainage problem. Garvin said 73 trees will be planted in the area where the 15 trees were removed.

"We are developing a significant linear park that will extend from Quinlan Natural Area along Wildcat Creek to the Veterinary Medicine Complex," Garvin said. "This will be a park-like environment and I think a significant natural amenity for the campus."

Gary Coates, professor in architecture and SAVE adviser, expressed concern that the long-range environmental ramifications of physical development on campus are not receiving sufficent consideration or review of alternatives.

"There ought to be some consideration of proposals in terms of environmental impact before there is any futher destruction of trees at that site," Coates said. "It is a strong and irreversible action."

Bar accused of prejudice in letters posted on campus

Bar owner: charges based on untruths

By Jan Puls
Staff Reporter

An unsigned letter posted across campus Monday accused an Aggieville bar of promoting racism and elitism.

The letter was found taped to campus bulletin boards and doors of Seaton and Eisenhower halls. The letter charged Baystreet of discriminating against homosexuals and blacks.

The letter claimed Baystreet management instructed new disc jockeys for New Music Night to not select music that would attract homosexuals. The letter also states that DJs were told not to play rap music because it would attract blacks.

Perry Streit, manager of Baystreet, said that the accusations of discrimination were not true and that the DJs were never told to select certain types of music that would isolate specific customers.

"We're the only place that plays new music," Streit said. "When we first started New Music Night, it went over really big."

The original DJ for New Music Night chose selections popular with a lot of people, Streit said. When he left, two new DJs chose music not as many people knew, and the crowds decreased.

Jonathan Mertz, graduate student in speech, had agreed to DJ for the New Music Night this fall. He said that when he went in early in the semester to discuss changes in the music with the management, he was told a DJ already employed at Baystreet would be in charge instead.

"The letter is right in that he out-and-out said he didn't want as big of gay crowd as in the past," Mertz said. "He said he was afraid they were scaring off some of the not-so-open-minded students."

Mertz said the letter is incorrect as far as racism is concerned. He said Streit told him not to play rap music, but nothing was said about black students.

Mertz said he thought other people must have inferred that Streit was advocating racism.

"I believe it is sexist to say there is 'gay' music," Mertz said. "The attitude of the crowd is just more open on alternative music night."

Streit said the club plays mostly rock music because it attracts an older clientele and most everyone likes it.

"I don't see how anybody can complain about music," he said. "If you don't like what we play, you don't have to come here."

The letter also accused Baystreet

Vote may decide future of merger

By Elvyn Jones
Staff Reporter

A critical step in the possible merger between K-State and the Kansas College of Technology in Salina will be decided by the voters of Salina today.

Gerald Cook, president of the Salina Chamber of Commerce, said Salina residents will vote on a proposal to provide a two-year, ½ -cent sales-tax increase. The increase would be used to provide $4.5 million of the estimated $12.1 million needed to finance the merger, he said.
said.

Anthony Tilmans, KCT president, said a task force appointed by the Board of Regents recommended the merger last year as a way to increase the cost-effectiveness of the institution.

"There has always been a concern about our cost per full-time student," Tilmans said.

"They have recognized we are strictly a technological institution, with the high cost of labs and equipment," he said. "But they think it is inordinately high."

The proposed merger would move two K-State engineering technology programs to the Salina institution and offer KCT students the option of earning a baccalaureate degree by taking classes at Kansas Wesleyan University in Salina, he said.

Tilmans said that KCT's enrollment is predicted to double in five to seven years with the prestige of K-State's name and the baccalaureate option. KCT has an enrollment of 674 students, 393 of them full-time.

Both Tilmans and Cook said they worry about voter turnout.

"I'm optimistic but worried about voter apathy," Cook said. "Turnout in a single-issue ballot is difficult to predict."

Tilmans said a large turnout is important for the proposal's chances.

The chamber has been active in promoting the proposal because of the importance of KCT to Salina, Cook said.

Each student at KCT contributes $11,600 a year to the local economy, but more than that, the school represents an investment in Salina's future, he said.

"Technology is going to be the buzzword for economic development," he said. "This will position Salina in a very good way to take advantage of that."

Cook said that an unreleased poll conducted by the chamber two weeks ago indicated 46 percent of those polled favor the proposal, 21 percent oppose the proposal and the remainder are undecided.

Cook said the poll revealed that 86 percent of the people were aware of the issue and the special election. He said he thought a special election would reduce voter confusion and focus attention on the issue.

Although individuals have expressed opposition to the proposal, no organized opposition exists, and it has received bipartisan endorsement, he said.

Bill Powell, head of the civil engineering technology department at KCT, said there is concern among the KCT faculty if the two-year programs will be continued if a four-year program is offered.

"University administrators like four-year programs because they offer more bang for the buck," Powell said.

He said it wasn't inevitable that the two-year programs be dropped, "but it's happened with every institution I know of.

"My biggest concern is with the students who like to earn a meaningful degree in two years," he said. "There is a strong possibility that sometime in the future they will not have that opportunity in Kansas."

Powell said the University of Nebraska-Omaha, Oklahoma State,

Bhutto ordered to stand trial

LAHORE, Pakistan (AP) — A special court on Monday ordered ousted-Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto to stand trial on a second corruption charge involving gas contracts and alleged nepotism.

The one-judge court ruled that the army-backed caretaker government presented enough evidence to indict the former premier and set a trial date of Oct. 9.

Bhutto is accused of canceling lucrative contracts for the distribution of liquified gas and giving them to friends and relatives.

On Sunday, Justice Rashid Aziz Khan also ordered Bhutto, 37, to stand trial on Oct. 2 on another corruption charge, this one involving the alleged illegal sale of government-owned land to a company owned by a cousin.

If convicted of either charge, Bhutto could be barred from the Oct. 24 elections and from participating in politics for up to seven years. She was not immediately available for comment. Her aides said she had been in meetings with lawyers since Sunday's ruling.

Woman's piggyback ride fatal

DESTIN, Fla. (AP) — A woman who playfully asked her husband for a piggyback ride fell 18 stories to her death from a balcony after standing on a chair to climb on his back, authorities said Monday.

The chair tipped and Cindy McNeely, 32, of Woodstock, Ga., went over the railing Saturday night at Sundestin Condominiums, said Rick Hord, a spokesman for the Okaloosa County Sheriff's Department.

Her death has been ruled an accident pending an autopsy, Hord said. He said investigators have no reason to doubt the account given by her husband, Richard McNeely, 32, a certified public accountant.

They had put their three children, girls 6 and 4 and an 18-month-old son, to bed before going out on the balcony, Hord said. After about 20 minutes they decided to go in.

McNeely told investigators his wife then suggested that he carry her in on his back and climbed on the chair, Hord said.

Soldiers to receive videos

FORT RILEY (AP) — Families and friends of Fort Riley soldiers serving in the Middle East will be able to make a videotaped message for their loved ones.

United Telephone Co. of Kansas will do the tapings Thursday as part of a Quality of Life program at Fort Riley.

Carolyn Gaston, a United Telephone spokeswoman, said Monday the three-minute video messages would be made at no cost to families. The tapes will be mailed through government channels.

About 700 soldiers attached to non-divisional units at Fort Riley have deployed or are scheduled to deploy for service in the Persian Gulf. Non-divisional units are stationed at Fort Riley, but are not part of the 1st Infantry Division.

Fort Riley's Quality of Life forum is an annual event running most of the day Thursday. It includes booths and exhibits supporting the Army community.

Alligators illegally transferred

FORT SCOTT (AP) — Five alligators captured recently in southeast Kansas will be returned to Louisiana, where they were taken illegally from the wild, authorities said.

Criminal charges might be filed against the person who brought the animals into Kansas, Doug Sonntag, assistant area law-enforcement supervisor for the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks, said Monday. Officials from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the Kansas Parks department were investigating, he said.

School to increase security

KANSAS CITY, Kan. (AP) — Students attended a solemn assembly Monday at Bishop Ward High School where three students were shot and wounded Friday night during a football game.

"The assembly was quiet and the students understood the severity of the situation," Tim Hannon, the school's new principal, said Monday.

Hannon said Bishop Ward is stepping up measures to ensure there are no recurrences.

"We will increase security on the perimeter of the school property and we will increase the lighting around the perimeter," Hannon said.

Students set for Rocky Mountains: Weather key factor in planning

By Tammy Rose
Collegian Reporter

Thirty K-State students will be backpacking in the Rockies toward the end of September. The Union Program Council's Outdoor Recreation Committee is sponsoring a trip to the Rocky Mountain National Park near Estes Park, Colo. Sept. 29 and 30.

Stan Winter, UPC program adviser, said this is the first trip they have sponsored this fall.

"This event is different because we have to be up on the weather. It could be cancelled at the last minute due to quick weather changes," Winter said.

The 30 students will hike 11 miles across the Rocky Mountain National Park, over the Continental Divide and down through Big Horn Flats. The trip costs $31 per person, including one day of hiking, four meals on the trail, snacks and cooking gear.

Deana Harms, senior in leisure studies and trip coordinator, said planning the trip has been easy because of her recreational studies background.

Although being in good physical condition benefits the hikers, Harms said it is not entirely necessary.

"On the hike, the weather and altitude are our main concerns. It helps if a person has exercised a little because the altitude could make it hard on those who might be out of shape," she said. "The trail is pretty easy, and experience is not all that necessary."

Jon Helb, graduate student in mechanical engineering, said even though this is his first time in Colorado, he's done a lot of backpacking in the Appalachians and southern Rockies. He gets in shape for his hiking trips by walking and running.

Helb said he didn't think the trip would be too hard on him since it was only one day and he has been on week-long trips before. He said he's a little bit concerned, however, about the weather.

"The thing about this trip is we'll probably run into some snow. We might even be sleeping on top of it.'

Warrant's 'Cherry' astoundingly bad

By Richard Jones
Collegian Reviewer

I would rather listen to Roseanne Barr sing the national anthem through a bull horn pointed directly into my ear than listen to Warrant's newest release "Cherry." Despite my strong convictions, that's exactly what I did.

The album's title track is the only song that can stand a chance of gaining any air-time, and any glory it may find will undoubtedly be short-lived.

COLLEGIAN
Report Card
"CHERRY"
F

There have never been more monotonous lyrics ever written. Maybe that's a bit drastic, but you get the point. Sex-oriented stories set to erratic music is the best description of this collection.

If I were to wake up one morning and find to my horror that I had suddenly acquired an interest in the sex lives of leather-clad rock rookies — and suicide wasn't an option — then my only choice would be to buy "Cherry." That possibility notwithstanding, I'll survive by politely screaming and running away from any establishment honoring this monstrosity.

Warrant has had the good taste to announce their bad taste with a explicit-lyric warning label on the album cover. Unfortunately, there is no warning for those of us in search of good music.

There is only one reason for the warning label. Included at the merciful end of the album are excerpts of those times — and I'm sure they're often — when the band has used the F-word in concerts, tours and other public embarrassments. It's merely a short (maybe a minute or so) section of nothing more than offensive language and, once again, sexual innuendo.

Their lyrics are no less offensive than the ones used to describe their assistants. At the risk of sounding crude — and I've gotten in trouble for that before — Warrant refers to their road help as "road pukes." They also list their "Muso's" and identify them with such titles as "Skin Pounder," "Oral Exciter" and other such tactless drivel.

Warrant epitomizes crass by insulting their associates and with the profanity collage they so ignorantly tacked onto the compilation. The result is a blase album and more than likely a few million dollars to ensure yet another one.

Of course, on the inside of the album, Warrant does attribute their success to "God and our fans!!" I seriously doubt "Sure Feels Good to Me" is the first song you hear when you pass through the pearly gates. Somehow I doubt God has had time to make it to Sam Goody. As for Warrant's fans, well, there's still a chance California will drop off into the ocean.

Relieving tension, improving health subject of Better Body Workshop

By Jerry Sapp
Collegian Reporter

The Better Body Workshop is for people wanting to improve flexibility or to relieve tension without paying for a massage, said Judy Quirk Chitwood, director of the K-State dance program.

The Kansas Dance Network will sponsor the workshop at 1:30 p.m. Sunday in Ahearn Field House Gymnasium.

"It is designed to bring more than just dancers," Chitwood said. "It's for anyone who is interested in preventing injuries while getting physically fit."

Instruction will cover three approaches: tennis-ball massage to release muscle tension and to reduce stress, safe and effective stretching techniques to increase range of motion in the joints, and lower-back care techniques to prevent injuries.

"Muscle that stretches is stronger," said Marsha J. Duff of the Kansas Dance Network. "It can withstand more forces put on it.

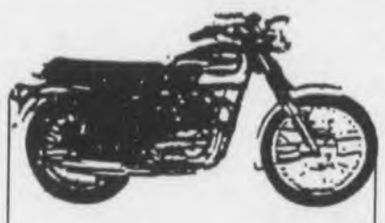
"Stretching is the forgotten component of physical fitness. We think of strength and endurance, but we neglect the idea of balance and flexibility with it," Duff said.

She said a lot of Americans have lower-back problems, especially women who wear high-heeled shoes.

"People who sit down all day or drive a lot run into the same problem — these chairs usually are not able to accommodate the lower back. The workshop counters this by offering a variety of stretching techniques," she said.

Chitwood said that athletes do not stretch enough and that she believes that one hour of learning the proper stretches for increased flexibility will decrease the chances of injury.

"It is best to stretch after you exercise," Duff said. "Stretching should be done after body temperatures have been elevated. It needs to be the end of your warmup."



The workshop is open to anyone 18 years or older who do not have conditions or injuries that could be aggravated by physical activity.

"We have limited enrollment of 30 people," Duff said. "We want to give extra attention to our students so they can become more knowledgeable about stretching and we want them to feel better when they leave."

The workshop has a nonrefundable registration fee of $15 for Kansas Dance Network members and $20 for non-members. The fee includes instruction and printed material to help participants remember the exercises.

Banned books week heightens awareness

This is Banned Books Week, and we should all thank the powers that be that we are able to read a newspaper free from censorship.

In accordance with Banned Books Week, a look should be taken at literary and unliterary works that are considered offensive to some and read by many.

"Cujo," by Stephen King, is considered by some groups to be too graphic and violent and has been pulled from the shelves of some school libraries.

Mark Twain's "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn" illustrates an unglamorous period of American history and uses derogatory terms towards blacks. It has been pulled from some library shelves.

"The Diary of Anne Frank" has met a similar fate. It is a young girl's thoughts and feelings about war, sex, death and love. It too has been banned.

Some editions of Webster's Dictionary have had protests leveled against them by the National Organization of Women because not enough women worked on their compilation.

There are so many more — The Bible, "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," "Catch-22," "The Satanic Bible," "Catcher in the Rye," "Slaughterhouse Five," "Fahrenheit 451" — and the list goes on. Many of these banned books are on display at the Union and other local bookstores.

But these are just a few examples, and, perhaps, some of the tame ones. We have all heard of these books. Many of us have even read them. Some of us may have even been offended by them. But wouldn't it have been better to have read them and been offended than to not have read them at all?

The repercussions of these bannings have been felt in many grade school, high school and even college textbooks. Some people say, "You can't say this or you can't say that. It may warp young people's minds." But what may be mind-warping to some may be mind-expanding to someone else.

Here at the Collegian, we don't have to go through a board of decency to make sure things are unoffensive. If an article or an editorial is offensive, we are surely called on the carpet, as it were, by our readership, and not our advisers and funders, for which we are truly grateful.

Our editorials sometimes complain about America not being America anymore. Some may find them offensive. But we don't want to sell controversy, as we have sometimes been accused of. We are here to sell ideas.

We are a nation of offenders, and we have a right to be. No one should tell any of us what to read, what to say, what to do, or what to think.

Tourists easily detected

Karin Dell'Antonia

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

This weekend I was a tourist. Yes, I, Karin Dell'Antonia, walked unashamed through the streets of Chicago carrying a camera, clinging to my purse, and staring up at the buildings like a big-eyed kid from Kansas. I didn't even try to be cool. Well, I tried, but I gave up. I don't own enough black clothing to be cool in Chicago.

How do I know I was a true tourist? Easy. For example, between myself and my four hotel roommates, we collected something like five Mother's T-shirts, three from Dick's Last Resort, two shirts and one sweatshirt (which I'm wearing) from the Hard Rock Cafe, one T-shirt from Shenannigans, a button from Bootlegger's, a Cub's hat (size 7½) and five pairs of sore feet. That's not even counting what we bought in the malls or the booty of the 21 friends who went with us. We were tourists.

We started out, all 26 of us, walking from our hotel to Rush Street. For some reason, we attracted a lot of attention. Imagine that. Clever people yelled things out of car windows like "Where's the tour bus?" and "Whoo whoo" and some things I can't repeat. We stared around like a pack of fools and couldn't agree on whether to cross with the lights or against them.

A place called Eddie Rockett's sucked us in the minute we hit Rush Street. I do mean that fairly literally. A large guy in an Eddie's shirt grabbed some of us and pushed us through the door, yelling something about free drinks. I guess he was sort of a bouncer in reverse. So we all went in and were about the only people in the bar, drank our free, practically alcohol-free drinks (now we know why he didn't bother to card us) and left. We promised we'd go back, but we lied.

Then we moved on to Shenannigan's, where they gave some of us free beer and we gave them free entertainment. The whole gang got up on the stage and sang "There She Was Just-a-Walkin' Down the Street" and the whole bar joined in on the doo-wa diddys. Maybe there was more alcohol in that first drink than we thought, but it seemed like a good idea at the time. I can't wait to see the videotape. Shenannigan's reminded me of Kite's because you couldn't move or breathe and your feet stuck to the floor. It was still fun.

Mother's gave us free cheap champagne. I could drink free in Chicago for the next ten years if I kept my figure. It's the most sexist thing I've ever taken advantage of. For a while, we just stood and gaped. Two men were dancing with each other, one man was dancing with himself and another was dancing with the mirror. It didn't remind me of anything in Manhattan, that's for sure.

But what the hell, we'd never see any of these people again. We danced in big groups, and we danced with a random bunch of guys with names like "Stake." I'm sure I got lung cancer from gasping for breath in all that smoke. The nice thing about 26 girls is that if a guy gets annoying, you just signal for help and you get surrounded and someone else decoys him away. I went home fairly early, but most of us stayed until one girl told a Chicago cop to, well, I can't write it but it starts with an F and ends in off, and the cop decided it was time for her to leave the bar. Quite a night for a bunch of naive Kansans.

All our nights were pretty much the same. We went out, told people we were from Kansas, and they laughed at us. I never want to hear the words tornado, Dorothy or Toto again. "Gee," we'd say, "I've never heard that joke before."

I told you we were tourists, though, so you know we did more than just go to bars. We also got up far earlier than we wanted to and took cabs to places that we thought we ought to see. We saw, in one day, the aquarium, the natural-history museum, a Cubs game, and the el train. The otters were swimming, the Egyptian mummies were dead, the Cubs lost, there was a man hitting his wife on the el and, all in all, it was a typical day in Chicago. The people in the McDonald's were also rude, which means it was a typical day just about anywhere.

I also know we were tourists because everywhere we went, we were dressed all wrong. I was either roasting or freezing the whole trip. Shorts and a T-shirt were entirely wrong for a baseball game where everyone else was wearing gloves and wool blankets, and jeans and a jacket messed me up in a bar where everyone else seemed to be wearing as little as possible. I already told you I forgot my black leather. My umbrella turned inside out the first day, and someone left a camera in a taxi, but no one was mugged, and we only had one small accident in a taxi (right after the girls told the cabbie what a wonderful driver he was) so, all in all, I guess it came out even.

We wrapped up the trip with a cold boat ride, and in between we went to Second City where the only skit that our whole group really appreciated was called "Farmin-apostrophe," the drinks cost a fortune and the gourmet crackers and cheese came in cellophane wrappers. I can't tell you how much we shopped or how much we ate or how much we spent (too much would probably cover it). Chicago was super and, when the pictures come out, I'm sure it will have been worth all the trouble lugging the camera around.

I'm glad to be home, though, where the only homeless people are usually the ones who've lost their dorm keys. We've all heard the Kansas jokes too many times, and I can afford to buy drinks with actual alcohol content. This vacation was exhausting. I had to take the day off to recover.

Manhattan benefits

Editor,

Your editorial in last Friday's Collegian, "New vision required for local business," contained some statements that need to be addressed. You asked for someone to please stop crying. Who is crying? You referred to the number of sour notes heard in downtown Manhattan but failed to tell us where they came from. You asked why people were alarmed when J.C. Penney and five other businesses located downtown chose to relocate in the mall. This happened in several other retail areas of our community.

With the opening of a large retail facility like our mall come problems that are inherent with growth. The amount of retail space available in Manhattan changed substantially the day Manhattan Town Center became a reality. The vacancies created by those merchants moving from existing locations to the mall became difficult to rent. Until Manhattan's reputation as a regional shopping center grew, other retail establishments were cautious about wanting to locate here. Three years after the mall opened, those vacancies beginning to be filled.

Our downtown, along with other commercial areas, is getting a second wind that will hopefully bring it back to the point where it can be fully economically viable. Now our community can attract and support additional retail and service establishments necessary to fill the commercial space avaiable in our community.

You also mentioned Salina and Topeka as examples of cities with new malls whose downtowns are vital, beautiful parts of their cities. You must be kidding. The opening of West Ridge Mall not only dealt a knockout blow to downtown Topeka that it may never recover from, but it also made a retail wasteland of White Lakes Mall.

For two years, Salina's downtown has been asking Manhattan how it did it. The two malls in Salina have never been as successful as ours. I suggest you take another look at Topeka and Salina. I believe you will find that either city would happily change downtown conditions with us.

As long as Manhattan Town Center, downtown Manhattan, Aggieville, Westloop, Village Plaza and other commercial districts in Manhattan continue to form a regional shopping center for Kansas, all of Manhattan will benefit from the sales-tax dollars generated and the employment opportunities created. Has the evolution been easy? No. Are we there yet? Not quite. Will we be there soon? Absolutely.

Shots needed

Editor,

The present college-age segment of our population is at the highest risk of getting measles, mumps and rubella. K-State has had outbreaks of measles the last two years, as have many colleges and universities throughout the nation.

The new recommendation is that if you were born after 1956, you should have two separate vaccinations for measles at this point. The vaccine of the mid 19t0s has a failure rate of 5 percent or more, and that of the mid-1970s was given too early in life.

- Get vaccinated if you were born after 1956 and have never been vaccinated.
- Get revaccinated if you received your measles shot between 1963-67.
- Get revaccinated if you received your measles shot before you were 15 months old.

Call your parents, your hometown doctor or your county health department to check your risk. If you need another measles vaccination, get it in your hometown or at Lafene Health Center Immunization and Allergy Clinic. Measles can be a serious disease; now is the time to check and protect yourself.

Gardner helps program grow

Former coach helped begin push that ended with Ahearn

K-State Athletic Hall of Fame Jack Gardner

By Scott Paske
Sports Reporter

The annual camp-out for season basketball tickets — a trademark of K-Staters' devotion — is just days away, and so is the induction of Jack Gardner into the K-State Athletic Hall of Fame.

Gardner, Wildcat basketball coach from 1939-42 and 1946-53, authored the early chapters of K-State's sports history.

His work included the direction of the 'Cats' only appearance in an NCAA championship game, a 68-58 loss to Kentucky in 1951.

"I have so many great memories of K-State," said Gardner, who will be one of eight inductees Oct. 5. "It's the school I love, and in a sense, it's where I still consider home."

Gardner made K-State a pleasant home for 'Cat fans during his second tenure at the school following duty in World War II. In just two years, the New Mexico native took a program that endured 15 consecutive losing seasons to the NCAA Final Four.

"There were a lot of talented kids coming back to school after the war, and we were fortunate enought to get a few of them," Gardner said. "We made it all the way to Madison Square Garden that year, and things got rolling from there."

Things began rolling both on and off the court. Fan interest increased greatly. Nichols Gymnasium was no longer able to accommodate the stand-room-only crowds.

A new facility was needed.

"I spent a lot of time during those years traveling back and forth to Topeka meeting with state legislators," Gardner said. "There were parades and picket signs to create interest. We invited the legislators down to some of the games, and let them see some of the shenannigans, like people hanging on the rafters and sitting on the practice goals to watch the games.

As a result, the state agreed to appropriate funds for the construction of Ahearn Field House. The facility debuted Dec. 9, 1950, as the 'Cats defeated Utah State 66-56.

"There was so much fanfare to it all," Gardner said. "It was the teams that created the interest."

The 'Cats, led by seniors Ernie Barrett and Jack Stone, finished the 1950-51 season with a 25-4 record, and won the Big Seven regular-season crown and holiday tournament.

K-State also won the NCAA West Regional over perennial power Oklahoma A&M (now Oklahoma State) to advance to the title game.

"That is the greatest team I ever coached at K-State," Gardner said. "We got off to a poor start with a loss to Long Island University at Madison Square Garden in our first game, but we were able to bounce back."

Gardner, for different reasons, listed the two matchups with Long Island that year among his greatest memories.

"That year, Long Island was ranked No. 1, and we trailed most of the way in that first game," Gardner said. "At the end, we were making a great comeback, and I looked down the bench at their coach, and he was telling his players, 'You're going to throw it away. You're going to throw it away.'"

"Nobody was aware at the time, but Long Island was involved in a point-shaving scandal that year," he said.

K-State lost the first meeting 60-59, but the teams met again in Manhattan halfway through the season. Gardner said his 'Cats were ready.

"There was a terrible icestorm in Manhattan that night, and I was worried we wouldn't have a good crowd," Gardner said. "Boy, was I wrong. I had trouble making it to the game on time that night because there were so many fans."

An Ahearn-record crowd of 14,028 saw K-State whip Long Island 85-65. The 'Cats won 11 of their next 12 games, including a 68-44 thrashing of Oklahoma A&M in the regional final.

Gardner said his team drew praise from A&M's legendary coach, Henry Iba.

"He was quoted in one newspaper as saying we were one of the finest college teams he had ever seen," Gardner said. "I believe that was one of the worst defeats he'd ever suffered in his career."

Gardner posted a career mark of 147-81 in 10 seasons before moving to the University of Utah, where he coached the Utes to a pair of Final Four appearances from 1953-71. He was inducted into the Naismith Basketball Hall of Fame in 1983.

"That was the ultimate," Gardner said. "There is no higher honor in basketball, and I was grateful for the recognition."

The 80-year-old Gardner currently splits his time between playing golf and working as a consultant for the Utah Jazz. Gardner works at rookie and veteran camps, evaluates team workouts and serves as a scout and consultant for the Jazz in NBA draft procedures.

Gardner was instrumental in the drafting of NBA All-Star John Stockton.

Telephone interview great fun

Scott Paske
SPORTS REPORTER

For about 25 minutes Monday, I had the pleasure of taking a ride in a time capsule with someone who helped put K-State on the athletic map — former Wildcat basketball coach Jack Gardner.

All I can say is, eat your heart out, Michael J. Fox. Back to the Future wasn't this good.

Gardner coached the 'Cats for 10 seasons, including stints before and after World War II.

Gardner took time from his busy schedule as a consultant with the NBA's Utah Jazz to reflect on his days at Manhattan in a telephone interview. Some of the names, places and memories he shared from the late 1940s and early 1950s are well-documented at the Naismith Basketball Hall of Fame in Springfield, Mass.

It is credentials like Gardner's that makes the first class of inductees into the new K-State Athletic Hall of Fame exciting. He will join the likes of Veryl Switzer, Lynn Dickey and Ward Haylett in a black-tie induction ceremony Oct. 5 at Bramlage Coliseum.

Like the others, Gardner was proud to be part of the inaugural class.

"I am very honored to be one of the first ones to be inducted," Gardner said. "I wasn't even aware Kansas State was doing something like this, so it came as a total surprise. I think I'm more flattered with it than I would have been if I knew they were doing it and had been told to expect an honor like it."

Acceptance speeches are becoming old hat to Gardner. The USC graduate will be enshrined for the sixth time, with previous recognition given by halls at the University of Utah, state of Utah, the Helms Foundation, Modesto (Calif.) Junior College and the Naismith Hall of Fame.

At April's NCAA Final Four in Denver, Gardner received the National Basketball Coaches' Association Golden Anniversary Award for 50 years of outstanding service to the game.

All this from a guy that still considers K-State his home.

"Those are things I'm really proud of, now that I look back," Gardner said. "There have been a lot of good memories."

The former coach said watching K-State's student body rally behind an upstart program was as important to the evolution of 'Cat basketball as the performance of his teams.

"There was really something special about it," Gardner said. "They packed the house at Nichols (Gymnasium) night after night."

Gardner said the support made him strive to do his job better.

"Just because of K-State's location, it was always difficult to bring in a lot of great players," he said. "Kansas was just too small geographically to produce a lot of great players. I had the same problems when I went to Utah.

"It seemed like I always had to out-coach my opponent and our players always had to out-play the other team to win. But we were fortunate to get a lot of good players right after the war."

Gardner's NCAA runner-up team featured seven players who were drafted to play pro basketball.

"Not only was that an outstanding team, but it was full of a lot of great individuals," Gardner said. "All of them graduated, and several of them earned advanced degrees."

Ernie Barrett, one of Gardner's seniors on the 1950-51 team, will join his coach in the Oct. 5 ceremony.

Spikers to face WSU

Coach says match will be preview of conference play

By Russ Ewy
Sports Reporter

The volleyball squad will travel to Wichita tonight for a 7 p.m. match against Wichita State University. It will be the team's first match in nine days.

Coach Scott Nelson said he is hopeful that his team has benefited from the rest.

"We'll find out if (the time off) is positive or negative," Nelson said. "We needed to go back and re-emphasize some of our fundamentals that we really didn't have time to focus on in practice. So, from that perspective, it's good. We can go back and work a little on our skill development. There were just some fundamental things we wanted to improve on our defense and blocking, as well as our serving. We've spent some time strengthening those aspects," Nelson said.

"From the team aspect, of course, it's a little tougher without competition to continue to improve in your team systems," he said. "Another positive aspect would be to get (some rest for) a bunch of nagging injuries that some players have. So I think health-wise we're in pretty good shape now."

Nelson said the Shockers may give the 'Cats some insight as to what to expect from their upcoming conference matches.

"WSU is a good team for us," Nelson said. "Already this year they lost to (University of) Kansas in four games, then beat them in five games. Of course, Kansas is in our conference, so we can get an indirect measure of how we'll stack up against Big Eight competition.

"They're an excellent defensive team. They're a typical WSU team — real scrappy. What that does, it puts pressure on an opponent to execute their game plan because they dig up a lot of balls and keep them in play. So, technically, the execution of our first-ball offense will be important for us."

The spikers' last match was against Ohio State in the Buckeye Invitational. The 'Cats went 1-2, but not to the disappointment of Nelson.

"I thought our concentration and focus was really excellent in the first match of the Buckeye Invitational, then we weren't real sharp in the second match," Nelson said. "When we played Ohio State in the finals, I thought we played to our strengths quite well. We just played a team that was better than us. From that perspective we were generally pleased."

Intramural calendar loaded with team, individual events

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

Intramurals are in full-swing for the fall semester with one large event completed and the individual and team sports in the heat of competition.

To look ahead, the wrestling meet will dominate next week, Oct. 1-5. Entries for the five-day event will be accepted through Thursday.

Divisional competition will begin on Oct. 1 at 7 p.m., and all-University finals will conclude the competition at 6 p.m. Oct. 5.

The meet is one of the largest events that Recreational Services sponsors, said Steve Martini, director of intramurals. Last year, 235 wrestlers competed in the meet.

The meet is also one of the largest spectator events for the intramural program. Martini said three stands are usually full of fans backing the wrestlers.

"On finals night it gets real crazy and wild in here (Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex). People are real supportive of the wrestlers, and the matches are good, too," he said.

This week marks the beginning of the student golf meet that will run through Oct. 7 at Stagg Hill Golf Course. The golf pairings can be picked up in the Recreational Services offices.

Following the conclusion of the wrestling and golf tournaments on Oct. 14, the one-day cross country meet will begin at Warner Park. The races have four separate divisions: fraternity, residence halls, independents and women. Martini estimated that 175 runners will compete.

As far as the intramural standings are concerned, there is nothing to report yet. The swim meet has concluded, and the other seven events are tallied as the competition continues.

The only other completed event is the faculty/staff golf tournament. On Friday, 160 members of the K-State faculty and staff participated in the golf tournament. The 3- or 4-man scramble event was won by Sid Stevenson, physical education assistant professor; Larry Glasgow, chemical engineering professor; and Neal Rassman, landscape architecture assistant professor, with a round of 66.

Verbal skills emphasized when working with others

By Mary Skinner
Collegian Reporter

Understanding people's values and beliefs is the key to dealing with difficult people, said Joe Younger, manager of training and development for faculty and staff.

Younger spoke Monday morning at the seminar "Dealing with Difficult People," in the K-State Union.

The seminar, presented by the University's personnel services, focused on communication skills and how to communicate effectively with people who are hard to handle, whether it be in the workplace or in a personal relationship.

"I wanted to learn how to handle different situations in the office to improve relations," said Diana Loomis, animal science supervisor. "It really showed how to approach things from a positive standpoint."

Younger described a difficult person as someone who doesn't want to do what is expected of them.

"Everyone has at least one difficult person in their lives," he said. "And you are also someone's difficult person."

Younger said that individuals choose who they are and where they are going, and that people are a product of their experiences. To deal with difficult experiences, an understanding of needs, values and behaviors needs to be reached.

> Everyone has at least one difficult person in their lives. And you are also someone's difficult person.
> —Joe Younger
> Manager of Training and Development for Faculty and Staff

The first step to understanding someone is through observation of their behaviors. The next step is intervening in those actions so they will not continue.

"As long as behavior is praised, I will continue or if you don't say that it's wrong, I'll keep doing it," Younger said.

Individual values develop between birth and 21 years, and they remain the same unless there is an emotionally significant event, such as a marriage or divorce, Younger said.

From individual values come a person's beliefs, a belief system, and from these come attitudes and behaviors.

Younger said that people will be comfortable to a certain degree and that some things will always be kept quiet.

He also gave examples of types of difficult people, including "tanks," who run over others emotionally, and chronic complainers.

Younger suggests looking tanks in the eye and explaining what actions are offensive while not putting all of the blame on them.

To deal with the chronic complainers, he said to listen to their main points, ask them for a realistic direction and involve them in the solution.

Playwrights get feedback from audience criticism

By Cindy Jeffrey
Collegian Reporter

Aspiring playwrights can take the step between the classroom and full production in K-State's Playwrights' Stage.

Norman Fedder, professor of speech and theater, said a play, unlike other forms of writing, must be heard and seen to be fully realized.

"A script is like a recipe — not the cake," said Carl Hinrichs, associate professor in speech and theater. "You are writing an idea and directions for a play, what you put into the script has to be what actors can use. Otherwise, it's useless."

The Playwrights' Stage first began last spring in response to the needs of graduate students in a playwright workshop. There was a need for a transitional step, said Fedder.

The Playwrights' Stage provides students the opportunity to have their works presented in staged readings before an audience.

Since these plays are works-in-progress, the playwright is looking for problems that have been missed as well as solutions to problems already identified, Hinrichs said.

All the plays chosen for the season have been written and rewritten many times by students in advanced playwriting or the graduate workshop. Two of the plays are by faculty members.

An important part of the Playwrights' Stage is the discussion among the audience, actors, director and playwright following each show. Advisers Fedder and Hinrichs lead the discussions.

"The most exciting part is the intelligent, interesting comments by the audience," Hinrichs said, referring to last spring's productions.

"You hear a pattern of comments that reinforce your own, but you also get comments about things you missed that may be very important to a revision," said Mike Solomonson, graduate student in speech and theater, and playwright for the first production, 2 p.m. Oct. 7 in the Purple Masque Theatre.

"Until playwrights can hear voices and see faces with their characters and get feedback from an audience, they don't know for sure what works," said Stephanie Cox, graduate student in English.

"They're script-in-hand, minimal productions with usually only three or four rehearsals the week before," Cox said.

People with no experience or who do not have time to commit to a full production may find the Playwrights' Stage a lot of fun, she said.

"Just going is like taking a course in dramatic structure," Fedder said.

Auditions for each of this season's productions will be 7 to 9 p.m., Sept. 24-25, in Nichols Room 8.

THE RIDE

KSU STUDENT TRIPS TO ART MUSEUMS
made possible through the fine arts fee

The department of art will organize a series of trips to art museums throughout the current academic year. The student fine arts fee assessed at registration will subsidize the cost of the travel. Please take advantage of this wonderful opportunity to view exciting exhibits and collections in the region. Keep an eye on The Collegian for activities associated with THE RIDE.

The first trip will be to see an outstanding collection of drawings at the Salina Art Center, Salina, Kansas and to visit Lucas, Kansas to see the Garden of Eden (listed on the National registry of Historic Places). The collection of drawings at the Salina Art Center is entitled Training The Hand and The Eye: American Drawings from the Cooper-Hewett Museum. The exhibit includes exploratory drawings, and works in progress by 34 American artists including Winslow Homer, Frederic Church, Thomas Moran, and William Chase. The Garden of Eden was created by S.L. Dinsmoor, an eccentric Kansan. He built a home of native limestone and in the yard surrounding the house he created a concrete wonder that defies description. The first Ride will leave the K-State Union at 8:15 a.m. on Friday, October 5, 1990. Reservations are required.

Contact the Department of Art 532-6605, or stop by room 105 in the Art Building for information or to reserve your seat. Make your reservations by the end of the day on Monday, October 1st.

The cost of the trip will be eight dollars per person, includes bus transportation and entry fees.

of having an "elitist door policy."

"Our dress code is not that strict," Streit said. "We don't allow cut-offs or bandanas, and we're strict on IDs for our own safety."

Streit said he wished individuals would have come to him before posting the letter because there was no truth behind the accusations.

"I wish I knew who wrote the letter because I'm kind of mad," Mertz said. "I wish they would have come and talked to me. I don't understand why it came a month later. I don't understand the lag time."

KCT

Murray State and the Oregon Institute of Technology all dropped two-year programs in favor of four-year degrees.

Bob Krause, K-State vice president of institutional advancement, said the proposed merger is different from those situations because they all involved primarily four-year programs.

"Here we are dealing with a much different situation where the emphasis will be on the two-year program," he said.

All students would be required to complete a two-year program before they could move on to the four-year programs, Krause said. Moveover, KCT will design its own curriculum after the merger.

If the sales-tax proposal is approved by Salina's voters, K-State has recognized a responsibility to raise $2.6 million for residence halls and a $2 million endowment for scholarships, Krause said.

The money for the residence halls would be raised by either a bond issue or a contract with a private developer, and user fees would used to pay off the bond issue, he said.

The KSU Foundation would raise the money for the endowment over a period of years, he said.

If Salina voters reject the tax increase, Krause said it would be the end of the merger proposal.

Isenhour

Vice Provost Robert Kruh will be the acting dean of the College of Arts and Sciences until an interim dean is chosen. The selection process will take about two weeks.

The interim dean will hold the office until a nation-wide search for a new dean of the College of Arts and Sciences can be made and a successor is chosen. Coffman said he plans to have a replacement hired by July 1, 1991.

Although Coffman said Isenhour will be a full-time faculty member in the chemistry department, he was unsure of his exact duties.

"Dr. Isenhour has an eminent record of success as a scholar in the field of chemistry, and there is not any question that he will be immediately productive in his field, both teaching and research," Coffman said.

Isenhour said he had not yet talked to the department head about what his duties will be in the chemistry department.

Before coming to K-State, Isenhour was the dean of the College of Science at Utah State University. He has written more than 150 papers and books in his field and is actively receiving funding from the National Science Foundation.

Isenhour said in his statement that he has been looking for positions elsewhere for the past two months.

"I turned down a major opportunity last spring because the job with Arts and Sciences here was not finished," he said in the interview.

He said he plans to make his State of the College address public even though he is not the dean of the college.

"I spent the past weekend preparing my State of the College Address for the Oct. 4 faculty meeting. I am the only person who can deliver this address, and I still intend to make it public whether or not I am officially dean," he said in his statement.

Trees spared

Protesters halt lot construction

By Shannon Heim
Collegian Reporter

At least a dozen K-State employees left their offices Tuesday afternoon and surrounded five trees on the north side of Umberger Hall in an effort to save them from destruction.

These trees, in addition to eight trees removed Monday, would have been cut down to clear land to construct B-11 parking lot and to reroute the storm drainage area if the employees had not protested.

"We didn't know anything about it (the construction) until they started work yesterday," said Darla Whipple-Frain, assistant in the extension communications department.

Director of Facilities Planning Larry Garvin said he was equally surprised by the protest.

"We had gone through all the reviews appropriate," Garvin said. "If people would have

The group left their jobs in Umberger and successfully stopped today's scheduled removal, hampering the construction of the parking lot between Umberger and Mid-Campus Drive.

Salina voters approve new sales tax

By Elvyn Jones
Staff Reporter

Salina voters did their part to welcome K-State into their community.

Salina voters approved a two-year sales tax increase that will raise $4.5 million to be used to help fund the merger between Kansas College of Technology and K-State.

The half-cent sales tax has a sunset clause that will not allow the sales tax to be renewed after two years without another special election.

Shirley Jacques, Saline county clerk, said the final vote count in Tuesday's special election was 5,910 in favor of the proposition and 2,883 opposed. The vote represented 46 percent of the registered voters, she said.

Bob Krause, K-State vice president of institutional advancement, said merger now must be approved by the Kansas Legislature. He said administators hope to have the details of the merger worked out when the Legislative session begins in January.

The large margin will be important when the merger comes before the Kansas Legislature for approval.

"All looked at this vote as a watershed," he said. "The community has demonstrated its support and willingness to contribute additional resources. I'm optimistic the Legislature will respond to this."

A total of $12.1 million dollars will be needed to complete the merger, Krause said. In addition to the $4.5 million approved by the Salina voters, plans call for the contribution of $2 million from the state of Kansas, $1 million raised by the sale of KCT property and $4.6 million from K-State.

K-State's contribution includes $2.6 million for new residence halls and the creation of a $2 million endowment for scholarships, he said.

Presidents of the three schools affected by the merger and those who worked for the passage of the proposal expressed elation over the voter's decision.

"We are very happy about it," K-State president Jon Wefald said. "We expected it to pass and are delighted that it did."

Anthony Tilmans, KCT president, said the margin demonstrated the support his institution has in the community.

"I'm very pleased," he said. "To

Iraqi air embargo approved by U.N.

Hussein increasing threats, military buildup

By The Associated Press

The U.N. Security Council on Tuesday voted 14-1 to impose an air embargo against Iraq in retaliation for its invasion and annexation of Kuwait. Cuba cast the lone dissenting vote in the special session, which extended the powers of an earlier U.N. trade embargo.

It was the ninth resolution passed by the Security Council condemning Baghdad and its leader, Saddam Hussein, for its attack on Kuwait. The takeover, which took hours to complete, left Iraq in control of 20 percent of the world's oil reserves.

World prices of oil have nearly doubled since the invasion to almost $40 a barrel, the New York Stock Exchange has sunk to a 14-month low and gold has passed $400 an ounce as the economic repercussions of the invasion became apparent.

Crude oil prices are equal to a record set 10 years ago.

Resolution 670 also calls on all member states of the United Nations to deny landing rights to airplanes coming from Iraq or Kuwait.

Only flights authorized by the Security Council's sanctions committee will be allowed to go to Iraq and Kuwait, and then only after they have been inspected to confirm they are carrying humanitarian cargo.

It also calls on all U.N. member nations to "detain any ships of Iraqi registry which enter their ports and which are being or have been used in violation of Resolution 661," the council's original trade embargo resolution passed Aug. 6.

Cuba, which has said it is against any sanctions, was the only nation to oppose the resolution.

Secretary of State James Baker III represented the United States at the council meeting, and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze took his country's seat and chaired the meeting.

Shevardnadze joined an international chorus of rage and indignation at Iraq earlier Tuesday, calling its invasion of Kuwait an act of terrorism and warning of possible U.N. military action.

"A great war may break out in the gulf region any day, any moment," he said.

The Pentagon announced in Washington that Iraq has sharply increased the number of troops and tanks in Kuwait and southern Iraq the past week.

Spokesman Pete Williams told reporters the Iraqi deployments still appear essentially a defensive force, but are capable of converting to an offensive strike force.

Syrian President Hafez Assad ended his four-day visit to the Iranian capital, Tehran, having failed to persuade Iranian leaders not to send food and other essentials to Iraq.

Sources close to the Syrian delegation said Tehran insisted that the embargo allows humanitarian shipments of food.

Saddam has declared he would rather go to war than let the U.N.-ordered embargo strangle his country.

Baghdad announced it would put President Bush on trial for crimes against the peoples of the world, and it set a date — Oct. 15.

Shevardnadze suggested the same should be done to Saddam.

Survey shows loan costs

By Shannon Heim
Collegian Reporter

Many undergraduate students receiving financial aid at K-State often underestimate the amount they will owe when loan repayment begins.

A recent survey conducted by the Office of Student Financial Assistance found that students need to be more aware of the financial commitment they are making when they take out a student loan.

Larry Viterna, director of student financial assistance, said the average amount a student borrows during four years at the University is $7,000. To repay the loan, the student will have to pay 120 monthly payments of $84.93. This figure includes about $3,200 in interest, accrued at 8 percent.

"We estimate a year of school will cost the student about $6,950," Viterna said.

This amount includes tuition, books, rent, food, transportation and personal expenses.

"This estimate is higher than most Kansas institutions," he said. "That way, I think we can more realistically and adequately fund students."

Viterna said he tries to allow extra money when estimating because he realizes students often pay for more than they get when it comes to basic fees such as residence hall living or greek housing.

"For example, students pay $2,540 per year to live in residence halls," Viterna said. "This includes meals, but most residents miss about 30 percent of them. Therefore, they buy food somewhere else, so we add 10 percent to the budget."

The survey, which must be completed by all students accepting a Stafford Student Loan (formerly GSL) or a Supplemental Loan for Students, provides information that helps the office do a more effective job, he said.

Hope Swartz, senior in public relations, said she remembers filling out the survey.

"It was just more paperwork in a long drawn-out process,"

Hayden backs tax to fund MOE

The Issue:
Margin of Excellence

Gov. Mike Hayden was on campus Tuesday afternoon to reaffirm his support for funding the third year of the Margin of Excellence.

Hayden met with President Jon Wefald, Faculty Senate President Wayne Nafziger and Student Body President Todd Johnson to endorse a plan to fund the margin during the next legislative session.

"I have already indicated my willingness to support an increase in the cigarette tax that the Board of Regents has endorsed," Hayden said.

The regents have called for a 10 cents per pack tax on cigarettes to fund the third year of MOE. The tax is expected to generate about $20 million.

A similar tax proposal passed in the Senate last year, but was rejected by the House.

"I think we have an excellent opportunity now to prove to the Legislature the need for the third year of the margin, and a much better chance to get it through the house," Hayden said.

"We're very happy to hear he is specifically supporting year number three of the margin and would like to see it accomplished during the 1991 legislative session," Wefald said. "I think if Gov. Mike Hayden is determined, if re-elected, to fund the third year of the margin it would have a very good shot."

The board has endorsed the cigarette tax with the hope the money will be channeled to public higher education and MOE, Wefald said. This is the governor's position as well.

Hayden was greeted by about 25 members of the College Republicans outside Anderson Hall. K-State was one of six stops Hayden made during a tour of the regents schools Tuesday.

"The governor indicated he supports the Margin of Excellence, but I hope this means support for the 1991 legislative session," Nafziger said. "Kansas' state universities have fallen in competitiveness even with the

KGB foils Soviet hijacker

MOSCOW (AP) — A special KGB team foiled an attempt to hijack an airplane by a man who claimed to have a bomb hidden in his briefcase, the state news agency Tass reported Tuesday.

It was the latest in a spate of Soviet hijackings and hijack attempts, most involving the diversion of flights to Nordic countries.

The would-be hijacker, Grigory Polyakov, 53, boarded the flight from Leningrad to the White Sea port of Arkhangelsk on Monday night and tried to divert it to Stockholm, Sweden, the report said.

The crew convinced Polyakov that the plane needed to land at Arkhangelsk for fuel. Once on the ground there, authorities negotiated the release of the 66 passengers, it said.

A trained unit of the KGB security police then captured Polyakov, the report said, but gave no further details of the action. It said he had three previous convictions, including one in 1988 for attempting to leave the Soviet Union illegally.

U.S. officers check passports

LONDON (AP) — U.S. immigration officers began checking passports Tuesday at London's Heathrow and Gatwick airports in an effort to reduce long delays clearing customs in the United States, the U.S. Embassy said.

The 45 officers will check travel documents on this side of the Atlantic for four months as part of an experimental program.

A record number of tourists to the United States has resulted in routine delays of two hours at busy U.S. airports and waits of up to five hours for some flights have been reported.

Passengers from Britain represent a quarter of all international travelers entering the United States, immigration officials said.

Red Square flier faces charges

HAMBURG, West Germany (AP) — Matthias Rust, the young West German pilot who stunned the world by landing a small plane on Moscow's Red Square, has been charged with attempted murder, authorities said Tuesday.

Rust, 22, was charged in the November 1989 stabbing of a nurse in a Hamburg hospital, said an official of the Hamburg prosecutor's office.

The official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Rust was charged at the beginning of the month.

Rust allegedly stabbed the nurse after she fended off his attempts to kiss her. He was held briefly in custody, then released on bail.

Rust flew a single-engine Cessna plane undetected across a vast space of Soviet territory and landed at Red Square in May 1987.

Man wins lottery, then dies

BOSTON (AP) — A 37-year-old cafeteria cook died of a heart attack weeks after winning $3.6 million in the Massachusetts lottery.

"All he really bought was a Dalmatian puppy for the kids. He couldn't have afforded that before," said William Curry's sister-in-law Shirley Bourdon.

Curry, 37, died Monday, his first day back on the job at the Blue Cross-Blue Shield lunchroom after taking two weeks off to celebrate. Curry was adamant about keeping his job with the Merit Food Co., where he had worked for 20 years.

Record set in Alcatraz swim

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Two 10-year-olds have become the youngest to make the 1.5-mile swim from Alcatraz Island to the city.

Pat Reid completed the swim in 62-degree water in just under an hour Monday to break the youngest swimmer title set in 1955 by John Hunter, then 14.

Reid was greeted by 73-year-old George Farnsworth, the oldest swimmer to challenge the treacherous Alcatraz currents.

"You finished strong," he said. "You broke an hour. Your legs all right?"

"Oh, yeah," Reid said. "They're in good shape."

Eighteen minutes later, he was joined by Emma Macchiarini-Mankin, who last year became the youngest swimmer to cross the Golden Gate.

Both youngsters were accompanied by their fathers, who matched them stroke for stroke, and by escort boats.

Junction City man found dead

JUNCTION CITY (AP) — A 26-year-old man who was released on probation from Geary County Jail was found shot to death just hours later, police said.

The body of Frank Eugene Jenkins Jr. of Junction City was found early Tuesday in a parking lot. He was granted probation Monday afternoon for convictions of misdemeanor theft and delivery of marijuana.

Police said Jenkins was walking through the parking lot when he was shot, possibly more than once.

Mother charged in son's death

GARDEN CITY (AP) — Doctors testified Tuesday at the trial of a woman accused of killing her 4-year-old son that the boy was smothered.

"I believe the child died from non-accidental means and that he died from asphyxiation and from being smothered," said Dr. Michael Shull, a pediatrician who treated Jose Antonio Lumbrera in the emergency room at St. Catherine Hospital.

The boy was lifeless and not breathing when his mother, Diana Lumbrera, 32, brought him to the hospital May 1, Shull said.

Lumbrera, who moved to Garden City from Texas in 1985, is charged with first-degree murder in connection with her son's death. She also faces murder charges in Texas for the earlier deaths of three of her daughters. Grand juries in Texas are looking into the deaths of two other sons and a niece.

Dr. Albert H. Gaines testified Tuesday he treated the child one day before his death for a slight respiratory infection he said was not life-threatening. Hospitalization was not considered, he said.

Area reservists called to duty

WICHITA (AP) — A U.S. Army reserve transportation company based in Osage City and its detachment from Emporia have been called up for duty in Operation Desert Shield, officials said Tuesday.

The 129th Transportation Company and the 129th Transportation Detachment were told to report to their home stations on Thursday.

Together the units have about 150 reservists.

The 89th U.S. Army Reserve Command in Wichita said their primary mission is to haul heavy equipment in tractor-trailers.

The units will deploy to Fort Riley next Tuesday for more training. The command did not release their final destination to assist the buildup in the Persian Gulf.

Urban area residents to return to rural roots in coming decade

Returnees will face new problem types

LOU DOUGLAS LECTURE
David Orr "Refugees or Homecomers: The Reinhabitation of Rural America."

By Scott Levendofsky
Collegian Reporter

The reinhabitation from urban cities to rural America will be a realization in the next decade, said David Orr at the 10th Anniversary Series of the Lou Douglas Lectures.

Orr, the second speaker in a series of four scheduled this semester, addressed a near-capacity crowd 7:30 p.m. in Forum Hall Tuesday.

Gary Coates, professor in architecture, listed Orr's contribution to the environmental movement as the Meadowcreek Project, a nonprofit environmental education organization dedicated to the development of educational programs and fund raising.

Orr said people have been moving out of rural America steadily for the last 40 years and said the reality is that they will be returning to rural areas.

"The latest census figures indicate an all-time low in the rural population," he said. "The percentage of the rural population in this country is down to 22.9 percent. In 1970, it was 31.4 percent. In 1950, the ratio was 43.9 percent."

Orr said there are three reasons why reinhabitation is inevitable. First, the end of the fossil fuel era is approaching, and the days of cheap energy are over. Cheap fossil fuels helped to create cities, he said, but fossil fuels are finite and cities will soon follow the same path.

Second, scientists now know there is a global increase in temperature because the earth is seven-tenths of a degree Celsius warmer now than at the turn of the century. Even if people stopped producing ozone deteriorating gases today, the earth would be 2½ degrees Celsius warmer due to the heating effect people have put into motion.

Third, Orr said cities aren't working. A natural breakdown is taking place and the bigger the city, the bigger the breakdown. Orr said the breakdown of cities refers to crime rates, economic stability and environmental destruction.

If people do start to migrate back to the land, Orr said the question is the condition of the land.

He suggested an ecology curriculum be emphasized in education, emphasizing sustainable agriculture programs and environmentally conscious spending by the University and the need for a new generation of farmers.

Francisco Gurria/Collegian

Dr. David Orr, director of the Environmental Studies Program at Oberlin College, addresses the Lou Douglas Lecture audience Tuesday night in Union Forum Hall. Orr spoke about the re-ruralization of America and K-State's role in educating American society about environmental awareness.

Student votes make significant difference

As Americans, we have the responsibility to vote.

As Kansans, we should be concerned where the two cadidates for governor stand on important issues.

As students, we have the need to vote.

Nothing else we do is so definite, so straightforward, so easy — something no one can take away. It does not have to be debated by Student Senate. It is not subject to any University policy. Our parents have no say in the matter.

It is something we can do to make a difference.

Politicians no longer actively campaign for the college-age vote, not because we are not significant, but because our generation has the worst voting record in history. It is considered a good turnout if 20 percent of us vote. Imagine what we could do with a 75 percent turnout. They would have to listen to us and what we want. We could make our future something we have a say in.

And we can make an informed vote. Most area newspapers have presented the candidates and the issues clearly, making who and what you're voting for easy to see.

Most importantly, we need to vote.

The issues in this campaign directly affect us as students, like whether to continue the open admissions policy that admits any Kansan with a high school diploma to a state university.

The Nov. 6 vote will decide if a constitutional amendment is approved to place the Kansas Board of Regents and the State Board of Education under direct legislative control. If these boards lose their independence, they will no longer be able to fight legislators over budget cuts or funding for the Margin of Excellence.

And we will have no one to blame but ourselves.

Action needed soon for campus lighting

The issue of campus safety has once again made the headlines, and the task of improving the safety of students and faculty is now in the hands of the University administration.

The Student Senate Campus Safety Task Force's preeminent issue is campus lighting. After last week's after-dark tour, the committee found improvements had been made during the summer, but as a whole, the campus is far too dark.

Areas where new lighting needs to be established or areas where old lighting needs improvement can be found nearly everywhere.

The committee's results are being prepared for release in late October, and the recommendations to Student Senate and the University adminstration need to be acted on as quickly as possible.

Student Senate has done its share by establishing this committee, and the committee has met its responsibility by surveying the campus. It is time for the administration to uphold its obligation to ensure the safety of students and faculty.

University Facilities Management needs to take a hard look at the task force's findings and remedy the poor conditions in the most traveled areas first.

The sidewalks along Mid-Campus Drive, the Union parking lots and the central campus parking lots, like those near Seaton, Holton and Justin halls need lighting more desperately than they need new asphalt or freshly painted lines.

The money already appropriated for improved lighting needs to be put to use as quickly as possible. If appropriated funds do not meet the expected improvement cost, then monies need be raised and the lighting problems fixed.

The safety of students and faculty should not fall prey to inadequate funding or bureaucratic procrastination.

Language masks reality

Jana Leep

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

I am feeling inhibited because the things I really want to talk about are not supposed to be talked about. But I don't mind the truth. And I don't mind the risk.

So, imagine this ... you are walking to class, you feel like shit, but each person you pass is smiling, saying, "Hi! How are you? ... I am great/OK/just fine."

You answer, "I feel great/OK/just fine."

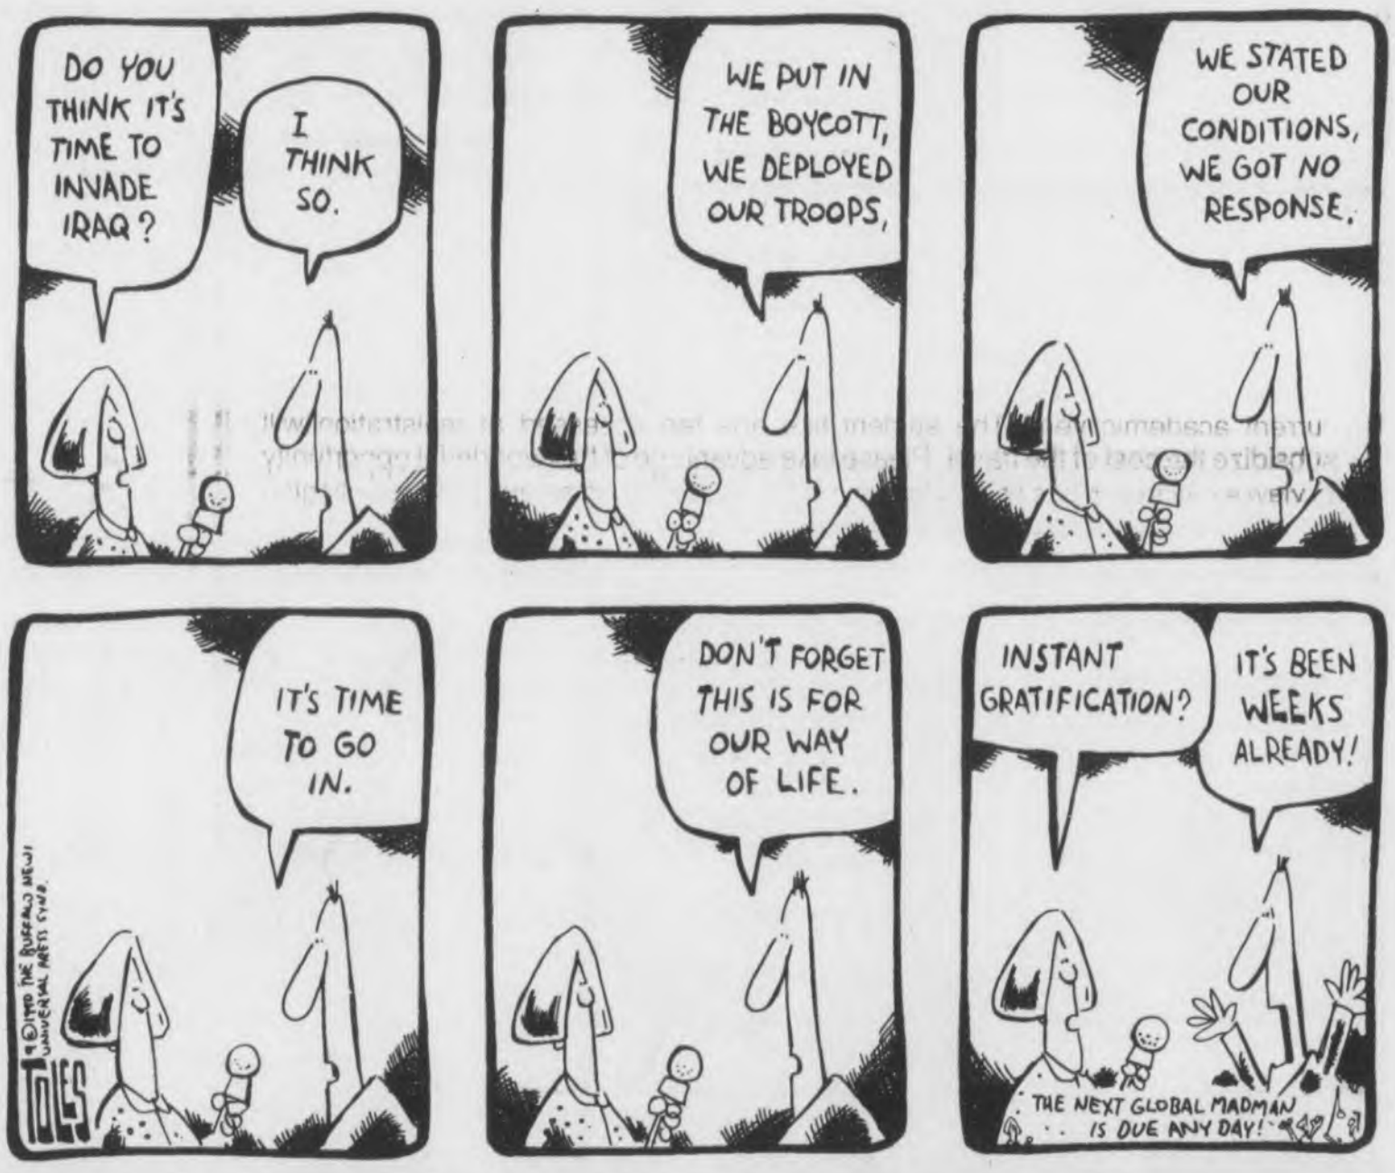
But you are lying. I bet each person you pass probably feels like shit, too. We all pretend we feel great/OK/just fine. At the same time, we say nothing useful, truthful or unusual. Each of us ends up thinking to ourselves, "What the hell is the matter with them? Everybody is stomaching life as if it isn't a bunch of bat vomit."

One time I answered a friendly "hello-how are you" with a "I am horrible/not OK/feel like bat vomit." This poor victim of my experimenting became like a misty blob — incapacitated, clueless and speechless.

Perhaps the meaninglessness of our language and speech patterns results from our hurried pace. We don't have time to engage in conversations. It is not possible to say very much that is meaningful and involved in a minute or second. Yet, while I can see explanations, I don't think this is a valuable trend. In fact, language is becoming a mish-mash of euphemisms.

Euphemisms confuse us, frustrates us, but keep us safe and comfortable. They are words empty of the pain, empty of the experience. Like the euphemisms for death: laid to rest, expired, met his/her maker, bit the dust, cashed in, kicked the bucket, and as doctors prefer to describe death, negative patient outcome. Euphemisms allow us to mean one thing but say another. Euphemisms are dishonest and mask over the reality.

Language distances us from death, just as caskets distance us from the earth. (I am aware that I'm traveling a thin, yet lengthy tangent.) Do we really believe the casket will preserve "our loved one"? That eternal death is a good idea? Caskets just appear to protect "our loved one," just as language can appear to protect us from the harsh reality.



But did you know that a casket can now represent the gender of the "loved one?" Yes, it is true, caskets are masculine and feminine. Some have delicate, fluffy pink liners, stitched with rosebuds ... (How cute! I want one) ... while others have carvings of the Last Supper or wheat shocks on the outside of the corners ... (Now, which one was feminine and which one was masculine?) And after the aesthetically pleasing casket is chosen, special lights in the viewing rooms can be requested to accentuate good features and deemphasize others ... (You mean I have to look good even after I have been "called home" and "passed on").

Language distances us from life, too. Have you ever noticed that "shell shock" has become "post-traumatic stress syndrome"? That "car crashes" have become "automobile accidents"? That when a vehicle is reported on the news or radio as being turned over, on fire or wrecked, we seem to forget that the vehicles are driven by human beings, that vehicles carry human beings? Traffic reports speak of collisions as if cars were driving themselves. But I guess no one wants to have to deal with the amount of death and injury that occurs, that there is a high probability of being injured and killed in a car.

And then there is the TV commercial concerning the process and pluses of making a "Kid Print." Mommy is holding her little daughter's hand. They are both smiling, laughing, and being bashful in front of a video camera that is recording the daughter in full color and personality. But you wonder why. I wondered why, and then I realized the purposes and the implications of "Kid Print" and felt sick.

The video is for documentation and representation of the child just in case she or he is abducted. The police have a copy, and the parents have a copy. I wonder what Mommy tells her daughter when she asks why she needs to smile for the camera. The truth in this instance may not be constructive.

But the truth seems to be that we hide and mask over reality through language and behavior, because reality is getting just too ugly. Yet I wonder if we didn't glaze over the pain and loss, could we in fact decipher some of the problems, attitudes and issues that are ugly? Instead of hiding behind language, perhaps language should be a confrontational, provoking and honest medium.

LETTERS

Editorial ignorant

Editor,

This letter is a response to the Sept. 20 editorial "Firing of General Dugan is government powerplay."

Enough is enough. It's forgivable when your paper deluges us with a nonstop barrage of "letters" written by freshmen who are outraged over this issue or that — which, after being at K-State for an entire month, they understand all aspects of it intimately. However, it's an altogether different matter when we're subjected to the all-out ignorance of some of your editorial page writers.

Freshmen will hopefully become more educated on the issues they only understand superficially when they prematurely exercise their right to express themselves. But time and time again, the editorial staff has illustrated its lack of ability to acquire a perspective that has more depth than a misinformed reader. This is my last semester here, and I am tired of the ignorance that plagues your pages.

I have a question of the writer of the article in point: which war college did you attend and when did you serve on the National Security Council? You seem to know all about the "powerplays at the Pentagon," so I guess we can assume you spent some time there as well. Perhaps you're just a budding young journalist who has been all too willing to jump on the bandwagon in seeing a conspiracy in every issue that you are too simplistic to understand. Get a grip. Must every action of foreign policy that our government initiates since 1960 be compared to Vietnam? There were lessons to be learned, but it seems the media are as guilty as some political leaders in not cracking the history books. Spare us your asinine analogies. You assert in your paranoid view of our government riddled with conspiracy that "Grenada, the Falklands and Panama all took place out of sight — and out of mind." Again you display your ignorance because most informed citizens were able to watch play-by-play action of each of those events on CNN, and for what wasn't shown, the reputable newspapers in our nation covered them in detail — with all of their faults. So, pull your head out.

Finally, I can only imagine what kind of world you live in where the leaders of full-scale military operations can go before the press and announce, even in general terms, what the battle plans will be. It's not a world for me. No American wants a war to occur in the Middle East, but what Dugan did went far beyond our right to know.

As the commander of troops currently assigned to the God-forsaken place, he jeopardized their mission and placed their very lives in danger. How? If you were an Iraqi and the Air Force Chief of Staff had passed on information as to what targets would be hit, wouldn't you fortify those targets more heavily and have a greater chance of shooting down American pilots? You probably wouldn't. You wouldn't have a clue. You'd probably give the general a medal for giving the press a bone to chew on. In your closing paragraph, you express your fear of our government controlling your mind and trying to keep your mouth shut. As for the former, don't worry, they can't control what you don't seem to have. And as for the latter, I doubt it would be possible to keep your mouth shut.

Just wanted to get that off my chest. Thanks.

Article commended

Editor,

I want you to know I appreciate your display of responsible reporting by making the effort to get "both sides of the story" in your Sept. 21 article regarding the illness of the Spanish professor.

While it was a most unfortunate incident, thank goodness the outcome turned out OK for Professor Beeson.

Thank you for your interest and concern.

Game paints losers

By Christy Gritton
Collegian Reporter

The Union Program Council Outdoor Recreation Committee will sponsor the Survival Game Adventure Saturday.

The object of the Survival Game is to capture the opponent's flag and bring it back to the starting point, said Matthew Davis, senior in criminal justice.

Each team consists of 10 members. Nine teams play in a single-day, double-elimination tournament, said Emily Folsom, junior in anthropology and member of the Outdoor Recreation Committee.

Team members wear either face masks or goggles. They are given a clip of six paint pellets and may check out rifles, pistols, machine guns or they may bring their own weapons.

Team members try to shoot players of the opposing team with the paint pellets. The pellets must break on players to eliminate them from the competition.

"There are referees to ensure that there is no dirty play," Davis said.

Players who get hit in the head with a pellet are allowed one shot at the attacker, who must remain stationary.

> senior in criminal justice

Davis said players have 20 minutes to capture the opposing team's flag and bring it back to the starting point. If, after 20 minutes of play, neither flag has been captured, the team with the most players left wins.

"I played once as a rushee, it was really fun. It's war without getting hurt," Davis said. "Anyone who can pull a trigger can play."

The game will be played at Hunters Island near Manhattan. Since many people play the Survival Game more than once, the UPC Outdoor Recreation Committee would like to find a new area to stage the game next semester to present returning players with more of a challenge, Folsom said.

The $12 fee for each player covers the cost of the equipment, paint guns, paint pellets, refreshments and land rental.

Sign-up for the Survival Game starts today at 8 a.m. in the UPC Office on the third floor of the K-State Union and is limited to K-State students. Beginning Thursday, sign-up is open to the public.

The first trip will be to see an outstanding collection of drawings at the Salina Art Center, Salina, Kansas and to visit Lucas, Kansas to see the Garden of Eden (listed on the National registry of Historic Places). The collection of drawings at the Salina Art Center is entitled Training The Hand and The Eye: American Drawings from the Cooper-Hewett Museum. The exhibit includes exploratory drawings, and works in progress by 34 American artists including Winslow Homer, Frederic Church, Thomas Moran, and William Chase. The Garden of Eden was created by S.L. Dinsmoor, an eccentric Kansan. He built a home of native limestone and in the yard surrounding the house he created a concrete wonder that defies description. The first Ride will leave the K-State Union at 8:15 a.m. on Friday, October 5, 1990. Reservations are required.
Contact the Department of Art 532-6605, or stop by room 105 in the Art Building for information or to reserve your seat. Make your reservations by the end of the day on Monday, October 1st.

Wichita State routs volleyball team

David Mayes/Staff

Junior Rhonda Hughes makes one of her 13 digs in Tuesday night's K-State loss to Wichita State in Wichita. The Shockers took advantage of a poor hitting performance by the visiting Wildcats to take their fourth-straight victory. K-State opens Big Eight play Friday.

Lack of consistency helps Shockers get 4-game victory

By David Svoboda
Sports Editor

Wichita State thoroughly dominated the K-State volleyball team Tuesday night, winning a four-game match in Wichita.

The Shockers posted the 15-6, 15-0, 10-15, 15-8 triumph by playing more consistently than the visiting Wildcats, who hit just .100 for the match.

With its fourth-straight triumph, Wichita State moved to 7-4 on the year. K-State fell to 4-5.

"Wichita State played well," said Wildcat assistant coach Greg Lambert. "They played to their strengths, and obviously we didn't."

There was a sharp contrast in the quality of play for K-State in games two and three. In the 15-0 whitewashing in game No. 2, the Wildcats hit at a negative .438 percentage. In their 15-10 win in game No. 3, however, the team hit .306.

The .700-plus swing was indicative of a lack of concentration, Lambert said.

"We realize as a team that this performance was unacceptable, and don't expect it to happen again," he said. "We did not come prepared to play. We lacked the concentration we needed to succeed."

Leading the way for Wichita State in the win were Terri Brown, who hit for a .381 percentage, and Becky Sutter, who had 10 kills.

Wildcat leaders included two players who hit for a .500 percentage. Senior Val Roberts had seven kills in 14 attempts, and sophomore Kathy Saxton had five kills in eight attempts with one error.

Junior Rhonda Hughes had 13 digs for K-State, and fellow junior Betsy Berkley had three aces and three block solos for the Wildcats.

Lambert said the team's 10-day layoff since its last action was not a factor in the team's performance.

"The errors we were making tonight (Tuesday) were not errors due to lack of match play, they were errors due to lack of concentration," Lambert said.

The coach also pointed to a need for improvement before the Big Eight Conference opener Friday night against Oklahoma in Ahearn Field House.

"We have to address some issues in order to get ready for Oklahoma Friday," he said.

One area Lambert pointed to specifically was serving. The Wildcats had 12 service errors.

"Serving is like shooting free throws," he said. "We work on it all the time, but you have to do it in a match successfully."

'Gladiators' fun, entertaining

Dan Wicker
SPORTS REPORTER

With all the serious talk concerning the K-State football team and game attendance in the past few weeks, I thought I might try to take a walk on the lighter and more humorous side of sports this week.

Most sports fanatics are wrapped up in the beginning of the National Football League season or hoping that some team will be able to prevent the Oakland A's from capturing their second straight World Series crown.

Sometimes, though, there is a need to relax and forget about all the tensions and anger provided by professional sports.

I have the perfect solution for those of you who feel like I do every now and then.

Just before Saturday evening festivities began last weekend, I got a treat in the form of American Gladiators. Most sport types have probably seen parts of the show when flipping through the channels, but have never stuck around for the entire program.

If you can ignore some of the worst commentary in history from ex-Miami Dolphin Larry Csonka, then you will probably receive some laughs.

The sport pits ordinary citizens who qualify to participate against the American Gladiators, paid professional athletes. The contestants compete against each other to see who can tally the most points going head-to-head against the gladiators in six different events.

■ Joust — This competition has the contestant and gladiator on top of a platform about 10 feet in the air. The basic idea is for the challenger — in a modified joust — to knock the gladiator off the platform before the gladiator does the same. If successful, the challenger will score 10 points.

■ Human Cannonball — In this competition, the gladiator remains on the platform holding a foam shield as protection. Swinging on a rope, the contestant swoops down on the gladiator from about 40 feet away. His objective is to crash into the gladiator, forcing him off the platform.

■ Power Ball — This competition allows the gladiators to seek revenge on the contestants. Two contestants compete at the same time for one minute, trying to get balls into one of five goals guarded by three gladiators. The gladiators hit the contestants like Lawrence Taylor demolishes quarterbacks, except there are no pads involved.

■ Athenoscope — Again, the contestants compete against three gladiators guarding a goal, only this time, everyone is locked in large, round, metal cages. The objective is for the contestants to roll their cage into one of four goals as many times as possible in one minute.

■ Assault— Here, the contestant receives five separate chances to score by firing shots from different weapons at a target above the gladiator's head. The contestant has to score before being tagged by a tennis ball shot by a gladiator at speeds almost as fast as a serve from Boris Becker.

■ Obstacle Course— The final event is a six-stage obstacle course. The course includes such events as running across a balance beam while dodging a medicine ball swung by a gladiator and a finish line that has four different choices.

The contestant can pick one of four different lanes to finish. Three of the lanes are guarded by a gladiator, who is hidden behind paper and waiting to flatten the contestant when he bursts through the paper.

Next time you see the likes of the professional gladiators Nitro, Turbo, Lace, Blaze or Ice, stop and watch. You'll witness an entertaining and humorous sporting event that allows adults to relive their childhood games in advanced competition.

Golfers finish seventh

The K-State golf team fell a notch in the team standings during Tuesday's final 18 holes and finished seventh at the 19th annual U.C. Ferguson All-College Classic in Oklahoma City, Okla. Texas Wesleyan won the team title.

Freshman Will Siebert was the top K-State finisher, posting scores of 83-78-75 for a 236 total. Senior Bobby Donnellan, who had the best final round for K-State, posted 80-75-73 scores for a 238 mark.

Freshman Sean Robertson posted scores of 78-78-83 for a 239 mark, and sophomore Jim Brenneman had rounds of 86-80-79 for a 245 total.

Senior Greg Roberts failed to finish his final round after posting marks of 84 and 81 in the first two rounds.

A's clinch division title

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Oakland Athletics clinched their third straight American League West championship Tuesday night by defeating the Kansas City Royals 5-0 as Dave Stewart pitched a five-hitter for his career-high 22nd victory of the season.

The A's began play with a magic number of 2 to eliminate Chicago and the White Sox lost to Minnesota 4-3. Oakland has a nine-game lead with eight to play.

The A's, who have won the last two AL pennants, became the first team since 1978 to win three division titles in a row. The New York Yankees, Royals and Philadelphia Phillies all won consecutive titles from 1976-78.

Coach readies for 2nd battle with Cleveland

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — He coached the Cleveland Browns to three consecutive division titles and then was forced out by owner Art Modell.

As if that weren't enough to embitter a man, he visited Cleveland last year as coach of the Kansas City Chiefs and heard many Browns fans take up a vulgar two-word chant linking his name with an obscenity.

But as Marty Schottenheimer prepares the Chiefs for a 3 p.m. kickoff Sunday against the Browns, he insists that vengeance is the furthest thing from his mind.

"I think revenge is not a good idea. It distracts you from what you're trying to get done," Schottenheimer said Tuesday at his weekly media luncheon. "I still have a great deal of respect, and in some cases personal fondness, for many of those players."

Much was made of his blowup with Modell, the owner of the Browns. But why be bitter toward someone who helped your career along?

"You've got to understand something," Schottenheimer said. "My differences with Art were based upon principles that each of us had. I have great respect for the guy. Not only has he done a lot for this league, but let's make no mistake about it — if it were not for Art Modell, I might not be sitting here in this chair right now. The guy gave me a great opportunity. And who's to say that an individual with my limited experience as a coach would have been given that opportunity by anyone else?"

Shortly after leaving the Browns following the 1988 season, Schottenheimer was snapped up by Carl Peterson, who had just been named president and general manager of the Chiefs. Last year in his first season with Kansas City, the Chiefs went to Cleveland and played to a frustrating 10-10 tie.

"It was awful," Schottenheimer said of the disappointment.

But as a father, Schottenheimer was most alarmed for 16-year-old Brian. His son helps on the sideline crew for the Chiefs and was standing nearby when the Cleveland crowd took up the vulgar chant near the end of the game.

"I remember exactly what I did, too. I turned around and looked at my son and smiled," Schottenheimer said. "I wanted to make sure he was all right. My only concern when I heard it was whether Brian was OK. I looked at him and smiled. He looked back and me and kind of smiled, and that was it.

"Actually, I thought it was amusing that I, or anybody else, could generate that kind of enthusiasm."

The Chiefs, 2-1 and coming off a victory at Green Bay, will be facing a 1-2 Cleveland team that's been having trouble protecting quarterback Bernie Kosar.

Offense keeping stat crews occupied in 1990

By David Svoboda
Sports Editor

As K-State was in the midst of manhandling New Mexico State 52-7 two weeks ago, the most overworked people in KSU Stadium were the members of the K-State Sports Information staff.

Director Kenny Mossman and his assistants spent a great deal of their free time — and there wasn't much — searching old media guides as records fell faster than the temperature just before a tornado.

The Wildcat offense, which sputtered often in 1989 as the players adjusted to Coach Bill Snyder's complex offensive system, has been the cause of the headaches endured by Mossman and his staff.

And there are no signs that the trend will end soon.

The maturation of the running game has been a big reason for the glossy numbers, Snyder and his players said.

Through three games in 1990, the 'Cats have scored 11 rushing touchdowns. In 1989, the team scored eight in 11 games. In addition, the net yardage of 544 is just 113 yards under the rushing yardage total for all of 1989.

The Wildcats were last in the Big Eight Conference in rushing offense in 1989, but rank fifth through three games in 1990.

Snyder credits the success of the running attack to a variety of things.

"Our offensive coaches have done a nice job of preparing the kids," he said. "And the kids have improved since last spring. They understand the system more. And Carl (Straw) has done a good job of getting us into it, for the most part."

Straw, the starting quarterback, and Pat Jackson, a tailback and receiver, are putting up some impressive individual numbers as well.

Straw is second in the Big Eight in total offense and 13th in the nation with an average of 250.7 yards a game. Jackson is 10th in the league in the category.

In addition, the fleet Jackson ranks first in the Big Eight and fourth nationally in scoring, with an average of 12 points a contest.

Straw's play has Mossman and staff poised to devote a page in the 1991 media guide to the quarterback's career exploits alone.

Straw has completed 49 passes this season, and if he reaches 100, he will join Lynn Dickey as the only Wildcat players to complete 100 passes in three different seasons.

He is also bidding to become the second K-State quarterback — Dickey was the first — to pass for more than 1,000 yards in three different seasons. Straw's current 1990 mark is 722.

But Straw would rather talk in terms of team success.

"We're doing all of the things an offense needs to do to be successful," he said. "We're meeting 75 to 80 percent of our goals."

Included among those team goals are to collect 375 yards of total offense a game and to have four "big" offensive plays a contest — plays that can break an opponent's back and result in a Wildcat touchdown.

Straw pointed to the success of the Wildcat running game as a major contributor to his success through the air.

"When you're running the ball as well as we are, it helps the passing game when linebackers can't drop as deep (into coverage)," he said.

The recipients of most of Straw's aerials have been Frank Hernandez and Michael Smith.

The duo has 15 and 14 catches, respectively, and Hernandez has three touchdowns. He had only four in 11 games last season. Hernandez is second in the Big Eight and Smith fourth in receptions per game. The duo ranks second and third in receiving yards per game as well.

The team total of 114 points scored in three games is just 20 points below the total for all of 1989.

The team is getting out of the blocks better, as well. K-State averaged under one point per game in the first quarter last season, but is averaging 16.3 in the first 15 minutes in 1990.

Even placekicker Tate Wright has gotten in on the act. He has converted 15-of-16 point after touchdown attempts. Last season, David Kruger converted just five PATs in six tries.

Smallest Santa Fe rail lines to be sold

By Alan Wilds
Staff Reporter

Gov. Mike Hayden has joined in a statewide effort to find buyers for about 500 miles of railroad track that may be abandoned by Santa Fe Railway.

The abandonment plans are part of a nationwide rationalization plan designed to streamline the company's operations, said Santa Fe spokeswoman Cathy Westphal.

Westphal said 700 miles of track in the state are under study for possible sale to other railroad companies. Santa Fe is currently searching for short-line railroads to take over the abandoned Santa Fe routes.

Hayden plans to assist in this effort by reactivating the Governer's Railroad Working Group that was founded two years ago to discuss state railway transportation issues.

The group consists of representatives from various state agencies.

Hayden's Deputy Press Secretary Randy Tosh said this action was prompted by a letter from Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., which suggested the state formulate a strategy to assist Santa Fe's effort to find potential buyers.

"We want to try to keep all those lines operating if we can," Tosh said. "We definitely want to work with Santa Fe and pursue this effort to find short-line operators."

Westphal said the track for sale should be attractive to potential buyers.

"One selling point is our short-line operations," she said. "In addition to the track, we would also be selling them Santa Fe revenues so a connecting carrier would share our profit."

Santa Fe is currently in the process of working with communities in the state that may have problems with the arrangement.

"There has been some concern about grain shipping in Hutchinson," Westphal said. "We are trying to work with each community and develop alternatives."

Tosh said that at this point, the abandonment plans could pose a potential problem for shippers and retailers throughout the state.

Robert Krebs, chairman of the Santa Fe Pacific Corp., met with Kassebaum and Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., last week to discuss the possible impact the abandonment plans would have on the state.

He assured the senators that Santa Fe intends to retain more miles of track and more employees in Kansas than any other state.

In Topeka, 115 workers have been laid off during the first seven months of the year, Krebs said. This reduction is part of Santa Fe's plan to reduce its total workforce of about 16,000 to slightly less than 15,000 by 1994.

"I think we have done most of what we are going to do," Krebs said.

Westphal said Santa Fe has gone through streamlining processes in the past but not of this magnitude.

"This is the most aggressive line rationalization that Santa Fe has done," Westphal said. "Recently, we were pursuing a merger with Southern Pacific and didn't pay much attention to streamlining."

Although Westphal could not provide dollar amounts, she said Santa Fe will bring expenses down significantly through these reductions.

"One of our motives is to trim the trackage down that is not profitable," Westphal said. "Due to our competition and operating costs we have to become more cost effective."

The Associated Press contributed to this story.

Pictures help save farm family lifestyle

By Rebecca Sack
Collegian Reviewer

Rural life in America may be fading fast into cities, but it will be preserved in photographs on display in the K-State Union Gallery until Sept. 28.

"The National Photography Contest — Rural Families: Legacies for the Future" is a collection of black-and-white photographs depicting rural lifestyles as endangered species. The pictures maintain themes of modern and disintegrating rural life and the politics thereof, the rural life of the past and the personal stories behind the forgetful future.

Ten of the photographs were taken by Kansas residents. One photo, titled "Psalm 27:1," was taken by Wamego resident Nancy Hause, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications. The photo depicts an elderly woman sitting in a church pew, bathed in the divided light from the stained glass windows above her. The verse offers hope for a future without farms: "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the defense of my life; whom shall I dread?"

Most of the buildings pictured, including many churches, are dilapidated skeletons from the past. Some of the pictures look like Art Gore productions — with old plows, water pumps and lots of tree branches weaving complex patterns in the gray sky. The best photos show what the artist sees, looking deeper, beyond the basic beauty of old things.

Like Hause's "Psalm 27:1," the personal pictures probe the emotional and real-life stories of vanishing rural communities.

The second-place winner this year, Cynthia Vagnetti of Washington, D.C., photographed "Listening to Wes Jackson." The picture shows a man reclined on the ground in front of his farmyard, his head tilted up to look in the face of a little girl sitting on his legs. A woman in the background leans against a faded wooden wall, nursing a baby. The people tell the same story as the ancient and broken buildings.

A few of the photographs make political statements, including one from a Fort Riley photographer, Annette Marden, titled "No Tank Tracks." Marden photographed the thick scars tanks scratched through the fields. The signs in the pictures read, "Keep Our Land—Our Lives."

The most poignant picture was taken by Lisa Catherine Heffernan of St. Louis, Mo. A cornfield in the foreground leads to the roof of a barn and a silo. Just over the hill in the background stands a nuclear reactor, disturbing in its resemblance to the silo, poised in a sort of dreadful mockery. "Nuclear Stack Over Corn Field" received honorable mention in this year's contest.

The first place photo, "Organic Farming," by Vagnetti is a collage of pondering people, pigs, cows and planting. The picture summarizes the exhibit — combining essential aspects of rural life of every kind.

Theatrical company's global travels subject of visiting director's lecture

Higher education, art additional topics

By Stacey Harbison
Collegian Reporter

Orlin Corey, editor of Anchorage Press in New Orleans, will be on campus Thursday to present lectures on theatrical touring and theater and arts education.

Corey is the founder and director of "The Everyman Players," a theatrical company that developed out of his outdoor drama about the Book of Job.

"This company became so successful that it toured the country," said Norman Fedder, professor of speech and theater.

Corey's first lecture "A Million Miles With Everyman: Survival? Success? The adventures, disasters and triumphs of a million miles of theatrical touring on four continents" will be at 1 p.m. in the Purple Masque Theatre. The lecture will feature a slide presentation illustrating his tour.

The second lecture, "Theatre and Arts Education," will be at 7 p.m. in Nichols 311.

Fedder said the arts are basic to an education.

"There's a great concern that the universities are going to cut out their programs in the arts," Fedder said. "He's going to talk about the role of theater and the arts."

"The Everyman Players" toured four continents in 24 seasons, performing many classical and children's plays. It is the only classical repertory troupe in the United States.

The troupe performed such classics as Sophocles' "Electra," Shakespeare's "The Tempest," Cervantes' "Don Quixote" and fables "Reynard the Fox" and "The Tortoise and the Hare."

The plays all have great themes — many of them religious, Fedder said.

"It's religious in the larger sense of the word — in that it really causes people to feel for spiritual things, the spirit of humanity, what it means to be alive," he said.

Corey will also be promoting his book "An Odyssey of Masquers: The Everyman Players." There will be a reception and a book-signing session following his last lecture.

have the Salina community show this kind of support makes me feel very positive. "I'm sure within the next couple of weeks people from K-State will be down here, and we will start working on details of reorganization," he said.

Marshall Stanton, president of Kansas Wesleyan University in Salina, said he was pleased and looks forward to working with K-State and KCT.

Stanley Koplik, executive director of the Kansas Board of Regents, said the margin of the proposal's victory was larger than he expected.

"I don't believe Salina voters will regret their vote," he said. "For a two-year sales-tax increase, they will see a very dynamic institution."

Gerald Cook, Salina Chamber of Commerce president, said K-State alumni, administrators and students were some of the people who helped in the effort to pass the proposal.

"A tremendous number of people worked on this," he said. "The Chamber was just the organization that molded it together."

Cook said he could remember no other vote that carried with so large a margin.

looked at the plans (for the parking lot) — which they obviously didn't — I think they would have recognized the long-term benefits. I was surprised and disappointed."

The protestors said the parking lot will not provide more parking spaces, so they do not understand the need for the construction work.

Kelly Briggs, city superintendent for Bayer Construction Co. Inc., halted work in the immediate area while the protest continued.

An agreement was reached before the protesters left.

"Five of the trees will be saved, and the lot will be redesigned to go around them," said Ed Rice, director of University facilities management. "The contractor was put on hold until the first of next week."

Garvin said the new format will have to be approved by the Advisory Committee on Campus Development.

"It will work around the trees, none of which are unique or an essential part of the teaching environment," Garvin said.

margin two out of three years.

"I hope the governor and the Legislature realize our competitiveness is poor," Nafziger said. "We have faculty shortages in many areas. This can't help but affect the quality of education."

The governor emphasized the need to be creative in finding funding solutions, Johnson said. Past tuition increases have funded the MOE, so the students have done their part.

"I'm appreciative of the interest the students have shown in using tuition as a part of the funding mechanism," Hayden said. "We'll be exploring other funding mechanisms as well with the leadership on our campuses to put together a package to totally fund the third year."

The margin would guarantee larger equipment budgets and increases in faculty salaries, Johnson said. In the long run the margin will make K-State more competitive among its peers.

Some people don't think children get abused in our area.

Little Melissa would disagree.

It is the unspeakable. The ultimate trauma. Impossible to think about. But impossible not to.

It is child abuse. Physical. Sexual. Emotional. And some people would rather think it doesn't happen in our area. But it does. In fact, one in four children will be violated or abused during their childhood.

Which is why we need your help.

Member agencies of the United Way of Riley County use your United Way gift to help abused children. It's money well spent. Doing the most good. Right here.

Giving to United Way means your money helps agencies that undergo strict evaluations of their programs, staff, and facility. And that means they are better prepared to give children like little Melissa the help they really need.

When you get your United Way pledge card this year, choose to help Melissa. Let your gift show you care.

Enrollment figures up from last fall

Fall figures show 21,137 students attending classes

By Amy Hadlock
Staff Reporter

Enrollment figures for the 20th day of classes show K-State has topped its highest enrollment figure, set last year, by more than 1,000 students.

"The fall enrollment as of the 20th day of classes is 21,137," Don Foster, registrar said. "That is an increase of 1,027 students over the fall of 1989 total of 20,110.

"There is nearly a 700 student increase with the on-campus enrollment this year," Foster said.

The total number of students taking classes on campus — 19,367 — is also a University record. The previous on-campus record enrollment was last fall with 18,700 students enrolled.

Off-campus enrollment figures also increased by 360 students, Foster said. Off-campus classes take place at Fort Riley, which is the University's largest off-campus facility; Fort Leavenworth and several other locations across the state.

"The enrollment figures are outstanding," said John Fairman, assistant vice-president for University relations.

The rising retention rates mean the students have a greater satisfaction with the University and are happier with their programs, Fairman said.

Several factors lead to the increased enrollment rate, Foster said.

One of the reasons is the economic climate, he said. There are not as many jobs for people to go to, so people are staying in school longer or going back to school.

Another reason is it is more common for students to take longer than four years to complete their bachelor's degree.

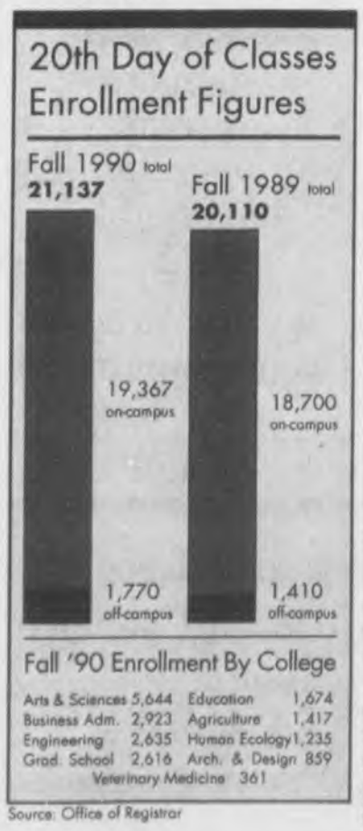
Not all of the University's colleges experienced increased enrollment, however.

Foster reported that five colleges and one school showed on-campus increases. Those areas and their enrollments for 1990 are the College of Arts and Sciences, 5,644; the College of Engineering, 2,635; the Graduate School, 2,616; the College of Education, 1,674; the College of Agriculture, 1,417; and the College of Human Ecology, 1,235.

The three colleges with a decreased on-campus enrollment and their enrollment figures are the College of Business Administration, 2,923; College of Architecture and Design, 859; and the College of Veterinary Medicine, 361.

Decreases in these three colleges are due to requirements in each area, Foster said.

The colleges of Architecture and Design and Veterinary Medicine each have enrollment caps. Thus, Foster said, only a limited number of students are permitted into the colleges.



The College of Business Administration also has a two-year preprofessional program that must be completed before students can enter into a degree track.

Although enrollment did increase, it was not due to the number of freshman entering the University.

"Our freshman enrollment did decline by 413 students," Foster said. "This indicates that we are moving in the right direction to maintain a stabilized enrollment base in the range of 20,000 to 21,000 students.

"One reason the freshman enrollment has decreased is because there is a decline in the number of high school graduates," he said.

After the 20th day figures are compiled, they are sent to the Kansas Board of Regents, Foster said. The board then compiles a report to send to all regents institutions.

Affirmative Action study reports women faculty underrepresented

By Tammy Rose
Collegian Reporter

Women faculty at K-State are still looking for equality in numbers.

A study by the Office of Affimative Action in October 1989 found a total of 920 male faculty members compared to 283 women faculty members.

The faculty members at K-State are obviously predominantly male, said Jane Rowlett, director of the Office of Affimative Action.

"I think that women aren't fairly represented at all ranks and that may present problems," Rowlett said.

At the professor level, there are 361 men and 22 women. At the associate professor level, men outnumber women by a ration of nearly 4-to-1, Rowlett said.

Rowlett attributes the small number of women at the professor level to the fact that instructors have to move through the ranks of assistant and associate professor before reaching full professorship. Women outnumber men at the instructor level 97 to 53.

"The picture's not bright now but the potential is there," Rowlett said.

Bonnie Nelson, associate professor of English and head of the steering committee of the Faculty Women's Caucus, said she agrees that there are not enough women represented at the higher levels.

The Faculty Women's Caucus mainly concentrates on three issues concerning the women faculty at K-State — the underrepresentation in the departments, scarcity of women faculty of racial/ethnic minority groups and the scarcity of women in high decision-making positions.

The caucus is a grass roots organization and consists of about 200 women of all departments and units across the University.

"We don't have enough women in the decision-making positions at the University like we should," Nelson said.

Another aspect Nelson said was important is the affect women faculty members can have on women students.

"Women students need to see that the University is hospitable to women by having women in positions

Policy hangs up on custodians

Supervisors to lock up phone cords before leaving offices

By Paul Noel
Staff Reporter

A new policy of locking up the phone cords in custodial offices when supervisors are out has been implemented by facilities custodial services.

"We have a problem with the phone lines being tied up when the supervisors are not there," said Al Seely, facilities custodial maintance manager.

The decision should have no effect on the custodial workers, Seely said, as they are not suppose to use the phones during working hours.

"We feel the decision is unfair," said a custodian who asked to remain anonymous. "We are just being pushed around."

The custodian said there would be no way to react in an emergency if they could not use the phones.

"The phones only dial on campus, there is no way we can use them for personal matters," he said.

John Province, Kansas Association of Public Employees leader for the maintaince and service division, said the phone lines are usually tied up by the supervisors themselves, not the workers.

However, the new policy won't stop the custodians from doing their job, Province said.

"They can use the phones in the faculty member's offices if the supervisor is out during an emergency situation," he said.

Richard Seaton, University attorney, said there is no law that says a phone has to be provided to state workers, but there could be a civil liability for negligence if there is no way to contact proper authorities in the case of an emergency.

John Lambert, director of public safety, said most buildings have many phones that could be used in an emergency, and the custodians have keys to get to them.

"Seely has had the phone cords removed so the lines won't be tied," the custodian said, "but how is anyone going to answer the phone if the cord is locked up — he's going to have more trouble getting through than he did before."

Ed Rice, director of University facilities management, said he was unaware of the new rule but sees no safety problems with it.

"The custodians check out keys every morning that give them access to almost every area of the building they work in," Rice said.

The custodians have such access because of the nature of their work, he said.

"I don't think the decision will cause any safety problems at this time," Lambert said.

Moderate earthquake tremors strike along New Madrid Fault

By The Associated Press

NEW HAMBURG, Mo. — A moderate earthquake shook parts of six states Wednesday, causing no major damage but rattling the nerves of residents along the New Madrid Fault who have been told there could be a big quake in December.

For months, people along the seismic zone have been worrying about a scientist's controversial prediction that there's a 50-50 chance for a major quake on or about Dec. 3.

"This is no cause for additional alarm, but what it does tell us is that we live in earthquake country," said David Stewart, director of the Center for Earthquake Studies in Cape Girardeau. "We should consider this a good drill for what someday will be the real thing."

The U.S. Geological Survey said the quake measured 4.6 on the Richter scale, a gauge of the energy released by an earthquake as measured by the ground motion recorded on a seismograph.

In 1811-12, a series of quakes estimated at up to 8 on the Richter scale struck the New Madrid region, causing the Mississippi River to appear to flow backward and forming Reelfoot Lake in Tennessee. The tremors rang church bells in Washington, D.C., more than 850 miles away.

Wednesday's earthquake was felt in parts of Missouri, Arkansas, Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee and Indiana.

The New Madrid Fault runs from Marked Tree, Ark., across southeastern Missouri to southern Illinois and has hundreds of small quakes every year. It's named for the town of New Madrid, about 40 miles south of New Hamburg and 140 miles southeast of St. Louis.

In New Hamburg, a town of about 200 in the Missouri Bootheel, students at the Kelso C-7 Elementary School felt the quake.

"It sounded like people moving their desks up on the second floor," said eighth-grader John Koepp. "I wasn't scared."

Principal Darryl Sauer said the school had just sponsored an earthquake preparedness meeting Tuesday night.

Moments before the tremor, teacher Donna Robert had been asking a student whether her mother, who experienced a major earthquake in Alaska, might be interested in coming to class to talk about earthquakes. Then the shaking started.

"It was like the voice of God speaking. I couldn't believe it," she said.

On most peoples' minds was the forecast by Iben Browning that there is a 50-50 chance of an earthquake measuring 7.0 or greater on or about Dec. 3. Browning was unavailable for comment Wednesday, his secretary said.

Earthquake experts have for the most part denounced Browning's theory.

Troops depart Czechoslovakia

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — More than half the Soviet troops stationed in Czechoslovakia since the Red Army crushed the 1968 Prague Spring reform movement have returned home, a military official said Wednesday.

Gen. Svetozar Nadovic, a Czechoslovak coordinator of the troop withdrawal, said at least 40,500 soldiers and officers from an estimated force of 73,500 have left, taking with them 800 tanks, 62 aircraft and 57,882 tons of ammunition.

By the end of the year, only one Soviet motorized regiment should be left in the nation, he said.

"That means that Czechoslovakia will have full sovereignty by the end of the year — that's encouraging," Nadovic said.

German leader regrets wars

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The German people will never forget the suffering their country brought on Europe, and particularly the Jews, during World War II, West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher said Wednesday.

Addressing the 45th General Assembly one week before East and West Germany will be reunited, Genscher said, "In this historic phase, the Germans are filled with a sense of history and responsibility.

"They are not being carried away with nationalistic exuberance.

"We will not forget the endless suffering that was brought upon the nations of Europe and the world in the name of Germany.

"We Germans are uniting in the determination that none of this must ever be allowed to happen again."

Japan oil prices little changed

TOKYO (AP) — Lessons learned during the 1973 Arab oil embargo have helped Japan weather the Persian Gulf crisis, but danger lurks in plummeting stock prices and rising interest rates.

Nearly two months after Iraq invaded Kuwait, gasoline prices are up only slightly in Japan, and there is little sign of the grave concern that might be expected from a country that relies on Middle East imports for 70 percent of its oil.

That is largely a result of the government's efforts to avoid a repeat of 1973, when Arab restrictions of oil exports, and oil imports that tripled in price within months, threw Japan's economy into chaos. The oil shock sent inflation soaring and led to the first decline in Japan's gross national product during the postwar era.

U.S., Soviets talk nuclear cuts

NEW YORK (AP) — The United States and the Soviet Union made headway Wednesday on treaties to reduce conventional and long-range nuclear weapons as they strengthened their cooperation on the Persian Gulf crisis.

"On quite a few questions there is progress," said Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze at the conclusion of a four-hour meeting with Secretary of State James A. Baker III.

Failure to reach agreement on the arms accords could cause postponement of a 34-nation summit meeting in Paris in mid-November, interrupt the easing of East-West tensions in Europe and delay a trip to Moscow in December by President Bush.

Baker and Shevardnadze met for their pivotal talks at a hotel about a mile from the United Nations, where they voted on Tuesday to impose an embargo on cargo shipments by air to Iraq and occupied Kuwait.

Study examines doctor fees

BOSTON (AP) — Doctors in the United States charge more than twice as much as Canadian physicians for the same work, and this helps explain why this country's health care costs are dramatically higher, a study concludes.

The study found that despite their fatter fees, however, U.S. doctors earn only about one-third more than Canadians. The reason: Canadian doctors are busier and make up for their lower fees by seeing more patients.

Unlike the United States, Canada provides complete, fully-paid health coverage for all its citizens. In the United States, one in seven people has no health insurance, and even those with coverage typically have to pay at least part of the bill. Despite these differences, health care costs 20 percent more per person in the United States than in Canada.

KU students protest ROTC

LAWRENCE (AP) — A group of University of Kansas students marched to Chancellor Gene Budig's house, calling on him to challenge military policy that excludes gays and lesbians from ROTC programs.

The march Tuesday night followed disclosure in the morning that the University Senate voted to continue allowing credit for ROTC classes.

Before the vote, Budig had said he would stand by the senate's decision.

The protesters carried signs reading "Liberty and Justice for All — Offer Not Yet Available at KU."

Protesters say the U.S. Department of Defense policy conflicts with the university's anti-discrimination policies.

Poll gives challenger lead

TOPEKA (AP) — A new media poll made public Wednesday night showed Democrat Joan Finney is maintaining her double-digit lead over Republican incumbent Mike Hayden in the Kansas gubernatorial race.

A survey sponsored by the Pittsburg Sun newspaper and three television stations showed 45 percent of the respondents favored Finney while 33 percent supported Hayden. The other 22 percent was undecided.

Independent candidate Christina Campbell-Cline received less than 1 percent. The poll showed 74 percent of those surveyed don't know who she is.

Finney states abortion stance

TOPEKA (AP) — Democratic governor nominee Joan Finney tried Wednesday to clarify her positions on abortion, budget and tax issues, but a spokesman for Republican Gov. Mike Hayden said her attempt resembled a gymnastics convention.

Finney, the state treasurer, said despite her personal opposition to abortion, she would not attempt to prevent abortions from being performed at the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City, Kan.

Finney held a news conference in a northeast Topeka church before speaking to about 70 people, most of them senior citizens.

"I felt like I was in a gymnastics convention in there," said Frank Ybarra, Hayden's campaign press secretary, who attended the event. "I saw so many flip-flops."

Hayden has said he supports some restrictions on late-term abortions and proposals to require doctors to notify a parent of a girl under 16 before she has an abortion.

Hayden calls himself an abortion-rights advocate. Finney describes herself as anti-abortion.

Professor studies effects of advertising on buyers

By Stacey Harbison
Collegian Reporter

What makes an advertisement deceptive or misleading?

Psychology professor Richard Harris is studying the effects of advertising on consumers. He said minor word changes can change the interpretation of the ad.

"We draw more inferences from the ad than was stated in the ad," Harris said. "The advertiser doesn't have to make a real strong claim because the consumers will make the claim themselves."

He said one example is a toothpaste ad that says the toothpaste fights cavities, but the consumer reads it as saying that it prevents cavities.

People make these inferences unconsciously over and over again, Harris said.

By picking out hedge words in advertisements and generating other alternatives and meanings, people can learn not to make these inferences, Harris said.

It would take a considerable amount of time and money before this type of training would be effective, he said.

"It's really hard to do," Harris said. "If people can be trained to be more thinking, more critical consumers of ads, it can be helpful."

The results of this type of training remain unknown, Harris said. But the more consumers know, the less likely they are to be misled by vague advertisments.

Charles Pearce, associate professor of journalism and mass communications, said he doesn't interpret ads as being intentionally vague, but they hit people when their defenses are down.

"I'm all for consumer education," Pearce said. "I feel the more people know about advertising, the better off we'll be."

The effects of advertising could have serious consequences, Harris said, and that is the reason he became involved in studying it.

Harris' studies have been mostly conducted through the psychology department.

that men mainly hold," Nelson said.

Of the 64 department heads at K-State only four are women. The College of Human Ecology is the only college, out of eight, with a female dean. Nelson said most people would expect a woman to hold that position since the college used to be named the College of Home Economics, an area usually associated with women.

Female faculty members are mainly clustered at the instructor and assistant professor level with a high number of them in the student services, continuing education and library departments.

Nelson said another of her concerns was the reorganization proposal that may be implemented.

There are a high number of women that are not tenured faculty and if reorganization takes place the plan will have to be watched carefully to be sure women are treated fairly, she said.

James delivers enchanting themes with variety of instruments, lyrics

By Rebecca Sack
Collegian Reviewer

James' new release "Gold Mother" is a virtual cornucopia of sounds. James uses an impressive variety of instruments and sounds to create one enchanting album that is diverse enough to be several albums.

Most of the songs are deep and mellow — as if they were written under the ocean. Even the harder songs never rock and roll. Instead, they pulsate.

What is amazing about this album is that every instrument adds an exceptional sound to the song, not just another dimension. The uniqueness of each musical sound seems more important than the overall blend, yet the songs are masterfully harmonized. The tones seem to be almost intrinsically merged to become a unified orchestration.

COLLEGIAN Report Card "JAMES" A+

James' passion for its themes gives power to every song on "Gold Mother." The message of each song is precisely delivered via specific lyrical poetry and by instruments chosen to communicate that which only music can.

In "Come Home," Tim Booth's lilting English accent carries the lyrics: "And I can't believe you're all I'll ever need/And I need to feel that you're not holding me/And the way I feel just makes me want to scream/Come home, come home, come home/Come home, come home, come home."

Booth communicates an intriguing ambivalence, exploring the human psyche within or without a relationship. The song mimics the theme in its form, with the strong feeling of "come home" being repeated desperately after an intellectual investigation of the logic of such emotions.

James also addresses governmental, family, environmental and religious issues on "Gold Mother."

"Government Walls" carries a message as strong as David Baynton-Power's drum beat with lines like "In Ireland they may shoot to kill without warning you." The title track depicts childbirth with an eerie musical tone and a tribal beat. "Top of the World" carries a nature theme.

Pranks on sororities at KU not amusing

Some women aren't excited about being in sororities at KU.

Apparently, Sorority Hill in Lawrence has been the object of pranks of late, and sorority members are concerned.

Last week, threatening messages, intruders and a burglary had Lawrence police unsure of how to handle the situation. They said it looked just like common college pranks, but the actions are no less distressing.

The latest incident involved a burglary of a sorority's composite photograph of its members. According to an article in the Kansas City Star, a note was left in place of the photograph stating: "You're lucky we were after only your composite. You ought to walk in pairs."

The actions of these pranksters are not amusing. They are only kidding themselves if they think they are giving everyone a good laugh.

It's expected in the greek society to play pranks on other houses, but in this case they are taking it too far.

Threats aren't funny.

Before going through with such a stunt, people should think twice about their actions, about how it will affect someone else. The consequences of any action can be serious.

Toilet-papering houses is one thing, but threatening messages scrawled on mirrors in lipstick is another. It takes a sick mind to enjoy striking fear in the hearts of others, and it doesn't belong in any society.

No one said not to have fun. No one said not to play practical jokes every once in a while.

It's just not cool to be cruel.

Florida judge unethical in rape case decision

When repugnant crimes such as murder and rape make us question our faith in humankind, we, as citizens, look to our judicial system to dispense punishment where it is due. Last week, a Florida judge dealt a blow to the laws we live by and the way we view those laws.

Kenneth Leffler, a Seminole County circuit judge, called a rape victim pitiful and said she was partly to blame in her assault.

The woman's attacker had pleaded guilty to rape, sexual battery, false imprisonment and battery. The judge threw out a plea-bargain agreement for a 4½ year sentence in a state prison and 10 years on probation.

Instead Leffler, in his higher wisdom, gave the admitted rapist two years of probation and a verbal warning to use caution in choosing his women.

According to an Orlando Sentinel report, the judge had court spectators laughing throughout the sentencing.

Leffler's reasoning stemmed from a divorce case he presided over several years ago that involved the rape victim. Not only did the judge act unprofessionally in allowing his decision to be tainted with preformed impressions, he reenforced a negative attitude toward all women.

Imagine the message sent to rapists when a criminal is slapped on the wrist for an assault on a woman's freedom, and the judge makes sexist remarks about the victim.

Women become objects, not human beings. Rape becomes a joke in a crowded courtroom. Rape becomes acceptable in certain situations.

Leffler said he will retire in December. That action won't come soon enough.

Gas gougers exploit crisis

"Money is like manure. If you spread it around it does a lot of good. But if you pile it up in one place it stinks like hell." Clint Murchison Jr. (1895-1969) U.S. industrialist.

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

Deep within the dark, sludge-lined, fume-filled bowels of an abandoned underground gas storage tank, a secret gathering of the leaders of one of the nation's largest oil companies and gas retailers, ANALOCO, was beginning.

"The weekly meeting of the chapter of the Grand Order of United Gas-gouging Entrepreneurs is hereby called to order," said Sam "Scam" Macanus, Supreme Grand Gouger, the president of ANALOCO and owner of the Stop-N-Rob convenience store chain, as he slammed the official pump handle onto the side of the ceremonial gas pump.

"May we all gouge with the same self-serving spirit of our founding father, Robert Keayne, who in 1539, during a construction crisis, viciously overcharged by some 110 percent on the price of nails."

All members responded by placing the thumb of their open right hand to their nose, fanning their posteriors with their left, and in one voice yelled, "Gouga-gouga!"

Everyone gave each other the secret ceremonial one-fingered salute, chugged down his last swallow of soda-pop from a "Big Orifice" squeeze bottle and sat down.

"Fellow Gougers," Sam began, "We are faced this evening with a serious situation. The on-going congressional investigation of our company concerning the issue of gas price-gouging is about to reach an end, and frankly, I am worried."

"How's come?" Lester Hilges asked as he pulled out a match to light his cigar.

"No smoking in here, you idiot!" Sam screamed as he violently slapped the cigar out of Lester's mouth. "You want to blow us all a new filler-hole?"

"Sorry," pined Lester, as he picked up his sludge-covered cigar and took his seat. "I guess I jus' forgot."

"Well don't let it happen again, or you'll be payin' the same price for gas that we charge our customers."

A loud, involuntary gasp reverberated throughout the sacred chamber. Banishment to the world of the average gas consumer was unthinkable. It was worse than a sharp stick in the eye.

"As I was saying," the Grand Gouger continued, "I am worried. As you know, it is our policy to stick it to the customer whenever and wherever we can. Gas has always been a good gouging item, particularly when we collectively gouge college students at the beginning and end of semesters. And the holidays are our biggest gouge period of the year.

"However, it appears a consumer revolt is at hand. People aren't buying gas from ANALOCO. They even go out of their way to buy from a higher-priced competitor.

"But, we took advantage of the crisis in the Gulf, as any good gouger would," Sam said proudly. "We even did a double gouge as students returned to college for the fall semester. And what did we get?"

"Nasty editorials in the nation's newspapers, that's what!" Bubba Tudley cried. "And dammit, Leroy," Bubba snarled as he turned to Leroy Chisleman behind him. "Quit breathin' on me! Your breath smells like fertilizer, and besides, it rustles them little bitty hairs on the back of my neck. Makes me feel like I got cooties!"

"Ah, shut up!" Leroy spat. "Yer jus' mad cuz yer idea of everbody charging $1.45 for a gallon of gas last month brought the law down on us. I told ya 22 cents above the nation's average was too dang much, and you DO have cooties!"

"It weren't neither my idea, it were Fat Charlie's, and you know it!" Bubba yelped as he feverishly scratched the back of his neck.

Fat Charlie Lubbers was heading for the door just as Sam the Grand Gouger hollered, "Order! Order! Fellow Gougers, please sit down. You too, Charlie.

We have collectively fixed the price in the past, and we will collectively take the blame for gang-gouging the customer last month. Now then, what we need is a plan to get us out of what is surely going to be a hefty fine and a huge lawsuit when this investigation is finished."

"Ya, well that was one hell of a plan you had by showin' them investigators phony records of our pricing practices. I seen hot checks that looked more believable than that!" Leroy growled. "And dadburnit, Bubba, you done sat on my double-billed Stop-N-Rob baseball cap! Look at it — jus' mashed flatter than the top of your ugly head!" Leroy blubbered.

Bubba and Leroy were just about to go at it when ... "Will you two shut up and stay seated!" the Supreme Gouge ordered. "Geezus! We have a full-blown crisis here and you two are fighting over halitosis and hats!"

Lester, who had been quietly chewing on the retrieved "sludge-gar" slapped from his face, slowly stood up. "I got an idea," he said in a barely audible voice.

A hush fell upon the group within the deep, dark, sludge-lined, fume-filled, underground gas storage tank.

"Why don't we jus' tell the truth, plead for mercy, an' promise never to do it agin," Lester said.

The Supreme Grand Gouger reached into his pocket, pulled out a match and struck it.

Even lowlife, gas-gouging entrepreneurs have standards they will not compromise.

Columnist obsessed

Editor,

I was neither surprised nor shocked by Brad Seabourn's Sept. 20 column "Religion obstructs choices." Since reading the Collegian these last few years, I have watched his gropings for a literary distinction grow into little more than a rabidly blind anti-Christian obsession. Obsession, of course, destroys objectivity, which twists facts. Obviously, then, it follows that truth is lost in the mire.

I would suggest that Seabourn's debauched column belongs somewhere on the funny page, since it can hardly be offered any acceptance of truth, integrity or fact — although the writers of the funnies might cry foul.

With the very first sentence of his column Seabourn exposes his lack of depth by the statement, "In the very near future, this country will be drawn into a discussion concerning an issue of choice." In the very near future? This "discussion" has been ongoing since 1973. In this inane statement, Seabourn meekly attempts to vociferate prophetics but instead rattles foolishness. Thus, the course for the rest of his strained effort is plotted on a blurred map of incoherence.

Seabourn speaks of "sanctimonious brutes" and "pious asses" who "have very little regard for quality of human life" and are "largely responsible for the ... death of millions ... who are plagued by poverty, starvation, and disease due to over-population." These "brutes" and "asses" are the same Church (defined as all Christians, Catholics, or Protestants) that has poured literally millions of dollars in food and aid to the hungry in the United States and abroad. The giving of the American Church far surpasses that of most all other national efforts combined. The Church is also responsible for thousands of crisis pregnancy centers across America, which are there to educate women to what an abortion truly entails. They assist and council them in whatever decision they make, before and after the abortion or birth. They also have lists of thousands of pre-screened couples who desire to adopt children. The Church has also set up hundreds of centers that an unwed mother may go to carry her child to term; where she would have medical care, food, housing and a chance to complete her education within those facilities. That is a fact we almost never see in the newspapers of this country (but that's an entirely different story).

So are these rantings of Seabourn's those of one who is deeply concerned about the abortion issue or rather the bemoanings of one desiring population control for the selfish quality of his own life, and hang what happens to the innocent child in the quest for it?

Without question, the largest share of inhumanity to man lies in the heart of mankind that strives diligently to satisfy the lust for power and greed (i.e., grain bins maxed out while millions starve). But the viciousness of Seabourn's attack lies in the ruse of pointing a hypocritical finger to the Church screaming "murderer," while on the other hand supporting and promoting the same act of aggression toward man in the form of abortion.

As support for this inhumanity continues to erode, I'm sure we will see an increase in irascible babblings such as Seabourn's. My hope, however, is that he will take the time to crawl out of the gutter long enough to minimize his sordid indignation toward the Church and air his thoughts based upon fact rather than some out-of-context exhumation of Bible verses for which he himself espouses irrelevance.

Home-based jobs up

Economic growth aided by increase

By Angie Schrock
Collegian Reporter

Home-based businesses are increasing in number and injecting economic growth into communities.

This will cause an increase in the number of these businesses in the future, said Gail Lemke, district home economist from Alberta, Canada.

"The change in rural America, including Canada and the United States, is largely due to home-based business growth like never before," said Lemke, in a presentation titled "Home-Based Businesses" at the Working with Families Conference Wednesday.

"We all know someone involved in a home-based business, whether it's a friend, a neighbor or just someone you know. The farm is a traditional example," she said.

Numerous things are involved in making a home-based business successful, Lemke said. They include the factors that have encouraged home-based businesses, the home front, the role of government in home-based businesses and the future work and study of the business.

"People need to keep in mind that there are many stressors in a venture like this," Lemke said. "There are no boundaries between home and the business, so when do you stop answering the business phone and start answering the personal phone?"

The main factor encouraging home-based businesses is the fact that less time is being spent at the job, but not less time working. More jobs have flexible schedules so people have more time to do something extra like start their own business, Lemke said. Many people also work out of their homes for someone else.

"People are entrepreneurs, and they have been for years," she said.

Lemke said for example, Kool-Aid was invented by a man from Nebraska who had a habit of getting in his mother's way in the kitchen.

The situation in the person's home is also a consideration, Lemke said. New technologies have enabled farmers to spend less time on some operations. This gives the people time to consider marketing their products or starting a side business.

The over-65 age group is also increasing, she said. These people are looking for something to fill their spare time, and there are endless possibilities for them.

Government involvement is increasingly important to home

Volunteers taught to help abused, battered families

By Lajean Rau
Collegian Reporter

The violence that leads a battered woman to seek help is many times only the symptom of the problem.

Helping clients with long-term histories of multiple forms of abuse and other family dysfunctions was discussed Wednesday as part of the Working with Families Conference.

Janette Copeland Borst, Emporia State University instructor and SOS Battered Women's Shelter volunteer, and Aneta Bodkin, volunteer coordinator and SOS adult client-services director were the guest speakers.

While substance abuse may not cause battering, it is the leading problem Borst and Bodkin encounter in conjunction with domestic violence. Victims and abusers also frequently have histories of child abuse, neglect, rape or incest.

Being classified as relationship-addictive or having an abused mother is another common factor.

"What we are looking at are cycles," Bodkin said. "I guarantee you there is going to be a cycle no matter who the client is. The duration between cycles may be different, and depending how long the person has been in the situation, that person may or may not realize what's going on," she said.

The cycle consists of three parts: the tension, the fight and the honeymoon period. Tension builds slowly until something sets off a fight, said Bodkin.

"It's usually something very minor in our eyes, something that in this couple's reality may not be minor at all. The man spent too much money, dinner isn't ready on time, a child is sick," Bodkin said.

Once the tension is released in some sort of violence, the next phase is the honeymoon period — when whatever attracted them together is rekindled. The abuser apologizes, and the couple is happy for a time.

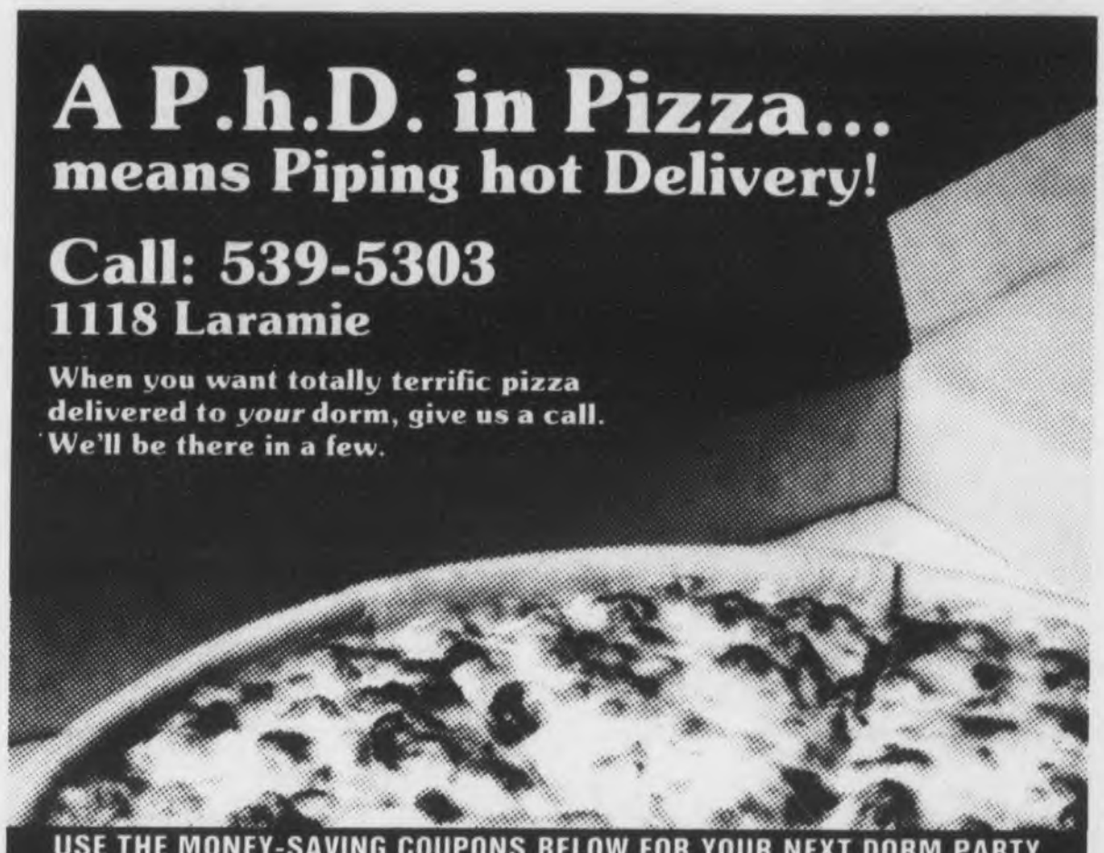
"This period may even be seen as a reward for the victim," Bodkin said. "This may sound strange to you and I, but this relationship may be so dysfunctional that the victim thinks the only way to be happy is to accept and get through the violent times," she said.

The longer the cycle goes on, the more the victim is able to withdraw from it.

"We are not looking at weak women here," Bodkin said. "Many of these women have excellent coping skills."

When a victim comes to the shelter for help, the initial goal is to protect the victim from physical danger, Borst said.

Options range from placing the woman and children in the shelter or with family or friends to using police to remove and jail the abuser.



Borst used the term "crooked dancers" to describe the dysfuntional families she deals with.

THE RIDE
KSU STUDENT TRIPS TO ART MUSEUMS
made possible through the fine arts fee

The department of art will organize a series of trips to art museums throughout the current academic year. The student fine arts fee assessed at registration will subsidize the cost of the travel. Please take advantage of this wonderful opportunity to view exciting exhibits and collections in the region. Keep an eye on The Collegian for activities associated with THE RIDE.

The first trip will be to see an outstanding collection of drawings at the Salina Art Center, Salina, Kansas and to visit Lucas, Kansas to see the Garden of Eden (listed on the National registry of Historic Places). The collection of drawings at the Salina Art Center is entitled Training The Hand and The Eye: American Drawings from the Cooper-Hewett Museum. The exhibit includes exploratory drawings, and works in progress by 34 American artists including Winslow Homer, Frederic Church, Thomas Moran, and William Chase. The Garden of Eden was created by S.L. Dinsmoor, an eccentric Kansan. He built a home of native limestone and in the yard surrounding the house he created a concrete wonder that defies description. The first Ride will leave the K-State Union at 8:15 a.m. on Friday, October 5, 1990. Reservations are required.

Contact the Department of Art 532-6605, or stop by room 105 in the Art Building for information or to reserve your seat. Make your reservations by the end of the day on Monday, October 1st.

The cost of the trip will be eight dollars per person, includes bus transportation and entry fees.

WHO ARE THESE GUYS?

Collegian/File

Coaches Mike Clark (above), Russ Bunker (below), and Steve Bietau (below right) are three of the five non-revenue sports coaches. Each has earned local and national recognition while at K-State.

Non-revenue coaches rarely noticed

David Svoboda

SPORTS EDITOR

They toil in utter anonymity, these five men who wear purple and white.

None of them want headlines, just maybe a mention on a sports page now and then.

But they're all winners.

Steve Bietau, Russ Bunker, John Capriotti, Mike Clark and Scott Nelson coach nine of the 12 NCAA-recognized sports at K-State. Their sports are referred to as "non-revenue." But don't ever call their sports "minor," they and their teams are truly big time.

It just seems like very few people have taken time to notice.

As non-revenue coaches, they rely on the successes of the "big three" sports at K-State: football, men's basketball and women's basketball.

The women's basketball program, under Coach Susan Yow, is considered a member of the non-revenue club. But the program is implicitly disqualified becuase the team plays in Bramlage Coliseum at Basketball U., and Yow, though relatively new to the area, is fast becoming a recognizable figure.

But if you met a non-revenue coach on the street, would you know who he was? And, better yet, would you be able to ask an intelligent question about the teams they coach?

Let's take a look at K-State's own Fab Five.

■ Steve Bietau — The 1989 Big Eight Coach of the Year, women's tennis coach Bietau has lifted the program to new heights since taking over six years ago.

During the remarkable 1989 season, Bietau led the team to a fourth-place finish in the conference, the highest finish ever in K-State women's tennis history. In addition, the team won four league dual matches for the first time in a single season.

Bietau has gained a reputation — and a well-deserved one at that — as a tireless recruiter. He has plucked players from foreign soil several times over the past few years, and the success of these players has contributed greatly to the success of the program.

Capriotti

Nelson

Under Bietau's guidance, the program has seen its facilities improve with the addition of three courts inside Ahearn Field House that were completed in January 1989.

■ Russ Bunker — Bunker proves wrong the adage "you can't go home again." A native of Manhattan and graduate of K-State, Bunker left Manhattan for Iowa to become a country club pro, only to return as floor manager of a local menswear store.

When former K-State coach Rob Sedorcek decided to pursue his competitive golf career, Bunker moved out of the clothing business and into the coach's office.

He inherited a program that, to use a golf term, was buried deep in the rough. He's got it back on the fairway, though not quite to the green as of yet.

Some of Bunker's greatest efforts thus far have also been in the area of recruiting. Like Bietau, Bunker has left Kansas to recruit, though the men's and women's golf rosters are dotted with the names of Sunflower State products, as well.

■ John Capriotti — The guy is a winner, plain and simple.

Capriotti coaches four different teams for K-State: men's and women's cross country and men's and women's track and field.

Since his arrival in 1986, K-State has produced more than 45 Big Eight individual champions in track and field. In addition, he played a big role in Janet Haskin's NCAA championship in the 10,000 meters during the 1990 outdoor track season.

In the meantime, the Chicago native has turned the cross country program into a dominant force. The women's program has been particularly impressive, earning its fifth-consecutive berth in the NCAA championships in 1989.

Capriotti ran in college at Cal-Poly State for current K-State athletic director Steve Miller and captained the team's national cross country championship in 1978.

■ Mike Clark — Another recent Big Eight Coach of the Year, Clark nabbed the award for his work on the baseball field in 1990.

Clark's 1990 Wildcats finished second in the Big Eight, and appeared in the Big Eight post-season tourney for the first time since 1985. His teams have now posted three straight 30-win seasons, a first in the history of the school.

Facility improvements have been one of Clark's goals. Under his guidance, major renovations have been completed at Frank Myers Field, including the installation of a new grandstand.

Clark has a rare rapport with his players, and the grandstand project

K-State Athletic Hall of Fame

Eldon Auker

By Todd Fertig
Sports Reporter

Bo Jackson has nothing on former K-State athlete Eldon Auker, one of the inductees to the K-State Athletic Hall of Fame.

Auker has been called the best athlete in the history of the University.

He starred in football, basketball and baseball at K-State from 1929-32, before becoming the school's first competitor to play major league baseball. Auker pitched nine seasons in the major leagues, winning 130 games and playing in two World Series.

A three-year starter on the football, basketball and baseball team, Auker received various all-conference and all-America honors. College Humor Magazine, a national publication for college students at that time, once named him to its all-America team in each sport.

From tiny Norcatur, Auker never expected to be so successful in three different sports. Now 80 years old and living in Vero Beach, Fla., Auker looks back on the opportunity with amazement.

"Because I went to such a small high school, I didn't have much exposure or experience against a real high level of competition," Auker said. "Charlie Corsaut was the baseball and basketball coach then. He saw me play in a high school basketball tournament and he wanted me to play for him, and after I got to K-State, the football coach convinced me to come out for the football team too.

"It was at K-State that I got such a rare opportunity, and I'm very grateful for that," Auker said of competing in three sports. "I was fortunate to get the chance, and I am very anxious to about coming back for the hall of fame ceremonies. K-State holds a lot of great memories."

Upon graduation, Auker went to Detroit to sign a baseball contract to pitch in the Tigers' farm system. He already had made a verbal commitment to join the Chicago Bears football team following the baseball season. Those plans changed, however, and Auker didn't receive the opportunity to become a multi-sport competitor on the professional level.

"When I went to sign my first contract in Detroit, they told me 'You have to make up your mind and choose which sport you are going to stick with. If you're going to play baseball for us, we don't want you messing around somewhere else,'" Auker said. "Well, I was in their office and had to choose right there on the spot. I was already on their payroll, and that meant something then, so I felt like going with baseball was the right thing."

Auker said that, as a pitcher, he had to be concerned with injuries to his arm that football could cause, and that if he'd played another position in baseball, he might have been given the chance to play both sports.

"I never regretted the decision, but would really have liked to have gotten to play football," Auker said. "I think football was my best sport, and I could have been successful in both sports."

Auker lost just two decisions in three seasons of pitching for K-State and helped the team to a conference title in 1930. He reached the major leagues in 1933 and helped the team to the 1934 World Series against the St. Louis Cardinals. He pitched the team to a victory in St. Louis before losing the series' final game to Dizzy Dean.

The following season, Auker led the major leagues in winning percentage with a record of 18-7. He pitched the opening game of the 1935 World Series in which the Tigers beat the Chicago Cubs.

Auker pitched for the Tigers until 1939, when he was traded to the Boston Red Sox. The following season his contract was purchased by the St. Louis Browns, where he finished his career in 1942.

In the later stages of his career, Auker began working in the abrasive business and was made president of Baystate Abrasives Co. in 1966, Auker said. With his wife, Mildred, Auker moved to Florida in 1974. The Aukers own a farm outside Chase, which they visit frequently. Trips to K-State have been rare, however.

Conference administrators begin meetings

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Big Eight Conference officials met for almost six hours Wednesday to discuss revenue distribution and possible alliances with the Southwest Conference, but decided only to continue the discussions at their next meeting in December.

After the athletic directors and faculty representatives met, the presidents of the eight schools got together for a dinner meeting Wednesday night, presumably to talk about the same things. The presidents scheduled a news conference for Thursday morning but were not expected to announce any concrete decisions.

There had been some speculation that Oklahoma and possibly Nebraska might insist on a new formula for dividing football and basketball revenue among conference members that would ignite a battle with the league's have-nots. But everybody said the meeting's tone was only positive.

"Very congenial," said Bob Devaney, Nebraska athletic director. "There were no big arguments at all."

"We discussed all the possibilities, and everybody decided to go back and think about it and discuss it further at the December meeting," said Oklahoma athletic director Donnie Duncan.

The Big Eight's revenue distribution formula is among the least favorable in the nation for teams that bring in most of the money. When a football team appears on television, it keeps two-ninths of the money and the other seven schools get one-ninth. The millions of dollars the Big Eight has brought in from the NCAA Basketball Tournament in recent years has been split evenly eight ways.

Oklahoma and Nebraska are by far the league's biggest moneymakers and Oklahoma, the Big Eight's only perennial power in both basketball and football, brings in most of all.

"We did discuss settlement and television revenue," Duncan said. "No one came with any proposals and there were no proposals made at the end of the meeting. We agreed that we would review it at the December meeting."

Duncan also said he explained the distribution formulas of other conferences. But Devaney said there is no threat the issue might lead to a breakup of the Big Eight.

"There is nothing that dire," Devaney said. "We all want the conference to remain strong as a conference. We don't want to break the conference up by trying to make any rule. We ought to be able to work something out."

Devaney agreed, however, that resolving the issue will require compromise.

"I think people are together in that there's an inequity in the distribution of revenue from the point of view of the people who participate," he said.

Guest faculty trio to play classics

By Charlie Gatschet
Collegian Reporter

Three Emporia State University faculty members promise a diverse ensemble of vocal and instrumental music at 8 p.m. tonight in the Danforth's and All Faiths Chapel.

The Lyric Trio, combining the talents of clarinetist Elena Lence, keyboard specialist Paul Moore and soprano Penelope Speedie, performs classical works from renowned artists such as Ludwig Spohr and Franz Schubert as well as several contemporary pieces.

The trio will also perform selections from Arnold Cooke, Michael Head, Harry Freedman, Simon Sargon and Phyllis Tate.

The concert is part of the Department of Music's Guest Artist Series. All performances in the series are free.

"The series provides an opportunity for our students to hear faculty members from other schools perform," said Jennifer Edwards, assistant instructor of music.

Edwards described the majority of participants in the series as performing professionals who teach music at a college or university in addition to performing. Sponsoring the series enables K-State to attract a number of diverse musical talents —and make contacts that enable K-State musicians to perform around the country.

> "The series is a broadening experience for students and a healthy exchange for faculty members.

"The series is a broadening experience for students and a healthy exchange for faculty members," Edwards said.

Lence has worked with the Kansas City Symphony Orchestra, the Missouri Symphony Society and the Emporia Civic Orchestra. She is also a member of the International Clarinet Society.

Moore is the chairman of keyboard studies at Emporia State and has performed as an accompanist throughout the Midwest and in Europe.

Speedie, a native of Canada, is the director of opera at Emporia State. She has performed in plays and has won awards at several international singing competitions.

Band Day provides high school students chance to participate in game festivities

By Susan Boos
Collegian Reporter

A crowd of 3,000 is expected to rush onto the field at the K-State game against New Mexico this Saturday. Not a crowd of college students, but participants in K-State Band Day.

Stan Finck, KSU band director, expects bands, twirlers, dance and flag teams from 64 schools to participate this year.

At 2 p.m. Saturday, the participants will march in a parade beginning at Manhattan City Park and ending at Third Street and Poyntz Avenue. Fort Riley's Color Guard will lead the procession, followed by the K-State and Manhattan High School marching bands.

Finck said the bands, which have never played together before, will practice between the parade and the game, which begins at 6:30 p.m.

"The schools have known what music would be played for quite some time. Music stores all across the state have a list of what music will be played at K-State Band Day," Finck said. "I know some schools have been practicing quite a while, but I've also seen the bands passing out music on the bus — that can be nerve-racking."

The high school students will participate in the pre-game show from the stands, and at halftime they will form a large KSU on the field.

"It takes our whole marching band to make the outline," Finck said. "When the high school students get on the field, they just fill in."

The bands will perform "Wildcat Victory," "Cold Hearted," "Whole Lotta Shakin' Goin' On" and "1812 Overture."

"The Band Day crowd is very excited to perform at a K-State football game," said Pridette sponsor Scott Johnson. "They'll add a lot of enthusiasm."

The Pridettes have been working on a routine for dance teams to perform. They will teach the routine to the schools at the afternoon rehearsal.

"Band Day is a great opportunity to expose high school students to K-State," Finck said. "Anytime we can get high school students on campus, it's good for recruitment and for K-State's image."

McKee gets prestigious award; honor recognizes teaching skills

By Rob Batchman
Collegian Reporter

Miles McKee, professor of animal sciences and industry, has been selected as Kansas Professor of the Year by the Council for Advancement and Support of Education.

Every year, CASE nominates people from various colleges and universities nationwide who are to be recognized for their teaching skills and abilities to work with students. The award is one of the most prestigious given to professors.

"I am highly honored," McKee said. "The award is documented primarily by letters from former students, which play a very important part. I now will represent the state of Kansas."

The award will be presented to McKee by K-State president Jon Wefald at the Agricultural Fall Round-up Oct. 6.

McKee has been teaching at the University since 1967 and is now the department's teaching coordinator. He teaches courses such as Principles of Animal Sciences, Livestock Production Management and Livestock Sales Management.

"I'm no different than any other professor at K-State," McKee said. "We're here to try to help students learn, and we all do the best we can. I don't feel I'm any better or any different than any other teacher."

McKee said he believes the most important factor of teaching is helping students achieve their goals and letting them know that he has a personal interest in how each one does.

"I'm a real believer that each student is unique, different and very much an important individual. It's important then, as I teach, that I help each student in my class to learn and achieve the scope of the material that we're covering so that it fits into their own individual needs and purposes," McKee said. "I feel that teaching goes far beyond the classroom. It involves working with the students, being involved in student organizations, and helping them as an adviser."

As an adviser, McKee said he tries to let students realize and achieve their own goals.

"It's really important that I try and help them achieve what they want to be, not what I think they should be, not what the University thinks they should be, but what they want to be — because they're the one that's important," he said.

McKee said students learn more in an environment where they feel comfortable.

"I want them to feel free and welcome to come see me. I want them to feel at ease here at the University. I think students learn much better if the environment is right," he said.

Guy Kiracofe, professor of animal sciences and industry, said he thinks McKee is a deserving recipient of the award.

"We couldn't have a finer nomination." Kiracofe said. "He's a real student-oriented person, and I've never heard anything from students except positive comments about him."

is a fine example. The K-State players, at a huge financial savings to the program and the athletic department, constructed the grandstand on their own, and Clark was right there with them.

His hands-on style has produced 417 college coaching wins.

■ Scott Nelson — Nelson is the true veteran of the K-State coaching fraternity.

Since coming to Manhattan in 1980, Nelson has rewritten the Wildcat volleyball record book. In 1985, Nelson guided K-State to its first 20-win season since 1979.

That 1985 squad, along with the 1981 team, recorded a third-place finish, the best league record ever at K-State.

Nelson has demonstrated a knack for keeping Kansas' best volleyball players in the state and in his program. The current Wildcat roster includes eight Kansans.

Facility improvements have also highlighted the Nelson era. The team plays on a refurbished version of the old Ahearn basketball floor and occupies a remodeled locker room in Ahearn as well.

Don't think for a moment that the man who oversees their work — Athletic Director Steve Miller — doesn't appreciate their work. Miller has spent quite a bit of money on the football program with quite a few objectives in mind.

One of those objectives is an improvement in all of the non-revenue programs. Miller recognizes the solid work done by each coach and knows his staff is as good as any.

It's just too bad these guys don't carry American Express cards.

"You've heard people say that every family has its own dance," Borst said. "Some are like a minuet, very stately and very formal, and that is their family dance. Some families are more like rock 'n' rollers. The rhythm is more free and casual, and that is the way their family is," she said.

"Dysfunctional families are crooked dancers," she said. "The rhythms are abnormal and unstable."

Despite their efforts to help battered women, the volunteers often wonder how much of an impact they make.

"Sometimes we feel like we are really making a difference," Bodkin said, "but I often wonder if we aren't just spinning our wheels. The cycles seem to go on forever. Our job is to just try to intervene at the best time to try to stop them.

"God Only Knows" holds a religious theme. The song begins with the voice of evangelist Billy Graham criticizing rock 'n' roll as Satan's tool for communicating with today's young people. The song points out the irony of the Swaggart controversy, comparing him to a guru who advocates celibacy while sleeping with sheep.

With lyrics like "How do you feel old man?/How do you feel?/Being spoken for by these self-righteous fanatics," the song indicts anyone who attempts to communicate for an omniscient person.

The best two songs on the album are "Crescendo" and "How Was It for You." "Crescendo" begins with a lone trumpet and a group of voices babbling the word isolation in strange broken parts. Using almost exclusively instrumentals, the entire song communicates loneliness. The only lyrics are "I'm afraid of loneliness/swallowing me."

The mellowness and depth of "Crescendo" is immediately followed by the near-rock 'n' roll of "How Was It For You." This song is a strange suggestion of sarcasm and selfishness with the lyrics "Was it as good as it was for me." The strength of the song is bound up in the guitar and harsh vocals that pound out the message.

James delivers a powerful album.

based businesses. Publications are being printed on ways to start and continue a home business and highlighting new ventures in this area, Lemke said.

Studying and learning are important in keeping businesses going.

"We are starting to educate children in school about home- based businesses and the education needs to keep on throughout life," she said.

There are endless possibilities when considering a home-based business, and with today's technology, the world is just a few seconds away, Lemke said.

Abortion surfaced as a hot topic on campus Thursday despite the efforts of Joan Finney's staff to avoid the subject.

The Democratic gubernatorial challenger left a K-State crowd unsatisfied with her stand on abortion.

When the candidate spoke at a forum sponsored by Southwind and the Young Democrats of KSU, audience members touched on the controversial subject.

Although Ken DeLaughder, Southwind project director, asked the crowd to restrict its questions to topics concerning the environment and education, a question about Finney's stance on abortion was asked.

Mark Guizlo, graduate student, said Finney commented Wednesday that she is opposed to abortion — even in the case of rape or incest.

"I just wondered if you are going to be willing to tell a 14-year-old girl who is a victim of rape or incest that she is going to be forced to bear that child?" Guizlo said.

Finney said she will put the issue in the hands of the Legislature.

"Though I am personally opposed to abortion, I will not be initiating any legislation," she said.

Finney did say that if she is elected governor, she expects to sign a parental notification bill and also legislation prohibiting abortions in the third trimester.

Incest, she said, is a very painful subject for her to talk about, and it must be stopped.

Education of women and mothers is the way to stop incest, she said.

Several members of the crowd voiced their dissatisfaction with Finney's comments by yelling, "How is that going to help?"

Before Finney could answer, DeLaughder told the crowd to keep to the issues of education and the environment.

"People and abortion are part of the environment," cried one member of the audience.

Guizlo said after the forum that he thought Finney dodged the question, and education wouldn't solve all incest problems.

Democratic challenger tabs tax relief as important issue

By Gregory A. Branson
Government/City Editor

Gubernatorial candidate Joan Finney made her first campaign stop in Manhattan Thursday, gearing up for the Nov. 6 election.

Finney spent most of the day hopping from one event to the other, plugging her campaign platform.

Property tax relief, Finney said, is her No. 1 issue. At her first stop of the day at Manhattan radio station KMAN-AM, she outlined her plan of putting some of the 52 sales-tax exemptions back on the tax rolls.

Even though some of the exemptions could hurt farmers, she said at a Manhattan Rotary Luncheon later in the day, they should be considered.

"Let's lay them all out on the table, and then we'll look at them," Finney said.

She said by eliminating some of these exemptions, the state would be able to roll back a third of the property taxes. If elected, she said she plans to exempt food sales from sales tax in her second or third year to help the poor.

"It's the poor that sales tax hurts the worst," she said.

Finney said she also plans to fund the third year of the Margin of Excellence.

"There is $20 million earmarked for economic development," she said. "Fourteen million can be used for the margin, and the rest should go to SRS (Social and Rehabilitation Services)."

Hayden's proposal to fund the MOE will create too many taxes that

Racial incident may cost $2,000

By Erika Parker
Staff Reporter

Bushwacker's could be fined $2,000 in connection with last summer's racial discrimination incident.

In a complaint filed against Bushwacker's, the Kansas Commission on Civil Rights has decided in favor of the complaintant, Luis Montaner.

Montaner, fourth-year student in veterinary medicine, filed a complaint saying that on June 23, 1989, Bushwacker's management posted signs which said "Fuck San Juan. The Management."

Puerto Rican students had been celebrating San Juan Day, a Puerto Rican holiday commemorating Jesus Christ's baptism by John the Baptist.

Robert Lay, commission assistant director, said in a letter to Montaner there was probable cause for the allegations.

The commission is asking for $2,000 and a discrimination workshop from Bushwacker's as settlement. Conferences will be conducted by the commission so that an agreement can be reached.

Montaner said Bushwacker's did conduct a discrimination workshop, but that it was inadequate.

"Someone came in a talked about civil rights overall. It didn't focus on minorities at establishments.

"With Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week coming up in October, this is really exciting," Montaner said.

He also said, however, he is disappointed the commission took so long in reaching a decision. The investigation was not conducted until April 11 because of a backlog of cases.

Uzziel Pecena, senior in Spanish and president of Hispanic American Leadership Organization, said, "It shouldn't have taken so long to reach a decision. I'm glad something has been done about discrimination so that people know it's not something they can get away with. Mistreatment of people because of their background is not acceptable, especially in a university town."

Bushwacker's owner, Don Ramey, was not available for comment. Last year, in a letter to the editor of the Collegian, Ramey apologized to anyone who was offended by the incident.

Montaner had submitted photographs of the signs as proof of the incident. Several students also testified.

One student, describing the incident, said the disc jockey said, "Oh, yeah, we have some Hispanics here to commemorate San Juan Day," and played two or three pop songs with Spanish lyrics. Suddenly, the DJ said, "Fuck San Juan," and started

Reorganization resolution passes

STUDENT SENATE

By Charlie Gatschet
Collegian Reporter

A resolution supporting academic reorganization and a bill consolidating voting locations were passed by Student Senate Thursday.

Senate passed the academic reorganization resolution after approving an amendment requiring student representation at all stages of the process.

"This reorganization has the potential to do a lot of damage to a lot of departments," said Dwayne Lively, graduate student senator. "We should have student representation at all times."

Several senators expressed concern that student representation at all levels would needlessly slow the process.

"If we put a student at every level of the process we'll make it more drawn out than it needs to be," said David McIntyre, engineering senator.

Joel Gruenke, graduate school senator, said he thinks student representation is essential.

"If we want it fast, then we should let Jon Wefald write it," Gruenke said. "I'm a little scared of that. If we let them make the first decision without us, we let them make an important decision without us."

In other business, after experiments to increase voter turnout by adding voting places in last year's election were unsuccessful, Senate voted to eliminate the polling places in Derby Food Center and Cardwell Hall. This leaves the K-State Union and the Veterinary Medicine Complex as the only voting places for this fall's elections.

Some senators expressed concern about the inconvenience of having to make a trip to the Union to vote.

"If the issues are not important enough to make a five minute trip across campus, then I don't care if they vote," said Derek Nelson, Senate intern.

Another concern facing Senate was discrimination for placing polling places in residence halls and not in greek houses.

"People who live in dorms don't have to walk to vote," Gruenke said. "Don't vote for things to make them easy, vote to make them fair."

Suspect arrested in Crowder case

From Staff and Wire Reports

A Topeka man was arrested Thursday morning in connection with the slaying of Wamego school teacher Sherryl Crowder.

Peter Spencer, 18, was arrested at his home by Topeka police.

The body of Crowder, a Manhattan resident, was found by police in the trunk of her car Sept. 9, police said.

No charge has been filed against Spencer, said Kathy Murphy, office manager of the Shawnee County district attorney's office. The office declined to comment further on the case.

Shawnee County District Judge Matthew DowdSpencer set Spencer's bond thursday afternoon at $100,000.

Spencer did not post bond and will remain in the Topeka jail, said Lt. Roland Whye, patrol division officer.

Spencer will go before a judge today, where he will probably be charged with first degree murder, Whye said.

Police found Crowder, 38, in her car's trunk at 22nd Street and Western Avenue in Topeka. Crowder taught sixth grade at West Elementary School in Wamego. Investigators said they believe she was killed by several blows to the head from a blunt instrument.

Lt. Bud Brooks, director of community service for the Topeka Police Department, said the department believes robbery was a motive for the killing. He said the victim had not been sexually molested.

Brooks said officers were called to the scene when residents reported a suspicious vehicle that had been parked in a vacant lot for an extended period of time.

"The keys were in the car, and when officers opened the trunk to further check, they found the body," he said.

Brooks said information from the Kansas Bureau of Investigation enabled police to focus on Spencer. Investigators also had assistance from police in Riley County, Wamego and Junction City.

The police department investigated more than 200 leads, Brooks said.

Morning sightings surprise citzens as research balloon floats across Kansas

From Staff and Wire Reports

On the way to school this morning a local science teacher spotted a huge silver-whitish looking plastic bag in the sky.

"I was driving to school this morning and I spotted a large item that looked like a huge plastic bag. I teach astronomy so I set the school's telescope out on the lawn and everyone came out to watch," said Dean Stramel, science instructor at Manhattan High School. "We watched the plastic bag from 8 a.m. to about 8:45 a.m. this morning."

The huge plastic bag resembled a few other things as well.

"The students at school all described it as a huge jellyfish thing," Stramel said.

So what was this extraordinary looking thing that resulted in calls to police stations, weather offices and radio stations, from people as far away as Beatrice, Neb., and Marion and South Haven in Kansas?

"The (thing) was actually a research balloon," said Ernie Cobb, weather service specialist for the National Weather Service in Topeka. "The balloon was launched from New Mexico to study and research the upper atmosphere.

"The balloon is made by a company in Palestine, Texas, that actually makes and launches them," Cobb said.

The balloon, which is the size of one and a half football fields, went down between Olathe and Bonner Springs later Thursday morning, but at the time, authorities thought a slow leak may have caused it to fall or it burst. Later the reason for balloon's descending was discovered.

A special plane catches the balloon to release some of its air, Cobb said.

Hussein wrapped in security

WASHINGTON (AP) — Iraqi President Saddam Hussein's security shield is so thick and mobile that the only way he'll be toppled is if one of his intimate advisers turns against him, U.S. officials said Thursday.

Based on reports from Iraq, the officials said they've concluded that Hussein remains in Baghdad but moves around frequently from his various palaces in the capital.

The officials spoke on condition they remain anonymous.

"He is moving around a lot," one official said. Hussein's houses are well-defended and structurally strong and he is taken from place to place usually in a heavily secured convoy.

Hussein's whereabouts and his habits have been somewhat of a mystery since he ordered his troops to invade Kuwait on Aug. 2.

Gorbachev uses new power

MOSCOW (AP) — President Mikhail Gorbachev began using his sweeping new powers to rescue the collapsing Soviet economy on Thursday, ordering businesses to fulfill supply contracts and the government to ensure distribution.

But many are uncertain how they will fit in the market economy Gorbachev is trying to establish, and they find it more profitable to trade goods on the black market, rather than distribute them in the established structure.

In his first decree since the Supreme Soviet legislature on Monday granted him new powers to shore up the economy and maintain law and order, Gorbachev told government businesses, regardless of their administrative subordination and location, to preserve economic ties. He said the businesses should meet all contract obligations for raw materials and other goods in the last quarter of this year and throughout 1991.

It is during that period that the country will be trying to switch from a centrally planned to a market economy under a plan the Supreme Soviet is to select after Oct. 15.

Gorbachev's decree, read on the nightly TV newscast "Vremya" and released by the Tass news agency, was an attempt to preserve the status quo at a time when many businesses are trying to bypass Moscow and trade directly with each other.

Gunman killed by police

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — An Iranian gunman with a hatred of blond Americans was killed by police Thursday, seven hours after he stormed a bar, killed one man, wounded seven people and took 33 hostages.

Six officers stormed Henry's Publick House and Grille in the Durant Hotel after police negotiators decided they couldn't talk the gunman out of the bar, said Lt. Jim Polk.

"We decided there was no other way," said Polk.

He said the gunman was identified by Ray Colvig, University of California at Berkeley spokesman, as Mehrdad Dashti.

Dashti, 30, a native of Iran, was naked and bleeding when he was loaded into an ambulance and taken to Highland Hospital. He was dead on arrival, according to hospital spokeswomen Phyllis Brown.

"He was apparently very confused," said Berkeley Police Capt. Phil Doran. "Deranged is not a bad description."

Dashti accused women of leading men on by wearing short skirts and said they deserved to be punished, reported Douglas Moore who was one of the hostages

Committee approves Souter

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Judiciary Committee approved the nomination of New Hampshire jurist David Souter to the Supreme Court on Thursday with only one dissenting vote. The full Senate is expected to confirm him easily but not before the court begins its fall term on Monday.

Democrats as well as Republicans on the committee said they thought President Bush's nominee was a brilliant legal scholar and a man of good temperament and integrity.

In the 13-1 vote, only Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., opposed him, saying he feared Souter would solidify a 5-4 anti-civil-rights, anti-privacy majority.

Howell Heflin, a conservative Alabama Democrat whose opposition helped kill the 1987 Supreme Court nomination of Robert Bork, said he liked Souter's clearheaded approach and lack of an ideological agenda.

Police investigated for murder

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A task force investigating a string of slayings is focusing on six former or current police officers in the death and disappearance of two prostitutes, two newspapers said.

Meanwhile, authorities continued their search Thursday for another killer believed to have fatally stabbed five women since January.

The San Diego Union and the Los Angeles Times reported the Metropolitan Homicide Task Force is investigating six current or former officers who reportedly knew slain prostitute Donna Gentile or her friend Cynthia Maine, who is missing.

Both women were prostitutes, had served as police informants and were romantically involved with at least one officer, the newspapers said.

Finney faces pro-choice fire

WICHITA (AP) — State Treasurer Joan Finney's views on abortion, rape and incest show she is not smart enough to be governor, a pro-choice advocate said Thursday.

Peggy Jarman, one of the founders of the ProChoice Action League, said Finney's comments in Topeka Wednesday were a disgrace to government, families, women and children.

"She should not be governor unless she can change her attitude and increase her knowledge about basic fundamental rights of people to control their own lives," Jarman said at a news conference at the Wichita YWCA.

The league has endorsed incumbent Republican Gov. Mike Hayden, who is pro-choice

Suspected attacker pursued

HUTCHINSON (AP) — A search was under way for a Great Bend man wanted in connection with attacks on women in three central Kansas counties.

Investigators from Reno County had interviewed the man in Great Bend earlier this week, but did not have enough evidence to arrest him, said Lt. Loren Snell of the Hutchinson Police Department.

But on Wednesday, Reno County Attorney Tim Chambers issued a warrant for Mitchell Wayne Thomas, 31, an assistant manager of a Great Bend restaurant.

And at a news conference Thursday in Great Bend, Scott Teeselink of the Kansas Bureau of Investigation said Thomas was a suspect in attacks in McPherson and Rush Counties as well.

Finney

Kansans could do without, Finney said.

"Kansans are taxed enough," she said. "It's because of our 4½ percent sales tax that businesses and people are leaving Kansas. We're being taxed to death."

Finney proposes expanding SRS programs that will focus on helping parents and young children. She hopes educating preschoolers will help keep them out of prison when they get older.

"It's time we stop reacting to criminals and start acting on them before they become criminals," she said.

The candidate returned to her alma mater Manhattan High School to talk to a government class and meet with students in the school's cafeteria.

"We're leaving your generation with problems because we lost control of our government," Finney said. "We're leaving you a huge national debt and state fiscal problems."

Using college students from across Kansas to write computer programs for the state is one way Finney proposes to reduce waste-spending in Kansas.

She said during reassessment, Kansas bought new software from an out-of-state company. Finney claims that software could have been developed at Kansas universities as research projects for students.

Suleiman says Bush knew of Iraqi invasion but chose to remain uninvolved

By Scott Levendofsky
Collegian Reporter

The annexation of Kuwait and the over-reaction by the United States is madness.

Michael Suleiman, professor of political science, said it is obvious the United States is not looking for a way out of the conflict. He said the United States is under the impression that if they don't go to war, their status as a superpower will fade.

Suleiman spoke on "War and Peace in the Persian Gulf" to a full house Thursday evening in St. Isidore's Chapel.

He said that estimates show the minimum cost of a conflict would be 5,000-10,000 American casualties, but reports and articles from Time magazine listed probable causualties in excess of 100,000.

Suleiman is an internationally recognized expert on the Middle East and was recently named as a University Distinguished Professor at K-State, said Sara Shields of the Manhattan Alliance on Central America.

Suleiman said the United States' original reaction to the invasion of Kuwait was of non-involvement. Iraq approached the United States prior to any conflict with Kuwait seeking to discover what stance the United States would take in case of the invasion. Iraq then invaded Kuwait on Aug. 2.

"The United States told the Iraq government that while they condemed the action, they would remain uninvolved. They said aggression between two Arab nations is of no consequence to the West," Suleiman said.

Suleiman said the Arab world has its own theories of U.S. involvement in the Middle East. First, the United States aims to lessen the military potential of Iraq. The United States is much more comfortable with the bulk of military power centered in Saudi Arabia than in Iraq.

Secondly, he said, the United States believes that if Iraq were to be in control of the majority of oil reserves, the resulting revenue would be re-invested in the Arab world, not in the West.

Suleiman said the Arab nations are

Firehouse nothing but cheap copy; boring album needs good hose-down

By Heather Anderson
Collegian Reviewer

You know an album is going to be bad when the first 14 words on side one are "yeah."

Despite obvious name-dropping thanks in the liner notes for Jon Bon Jovi, Richie Sambora and Mark Slaughter, nothing can save Firehouse's self-titled debut album from metal mediocrity.

How these guys got a recording contract is beyond me. Perhaps they were discovered on "You Can Be a Star" or some similar lip-synching show.

Nonetheless, CBS brought us this beauty, so let's go to work on it.

Firehouse doesn't even have the guts to be originally tacky — songs on the album range from Whitesnake to Skid Row sound-alikes. In fact, Firehouse also thanks Skid Row, but it owes more than thanks to Skid's lead singer Sebastian Bach ... like maybe royalties for lead singer C.J. Snare's lame attempt to copy his singing style, complete with hoo-uhs and falsetto screams.

C.J. Snare — original stage name, don't you think? In the band photo he looks exactly like David Coverdale, and guitarist Bill Leverty bears a not-so-coincidental resemblance to Steve Vai.

I've heard of influences, but this is ridiculous.

In the tradition of the recently-reviewed Warrant, the subject of eight out of 12 songs on the album is women. However, only three are about unsafe sex. The other five are cry-in-your-beer warbles about lost love.

To sample some of the sex-inspired lyrics, try these from "Shake & Tumble:" "I ain't no Johnny-come-lately/I'm Johnny-on-the-spot/I don't need no lady/I need a woman that gets me hot/Too naughty to be nice, too bad to be good/I'm all shook up/b-b-b-baby I don't know what to do."

Are you a fan of repetitive lyrics? Check out "Lover's Lane:" "We're going down, down, down to Lover's Lane/That's where she drives, drives, drives me insane/I'll take her down, down, down to Lover's Lane/We're going down, down, down to Lover's Lane."

To sample the self-inflicted pity tunes, here's a touching sacrifice from "Helpless," which should be titled "Hopeless":

"I don't understand how I lost command/Of this entire situation/I do as I am told when you take

Speaker says city needs tourism plan

10th Annual Working With Families Conference

By Angie Schrock
Staff Reporter

Manhattan could be a tourist trap.

This city, or any other small rural community could be, said Sue Palmer, a member of the Southern Prairie Area Education Agency in Iowa.

Palmer was the speaker for a rural tourism session called "Schools, Community and Tourism Working Together for Development," Thursday in the K-State Union Flint Hills Room. The session was one of seven in the 10th Annual Working with Families Conference.

Palmer said it takes creativity to get people involved in promoting their own small communities to stimulate tourism and interest for the area. Involvement is needed from all areas of the community, including schools and businesses as well as the people, Palmer said.

Teachers need to tell students what interesting things are in the area because it helps them learn about the area's history, she said.

"Our kids are ashamed of the small towns they come from, so we need to be able to tell them what makes the area great," Palmer said. "The home used for the background of the painting 'American Gothic' is in my county in Iowa, and it just sat there for years really out of the way. Now the road is not gravel anymore, it has been oiled and people can get to the house easier."

Palmer spoke about one rural community called Albania, a Victorian town whose entire central business district was on the National Register of Historic Places.

"The school systems are usually very cooperative," she said.

Workshop presents views on homeless

By Ryan Finney
Collegian Reporter

"Ten Ways to Become Homeless: The Working Poor and Families at Risk," was the workshop presented by Mary Linder and Sally Cox at 1:30 p.m. Thursday in K-State Union Room 212.

The workshop was part of the 10th Annual Working With Families Conference Program presented by the College of Human Ecology. Both speakers are from the Crossroads Center in Hastings, Neb., which is an agency for the homeless. Linder is the administrative director and Cox is the manager of services for the center.

"As I look out at a group like you, I realize that many of you are two paychecks away from the street," Linder said. "That's the economic realities today."

Linder said the 10 ways to become homeless are as follows: loss of job, waiting for first paycheck on a new job, job lay-offs, scarcity of low-income housing, medical or other family emergencies, change in family status (death or divorce), insufficient hours at work, being a non-resident (on the move or changing location), sudden emergencies (fire, surgery or car repair) and other personal changes (drug or alcohol treatment, or pregnancy).

According to April 1990 statistics from the National Impact Update, there were 32 million Americans living below the official poverty line in 1989, and more than one-third of them were children.

The National Impact Update also showed that two out of every five poor Americans fell into the lowest income category measured by the U.S. Census Bureau.

The Crossroads Center offers emergency food pantries, shelter and meals for people with need in the community. All programs are free of charge.

"Our policy for anybody coming to our door is that we will help anybody," Cox said. "We won't

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL

Suggestion may save college time and money

Before the Administration gets caught up in the long and arduous process of hiring a new dean for the College of Arts and Sciences, I have a suggestion that would save it a great deal of time and money: make ME the Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Of course, I know the administrators will have many doubts about hiring me, and will have many questions they want answered, the first of which will be questions about my qualifications, especially about my education.

Well, I have one degree already and am working on my second one. I'm a native Kansan, which gives me an insight into the character of the state no out-of-state/outsider candidate would have.

In this time of heinous budget crimes against K-State and the rest of the regents schools, we don't need some green-horn interloper wasting his or her time learning about our wishy-washy Legislature. We need someone who already knows they are unreasonable.

Plus, being younger than the average candidate, I can relate to the students better, because I will probably still be one when I get the job. (Please note the level of confidence I have. Very important.). Also, I already have an in with the new students at the University because about half of the new freshman class is in my two sections of Comp I.

Having been at K-State for almost five and a half years, I have knowledge of this University that any outsiders would not have. I know which restrooms to avoid. I know which sections of the library to hide in. I know this Union Station thing will probably flop. I have seen two different Aggieville riots/incidents/photo opportunities. I can remember a day when the athletic department didn't leech off the students to pay off their debts. I can remember a day when the students wouldn't have let them get away with that anyway.

I know what Leisure Studies is and why it's important and interesting. An outsider would have to look that up.

In my five years here at the University, I have come to know many members of the faculty and have friendly relationships with many of them. An outsider would not know as many faculty members and would have to waste his or her time building the type of relationships I already have. I, therefore, would be able to dive right in to the job of being a dean, which after five years, I think I have developed an idea of what it involves, even though I still can't figure out what all those other deans of arts and sciences do.

In fact, I'll make that my first official campaign promise, "If elected, I will find out what all those assistant deans of arts and sciences do." I'll also find out how much they're paid and compare that to what they do and see if they balance out, although you'd have thought someone would have done that already.

Dwayne Lively

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

But my greatest strength, and the main reason I should be the person selected for the job, is the level of fiscal responsibility I will bring to the job of dean of arts and sciences. I will search through every nook and cranny in the faculty and the curriculum for any fat, and if I find it, I will cut it out. I will likewise search in every nook and cranny of the administration for signs of fat, and if I find it, I will create a committee to investigate the necessity of perhaps taking a proposal to the Kansas Board of Regents to consider perhaps modifying in a "minimized and focused manner" the necessity of having certain positions filled.

That's why I'm perfect for the job. I'm a doer.

The greatest advantage I will bring to the position of dean of arts and sciences, though, is that I am willing to work for half of what they'll have to pay any outsider they bring in. I figure the dean makes at least $70,000, and they'll probably end up paying a newbie more than that, if they insist on going with an outsider.

I am willing to take on the responsibilities of the position for only $35,000, which is still more than probably two thirds of the faculty members at the University make, and five times what any graduate teaching assistant makes. Having a higher salary is important in establishing the significance and prestige of the position. This way I can say, "Well, yeah, if you're so smart, Mr. Professor, how come I make more than you do?" This is important in keeping the faculty in their place.

As you can see, I'm not even hired yet, and I have already guaranteed I will save the College of Arts and Sciences $35,000, and no one has even had to die yet. That's fiscal responsibility.

Moreover, I promise to consider taking action to rectify the obvious need to diversify a faculty and administration that are sorely lacking in both ethnic and female representation. I will do this by hiring a series of expensive consultants to analyze the specific needs of the situation. We don't want to get too many of one ethnic group by accident and create tension amongst the ethnic groups. I will have these consultants give a report to a special committee I will create.

This committee will give the information more consideration and launch their own extensive examination of the exact nature of the solution of the problem, which will culminate in a report to a search committee. I will personally head this committee (note my hands-on approach to these problems) and will make a recommendation to the University. I will be careful in explaining the nature of the problem and recommend some sort of action be taken to diversify the University sometime in the next 10 to 15 years.

Perhaps it's time I stopped bragging. There's not much more I can say except that I think my qualifications speak for themselves. If you, as a student or a faculty member, however, think that K-State deserves my type of leadership, be sure to drop the people in Anderson Hall a note on my behalf. It will be my pleasure to serve you.

Persian Gulf crisis introduces video war

In the 1980s the world was concerned about the Cold War. In the 1990s the threat of a global nuclear war is nearing extinction, and an entirely new style of war is on the horizon.

The days of the sword have long since passed, and the legacy of the tank and aircraft fighter will soon vanish. There is a newer high-technology weapon on the battlefield — the video camera.

With the recent exchange of videos between Iraqi President Saddam Hussein and U.S. President George Bush, CNN is beginning to look like its been taken over by MTV.

Hussein has kept himself out of the public light to avoid assassination attempts and to keep United States intelligence guessing his whereabouts. With this hide-and-seek attitude, Hussein is forced into issuing videotapes and playing movie star on the nightly news screen.

Bush knows that role very well and plays his part like a true politician. However, he has gone overboard by issuing his own video to be aired in Iraq. Why should the president of the United States have to result to such technological idiosyncrasy to communicate with another world leader?

What happened to the days when two leaders would sit down across the table from each other and hammer things out?

If we are going to play television tag, let's get our soldiers out of the Middle East and trade in our bombers and tanks for video cameras and video cassette recorders.

Bush must resist the chance to dazzle the Iraqi audience with his dashing stage repertoire and just wait for Hussein's tape to run out.

Education solution

Editor,

I am writing in response to the letter written by Wm. Nathan Wright in the Sept. 26 issue of the Collegian.

I wholeheartedly agree with him on the subject of General Dugan's dismissal. The general committed a serious breach of security and discipline, apparently for no other reason than to exaggerate his own importance. We, the public have absolutely no need (or desire in my case) to know the location of specific bombing targets. Anything else I could say on this matter would merely reiterate Wright's feelings.

However, I must take issue with Wright on another matter. I will disregard his vicious attack on the editorial staff of the Collegian. Let it suffice to say that the Collegian is a student newspaper. Having read similar newspapers from schools all over the country, I assure you that ours here at K-State is equal to or better than any of them.

Even more disturbing was Wright's assault on that much-maligned species, the freshman. First, he actually expressly implies that freshmen can't possibly understand current issues intimately, as they've only been at K-State for a month. Could anyone possibly believe that attendance at this or any other university or college is a prerequisite to awareness of current affairs. Really now. As if this wasn't absurd enough, Wright then laments that freshmen "prematurely exercise the right to express themselves." I am sure a political science major has had at least a casual acquaintance with the Bill of Rights. Study long and hard, but nowhere will you find an indication that the right to free speech is restricted to self-styled "knowledgeable citizens." Might I, a mere freshman, suggest that if people were encouraged to discuss world and national issues at an earlier age, we might actually see an improvement in social awareness?

Ignorance of any kind is cause for concern, but the best weapon with which to combat ignorance is education. No purpose is served by childish insults or arrogance. Humanity will no doubt continue to be beset by crises from the family through global levels. And, undoubtedly, there will always be an ample supply of finger-pointing pontificators ready to assign the blame. What we really need, though, are solutions — solutions that can only be produced through education.

Explanation needed

Editor,

I would like to use this opportunity to express my concern with the summary removal of Dean Thomas Isenhour and the Wefald administration's glib handling of the situation.

Provost Jim Coffman presents an air of infallibility and appears to think the decisions of the administration are sacrosanct. I would like to remind Coffman that he is an employee of the state in general and the University community in particular. I believe the students in the College of Arts and Sciences are owed an explanation regarding our dean's ouster. Coffman, you and the other executives are culpable.

Is the appointment of one Robert Kruh nothing more than administrative nepotism, or was the president looking for someone to dance to his particular tune. It could be neither, but how are we to know? The withholding of information is deplorable.

I call on the administration to rectify its opprobrious behavior and divulge the reasons for Isenhour's dismissal. The administrative function is after all, to serve the University, not hold court over it.

Hayden loses support

Editor,

While I was glancing through the Sept. 26 edition of the Collegian, the article about Gov. Mike Hayden's visit to K-State caught my attention for a couple of reasons. First of all, I was surprised that Hayden would have the audacity to set foot on campus after the funding stunt he pulled last year.

The second thing that caught my attention was the reason for his visit. Hayden wanted to reaffirm his support for the third year of the Margin of Excellence program.

The Margin of Excellence program was enacted in 1987 with the first year of funding scheduled for 1988-89, the second year 1989-90, the third year 1990-91 (this year). However, we don't have it. Why, you ask? Because when coming up with the 1990-91 budget, Hayden recommended cutting funds for the third year of Margin of Excellence. Maybe that's why he has to reaffirm his support for it.

When Hayden ran for office in 1986, he told us of his support for higher education. Anyone familiar with some of the reasons for University-wide reorganization can tell you how long that support lasted. Those hurt by reorganization can tell you what to think of Hayden's latest promise.

I, believe it or not, am a Republican, but I'm also a student whose education has been threatened by the governor's last budget. I think I'll be voting Democrat (ouch) this year.

A Matter of Taste

Sensory Analysis Lab trains employees to describe the taste of food

Delores Heisserer and Shan Burger, graduate students in foods and nutrition, wake up by 6 a.m. every weekday morning to prepare pizza for the Sensory Food Center located in Justin Hall.

Heisserer and Burger's main objective is to duplicate the taste of pizza so it may be analyzed at the center.

The Sensory Analysis Center, hired by companies across the nation, employs 14 professional panel members who are extensively trained to describe products. They also have two research assistants, Mary Hollingsworth and Betsy Smith.

"They are not concerned with the ingredients in the food or if the food tastes good or bad," said Mary Hollingsworth, a food and nutrition research assistant. "Their primary objective is to describe what the food tastes like."

Hollingsworth said there are three tasting panels working on projects this week.

The pizza panel goal, which includes 13 members, is to determine the ingredients for the best tasting pizza.

Six meat panelists are trying to find out the optimum cooking time for meats used in microwaves. In their study, they use red lights to mask all color of meat so opinions will be objective.

And other panelists are working to define the popcorn taste from 20 different kinds of microwaveable popcorn.

Though food is the thrust of the program, Hollingsworth said panelists have also done projects with fabric, paper, packaging and even automobile paints.

"They describe what they perceive with their senses whether it be their mouth, hands or eyes," Hollingsworth said.

With the fabric, the panel examined the appearance, feel and weight to determine whether it would be suitable for clothing.

They described the appearance of automobile paints by deciding if the paint was glossy, dull or sparkly, but color was never an issue.

The packaging of food has also been a project of the Sensory Analysis Center. They tasted different boxed foods to see if the cardboard or plastic packaging soaked into the food.

Hollingsworth explained that in a typical situation, they have orientation of the product during the first week of the project. For example, this week the panel was introduced to the pizza product, and the company only gives information out on a need-to-know basis.

Within the week, they establish references making sure everyone is in unanimous agreement with the definitions they create.

For instance, the popcorn panel picked words like corny, grainy, musty and dusty to describe the taste of popcorn. Then they determine the intensity of each taste on a rating scale. This part can be done in a group or individually and is very time-consuming.

At this time, the panel leader must unify the consensus, Hollingsworth said. Barbara Sanner, panelist, said being a panel leader requires extra time and special skills because sometimes getting everyone to agree can be a great challenge.

After they complete researching and formulating data, they make a detailed report of their conclusions.

Sanner said this job affects many things she does, including when she goes to eat in restaurants, when she is invited to dinner parties. She said even her family has acquired techniques of critiquing her own food.

The history of the center dates back to 1982 when the first grant was given. The original group was trained for six months in the spring of 1982, Chambers said.

By the fall of 1983, they worked on their first project — carbonated soda. This was their longest project in that it lasted for several years.

Most of the panelists have been here since for at least six to seven years, but additional members were added in 1988, making all the panelists active at the center for at least two years.

There are many known consumer taste tests, but this self-supporting group has built their reputation on word-of-mouth for being one of the only professional sensory panels in the nation.

Edgar Chambers, associate professor in foods and nutrition and center director, said the center funds graduate students and gives them internship experience.

In turn, the College of Human Ecology grants the students use of the facilities and equipment in Justin Hall.

Heisserer said this project is helping her with her thesis and also helping to finance graduate school.

A sensory class in descriptive analysis offered at K-State comes to observe this panel to get a feel of what they will be expected to do in their class so they see what they are learning about in action, Hollingsworth said.

TOP: Kay Robinson, panel leader for a pizza-tasting panel, bites into a cracker during an evaluation of pizza crust in the Sensory Analysis Lab in Justin Hall. The panel used crackers as references to rate the crunchiness of the pizza crust. ABOVE: Jeri Stoneking, panel leader for the popcorn panel, sniffs a sample of microwave popcorn in order to determine the characteristics of the popcorn. The panel taste tested 20 different brands.

LEFT: The pizza panel's goal is to determine the ingredients that make the best-tasting pizza. All panelists have been trained in different ways to describe tastes that are found in foods. ABOVE: Corn cobs and husks were just two of the many references used by the popcorn panel in determining the best microwave popcorn. Corn flake cereal and different brands of flour were also used by the panel.

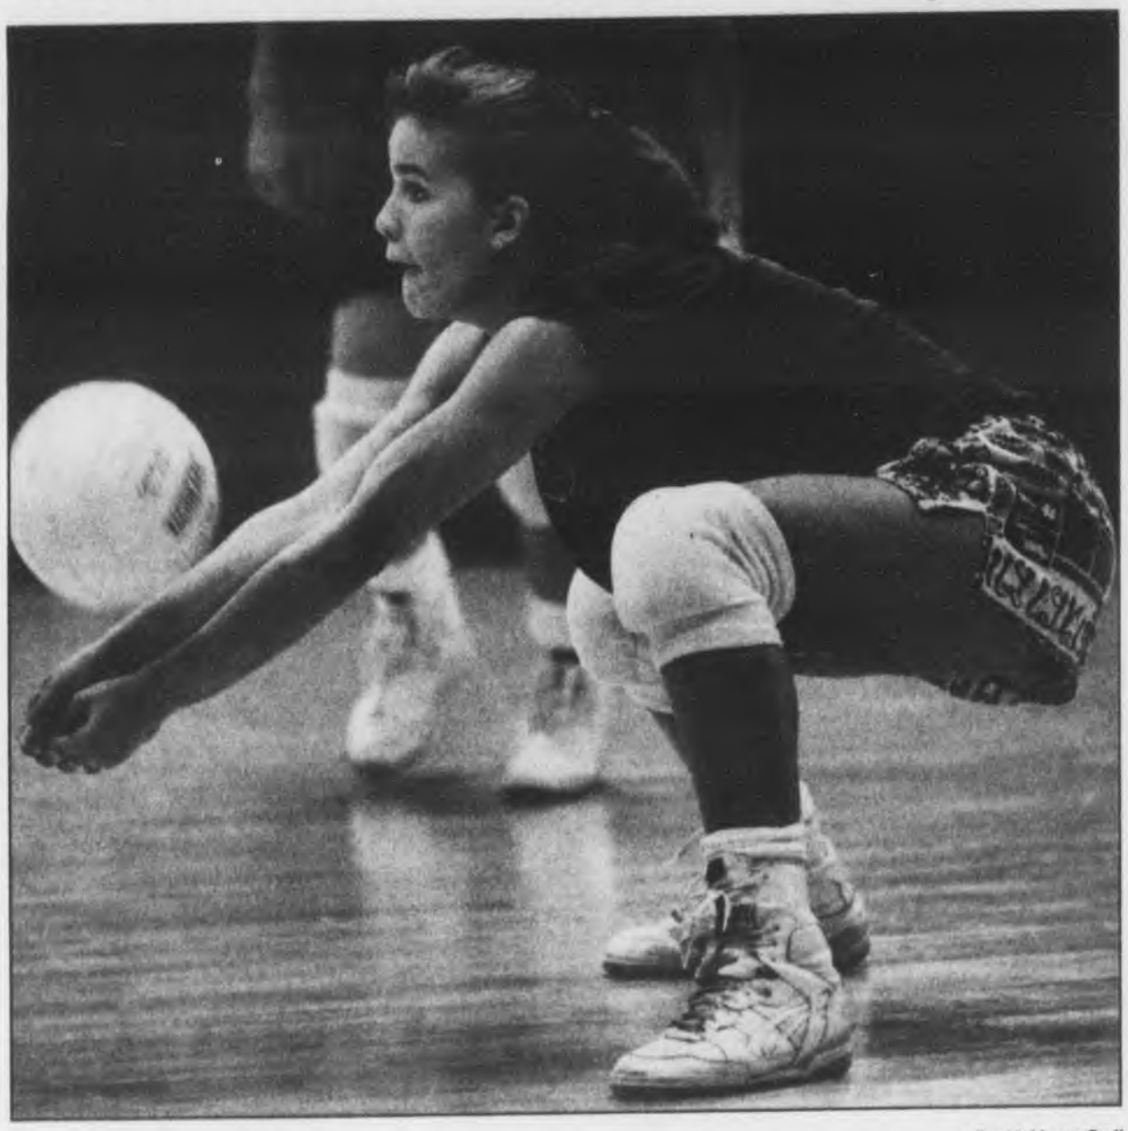
Volleyball squad to face Sooners in first conference match of year

By Russ Ewy
Sports Reporter

The K-State volleyball squad will return to Ahearn Field House tonight to face the Oklahoma Sooners in the Big Eight Conference opener at 7:30.

The spikers enter the match 4-4, coming off a loss to Wichita State Tuesday night. Oklahoma, 4-7 on the year, got two of those wins last weekend when they took second at their own Gym Corp Oklahoma Tournament.

Coach Scott Nelson sees the start of conference action as a chance to implement the experience gained in early season matches.



"I think we're looking forward to playing Oklahoma and starting the Big Eight season," Nelson said. "The first part of the season was just to test ourselves, to see what we need to improve on and see how we stack up against some pretty good teams."

The Sooners returned only two starters off their 1989 squad and lost a total of six letterwinners. Oklahoma, however, has been getting big things from outside hitter Emilie Henry, who received Big Eight Player-of-the-Week honors and is hitting .298.

"Oklahoma traditionally finishes high in the Big Eight," Nelson said. "It is not unusual for an Oklahoma team to show a lot of losses early in the year and get on a pretty good roll once the Big Eight starts.

"There are a very big, physical team, so size-wise, we probably don't match up well. So obviously, they will be wanting to control the match along the net with their hit-

The guns will be pointed to the sky Saturday when K-State pits its passing offense against New Mexico's in the final non-conference game of the season at 6:30 p.m. in KSU Stadium.

The 'Cats are now 2-1, after falling to a late fourth-quarter comeback by Northern Illinois last weekend, a loss that Coach Bill Snyder hopes to brush aside.

"I don't think it was such a devastating loss that it really put your program behind whatever your time-table might be," Snyder said. "I look at it right now as one of those games that was a gut-wrenching loss, one that hurts a great deal emotionally to myself, our staff and our players.

"Yet, there are some things there that allow you to have some optimism for the future and not feel as though we've been set back."

New Mexico, 1-3, will be trying to halt a three-game skid, coming off its own last-minute loss to Texas Tech, 34-32, last week.

"I think New Mexico is an extremely fine football team," Snyder said. "They have tremendously fine talent in a lot of areas. They may not quite have the depth that a lot of the teams that they have played have, and I think maybe that leads to the fact that they have not been quite as successful as they would like to be in terms of wins or losses."

The visiting Lobos will come packing one of the best passing combinations in the Western Athletic Conference. Quarterback Jeremy Leach and wide receiver Eric Morgan have made up the bulk of the team's 312 yards passing per game average.

Leach currently ranks second in the WAC and sixth in the country in total offense, compliling 279.8 yards a game, and is just behind BYU's Ty Detmer on the WAC's active career passing chart.

"They like to throw the ball short, but that doesn't mean they won't throw it long. (Jeremy Leach) can put it down field," Snyder said. "They like the short drop so they can get the ball off quickly to avoid as much pressure as they can. He's a youngster that is becoming very adept at not taking the sacks when he doesn't have to and can throw it in some pretty tight spots."

Morgan leads the WAC in receiving with 38 catches for 454 yards, and his 9.5 receptions a game and 113.5 yards a game nationally ranks him second and third, respectively.

"I know (they have) six youngsters that have been either selected as first-team all-WAC kids or have been projected as first-team all-WAC kids," Snyder said. "There are a lot of reasons for them to be optimistic about the progress they have made. They have just been unfortunate that they haven't won a number of those (closer games). I have great concern about this ball game."

The passing statisics, however, don't mean the Lobos won't run the ball, according to Snyder. Senior running back Andre Wooten, who sat out last season for academic reasons, is rushing for 70.8 of the Lobos 81.8 yards a game.

"We don't want to overlook the run," Snyder said. "They have Andre Wooten back, who was a starter two years ago and really has done some decent things. I believe that they're going to come in here with the idea that they can run the ball (on us)."

K-State enters the contest touting some impressive numbers of its own.

"I think our kids understand the system more and are much more secure with it," Snyder said. "Carl (Straw) has done, for the most part, a pretty nice job of keeping us out of bad plays. I think our backs understand the system a little bit better and that helps."

"I'm real pleased (with the way our offense has played)," Straw said. "I haven't had too many sacks. We're moving the ball up and down the field, and doing all the things an offense needs to do to put points up on the board. We're just doing everything right, right now."

As a team, the Wildcats are third in the Big Eight and 17th in the nation in total offense, averaging 455.3 yards a game.

K-State has the second-best passing offense in the conference, chalking up 274 yards a game.

Snyder will be looking to achieve a balanced attack on offense against the Lobos in order to control the game's tempo.

"Many times the happenings of a ballgame are going to dictate to us

Tennis squad to open '90 season

By Todd Fertig
Sports Reporter

Today's meet at Nebraska will provide the first exposure to college tennis for several members of this year's women's team. It will also provide the first opportunity for Coach Steve Bietau to see the talent he has called the best in the program's history.

Not one member of the team brings experience — no player was any higher than the fifth singles spot — into the Nebraska Women's Tennis Invitational.

"This match is going to be a learning experience for everybody," Bietau said. "We hope to see some of what we've been working on in practice stand out in matches. But there's no doubt that some things will become apparent in the match situation that we haven't seen in practice."

Although several members of the team have never seen action for K-State before, Bietau said he doesn't think that lack of experience will hold the team back. The two newcomers to the squad, No. 1 player Michelle Riniker and No. 5 player Neili Wilcox, bring extensive experience outside of NCAA competition.

"You can't just assume that a player will handle the pressure without any trouble, but Michelle has had a lot of competitive experience before, and Neili was a national champion in junior college. So they're not new to competition," Bietau said. "We have some returners who are probably a little more green than those two."

Riniker, a freshman from Switzerland, brings international experience to the team. She has been slowed by injuries the past week, but Bietau expects her to be ready this weekend.

Wilcox, who will team with Riniker at No. 1 doubles, helped Tyler (Texas) Community College win the junior-college national championship two years ago and was one of the top 12 junior college players in the nation last season, Bietau said.

In the No. 2 position will be the team's only senior, Thresa Burcham, who played at No. 5 last season. At No. 3 will be Suzanne Sim, another varsity returner. Angie Gover will play No. 4 singles and will join Burcham at No. 2 doubles. Playing No. 6 singles and No. 3 doubles with Sim is Tracy Parker.

Bietau said the Nebraska tournament adds extra singles flights to provide varsity meet experience to players not ranked in the top six of each team. Sophomore Claudia Patron will play in the No. 7 singles flight at the meet, Bietau said.

"Michelle has established herself as the No. 1 player on the team," Bietau said. "From there, the next four are all pretty even, and Tracy has closed the gap on them some.

"Everyone will be playing higher than they ever have," Bietau said. "That's going to present them a chance to play some better people."

Joining K-State at the two-day invitational will be Nebraska, Drake, Texas Tech, Baylor, Colorada, Wichita State and Minnesota.

"There's no one really outstanding team in the tournament, but also no weak teams in it," Bietau said. "It is just what we need at this point, a

The time has come to put a three-week training period to the test on the course.

The K-State cross country team will be returning from a layoff this weekend as it travels to Oklahoma for the Oklahoma State Jamboree Saturday.

According to Coach John Capriotti, the meet has increased considerably in size and strength of competition. Both the men's and women's competitions will sport fields of 12 teams.

"There are a lot more teams than I thought and real good competition on both sides," Capriotti said. "There are good individuals and good teams here. This is the strongest that I have ever seen this field at this meet. We are going to have our hands full on both sides."

Among the strong competition, Capriotti believes K-State will be striding with the top runners and expects a high finish from his squads after training hard through

Coach Russ Bunker's search for players to complement standouts Brett Vuillemin and Richard Laing will continue Sunday as the Wildcat golf team travels to the Mizuno Peach State Invitational in Greensboro, Ga.

It will be the second meet of the fall season for the 'Cats, who finished seventh at the U.C. Ferguson All-College Classic Tuesday in Oklahoma City, Okla. Bunker left Vuillemin and Laing at home to evaluate his lower players, but will take the pair to the three-day, 54-hole event.

Georgia State is playing host to the tournament.

"We're still doing a lot of mixing and matching right now in hopes of finding the right combination," Bunker said. "Hopefully, we'll have three guys who will step forward so we won't have to go through qualifying rounds each week. But we're still at a position where we need to give all these guys a chance."

Junior college transfer Bill Graham won a five-man qualifying playoff for one of the final three spots in Sunday's tournament. The Danville,

Not going to game? Here's why you should

David Svoboda
SPORTS EDITOR

Thinking about going to the K-State football game Saturday night?

Need a reason?

Well, look no further. I've got 40 good ones for you right here.

With apologies to David Letterman, and with sincere thanks to Letterman's staff and some of my fraternity brothers, here goes nothing.

The top 40 reasons you should attend K-State's game against New Mexico are:

40. K-State won its last home game.

39. K-State won its last home game in which it wore white jerseys.

38. K-State won its last home night game.

37. K-State is 1-0 this year against teams from New Mexico.

36. It's true — 42,000 fans are louder than 22,000.

35. There's neat new sod on the hill by the football complex addition.

34. Someone needs to ring the victory bell by the locker-room when we win.

33. Tailgate parties — even without alcohol — are a blast.

32. You might get your picture in the Collegian.

31. You'll see if the goalposts stay standing after yet another home win.

30. It's better than staying home and watching "Hee Haw."

29. Because the financial aid office is closed on Saturdays.

28. You need something to do between watching "NWA Wrestling" and "Star Trek: The Next Generation."

27. Standing up to cheer is good exercise.

26. If K-State scores a lot of points in a third-consecutive home game, the KSU Stadium scoreboard might explode.

25. It gives you a chance to wear all the purple items in your wardrobe.

24. You might get to see me coming out of the press box.

23. If you don't come, we'll win for sure.

22. It's Band Night, and that means noise, noise, noise.

21. KU plays Oklahoma earlier in the day, and you'll be able to cheer wildly when the score is announced.

20. It'll be harder to get a ticket next week with all of those Nebraska fans in town.

19. Not everyone in Kansas can go to Octoberfest in Hays.

18. You might need something to do after watching drag races at Heartland Park.

17. You might get in a plastic cup fight.

16. Aggieville will still be there after the game.

15. When you aren't at the game, your friends are making fun of you.

14. You can sit there naked, we just don't care.

13. An empty stadium seat is a lonely stadium seat.

12. The wall is down. Noriega is out. Don't stop us now.

11. The student section is a good place to find a date — especially at a night game.

10. Even if it rains, a garbage bag with a hole in it makes a great raincoat.

9. There are no stupid commercials for hygiene products (i.e. tampons, jock-itch spray) when you're watching a live game.

8. The Wabash Cannonball has a great beat, and you can dance to it ... I'll give it a 75, Dick.

7. The last time K-State won three games in a season, Ronald Reagan was president and some guy named Bush had only counted 376 points of light.

6. The "Cat Pack" of players leaving the field after the game might start a battle royal with the opposing team.

5. Campus cops need a real job every now and then, to make up for the time they spend picking up heinous criminals caught exiting the Union parking lot the wrong way.

4. This might be the game debris from the touchdown cannon takes out the opposing mascot.

3. There are only 87 days until Christmas.

2. Through a chain of events too complicated to explain, if attendance falls again, Little Snuggles, the fabric softener bear, will die.

And finally ... drumroll please ... the No. 1 reason:

1. To keep campus and athletic department executives knee deep in hookers and gin.

With tongue removed from cheek, I hope no one has taken offense to any of these reasons for going to the game. The only reason you need is fairly obvious: this is your school, your team, and you are needed to make this thing work.

Just go.

UPC travels to see history

Sixteenth century England is the destination of Union Program Council Travel Committee's first trip this year.

The Kansas City Renaissance Festival is supposed to be one of the most impressive festivals of its kind in the country, said Stan Winter, Union Program Adviser.

"I went to the festival about two years ago," Winter said. "I had heard it was really fun and expected to have a good time, but it really surprised me. It's very impressive in many ways."

The festival runs for seven consecutive weekends, each exploring a specific area of the Renaissance era in England. Entertainment ranges from magicians, jousting knights, and sorcerers to master artisans, cooks and musicians.

"The whole thing is very authentic," Winter said. "If you have never been to something like this you may want to know that many of the people that are just attending the festival dress up in costumes and walk around speaking with British accents.

The final weekend features a fashion show and costume contest open to anyone at the festival.

"There is no sign of electricity anywhere. It's a community effort. Children push the rides and all of the crafts are hand-made right in front of you," he said.

Winter said the festival's land area has been substantially increased since last year. Promotional material mentions a newly expanded Children's Realm.

Tammy Shearer, committee member and sophomore in accounting, said she had never been to this particular festival, but had been to one in Denver.

"When the idea for the festival came to the committee last year, several people had already been to one and had great things to say about it, so we decided to make it one of our trips," Shearer said.

Shearer said the list for the trip filled up quickly, and that some people were still on a waiting list.

Run for funds

By Tammy Rose
Collegian Reporter

Some people love music so much they're willing to sweat for it.

More than 350 students will compete in the 10th annual Music Run Sunday at the R.V. Christian Track. The event begins at 2 p.m. and will last an hour.

The music department sponsors the run each year to raise money for equipment and trips, said Leroy Burke, run coordinator.

"I think our goal has always been, over the years, for students to raise money for themselves for trips," Burke said. "Since the University is unable to provide adequate funding, this is a way for us to earn money and it works."

Stanley Finck, K-State band director, said each student that participates will earn money by collecting pledges. Pledges will go to the department area that the runner is in.

The total amount of money raised will depend on how many laps each participant completes in an hour. During the run, a disc jockey will play music to keep the runners motivated.

Finck stressed the importance of creative fund-raising events like the run.

"The marching band's budget is such that it would mean no travel, which is important to our recruitment and retention," Finck said. "It is crucial to our survival."

The run will raise money to fund a K-State choir trip to the Netherlands over spring break, said Rod Walker, professor of music and choral director.

Walker said fund-raising events are important because money is tight and the University does not fund the touring choir.

"It's a big benefit when we are able to raise funds that we can't pay out of restricted fees. It keeps the organization interesting," Walker said.

Char Hoppe, senior in music education, said she enjoys participating in the run because the end result is well worth it.

"Most students don't get the opportunities — such as going to the Netherlands — as we do, so I feel very lucky," Hoppe said.

Astronaut visits campus, discusses upcoming flight

By Candace Plett
Collegian Reporter

International cooperation is important for space exploration, said NASA astronaut N. Jan Davis.

Davis spent several months in Japan training for her first flight, scheduled for late 1991. The flight will be a joint lab mission with Japan.

"Space travel is very expensive, and this way we can all share the costs and benefits," she said.

Davis was on campus Wednesday and Thursday to conduct a public forum. Thursday, she presented a luncheon address on upcoming space experiments and NASA's laboratory aboard the space shuttle.

She said one aim of the space mission will be research on gravity's role in biological development.

Tissues from chicken embryos taken on the flight will be studied by Gary Conrad, biology researcher. He said they will be compared with embryos not taken in space to study effects of gravitation on developing tissue.

Davis said space research also results in new materials and aids national security.

"NASA is pushing research to the point of developing things that benefit us every day," she said.

Davis worked as a NASA space engineer for eight years, helping design the Hubble space telescope now in orbit and redesigning the Challenger space shuttle. Her work has earned her awards as the 1986 NASA Woman in Science and Engineering and the 1987 Young Engineer of the Year by the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics.

"I'm given a lot of responsibility," Davis said. "It's a challenge, and it's something I really believe in."

During her two-day visit, Davis met with many engineering students, including a question-and-answer session with K-State's design team.

"NASA designs life-support systems for space travel, but we try to come up with ways to make them automated so astronauts don't have to monitor so much information," said Nathan Hemman, graduate student in mechanical engineering and one of two team advisers.

their layoff.

"The intensity level is up, and our training has gone really well in the last three weeks since we raced, and everybody seems to be healthy," he said. "I just want us to go there and have each individual run well and see where that puts us."

On the women's side, Capriotti feels there will be a more deeper or balanced attack. Big Eight foes Oklahoma and Oklahoma State will both present strong competition, as will Arkansas and Baylor.

"Oklahoma and Oklahoma State have always been good in our conference. They (Oklahoma State) were fifth in the NCAA meet last year, and Oklahoma has improved by bringing in a couple of foriegn runners," Capriotti said. "Then there is Baylor, who went to the NCAA meet last year, and a much improved Arkansas team."

K-State will be led by juniors Janet Haskin and Janet Treiber, who placed first and third for the team at the Wichita State Invitational. They will be followed by five runners that Capriotti believes could finish in any order. They are Paulette Staats, Amy Marx, Jennifer Hillier, Janet Magner and Laurie Davidson.

"We really need this race to find out where we are. They have all really trained well," Capriotti said. "Haskin and Treiber are going to be in there, and it could be any one of the next four or five runners."

The men's side will be stacked as well, with the main competition coming from the same opponents the women will face. However, the men have a chance to go up against one of the top rated teams in the nation — Arkansas.

"Arkansas is ranked No. 2 in the nation right now, so they will obviously be a formidable opponent," Capriotti said. "The women's race is deeper, but Arkansas has a shot at winning the NCAA meet, so we'll see the best team in the country probably this weekend."

At the Wichita State Invitational, the men sported four strong runners and had a drop in 13 places before their final scorer. Capriotti said this is an area that he is hoping to close with Jason Goertzen, Pat Goebel and Kevin Lashley as the season progresses.

"They are coming right now, and that is what I really hope to see this weekend — how those back three guys are coming up," Capriotti said. "If we want to make it to the national meet and be in the top three in the Big Eight, then that back group is going to have to make a move."

Football

which we're going to have to do (pass or run)," Snyder said. "All things being equal, in a relatively close ballgame, I think we can achieve that balance (of the run and pass).

"Taking the New Mexico State ballgame, in the latter part you would run the ball a lot than throwing it for obvious reasons," he said. "I think in ball games where it's relatively tight I think we've achieved the balance that we're looking for."

The 'Cats have outscored their opponents 49-0 in the first quarter, and 21-8 in the third, but have found it difficult to finish strong. K-State has given up 34 points and only scored nine in the final period — one of Snyder's big concerns.

"You have to be to play the game from ahead or behind. You have to understand that momentum changes in a football game," Snyder said. "If we're behind, we have to work hard to change the momentum, and if we're ahead we have to work hard to retain the momentum.

"I think it's a tremendous advantage to get in front in the ball game. Then you have the opportunity to either deliver the knockout punch or try to hang on for dear life. We have not proven to be the kind of football team, consistently, that could jump out in front, keep the pressure on, and deliver the knockout punch. We certainly didn't in this last ball game. Nevertheless, we had some opportunities, I thought, in the third quarter (of the Northern Illinois game) where we might have been able to put the ball game away but didn't do it."

Mew Mexico's lone win came over New Mexico State, 29-12, on September 1 — two weeks before the 'Cats dismantled the Aggies 52-7. Snyder, however, said he wasn't too comforted by the fact.

"(Sharing a common opponent) may be a bad sign, more than anything else," he said. "It may tell New Mexico that this is maybe a team you have to pay some attention to."

Ill., native fired a 1-under par 69 Wednesday at Manhattan Country Club, and clinched the No. 3 position with a 74 in Thursday's second round of the 36-hole qualifying event.

"Bill had a super round Wednesday," Bunker said. "He's finally starting to come around like we thought he would."

Freshman Will Seibert, who was K-State's top finisher at Oklahoma City, and junior Greg Roberts also qualified. Seibert had rounds of 76 and 70, while Roberts carded back-to-back 76s. Roberts defeated junior Chris Thompson by one stroke, winning on the final hole.

Big Eight foe Nebraska won the Peach State Invitational last year, edging UNC-Charlotte. Both teams return for Sunday's meet, which will be played at Port Armor Country Club in Greensboro.

"With those teams competing, I know it will be a good field," Bunker said. "It's going to be a real treat for the kids because they'll get to play an outstanding golf course."

ting and blocking."

Nelson is looking for better concentration from his squad, as well as continued performances from setter Alison Murphy and outside hitter Julie James. James is averaging 3.87 kills per game, good for second in the Big Eight, and Murphy ranks third in the conference in assists with 9.61 per game.

"Basically (we want to work on) execution in our different areas," Nelson said. "Obviously, we're going to need a good defensive effort when you go up against a team of taller, bigger players. We are going to need to be improved defensively, as well as getting back on track with running our offense.

"(We need) to stay focused — not doing a lot of changing of strategy, but trying to execute our offense and defense at a little higher level."

chance to play a lot of matches against pretty even competition."

Bietau said after weeks of practice, the team is anxious to play in a meet. He said, however, that more development will come from the experience that is necessary to compete.

"Mental endurance will be a factor in this first meet," Bietau said. "Every one of these girls can go out and play great tennis for 15 minutes, and some can go longer, but that concentration for an entire match won't come right away.

"But that's natural because of a lack of consistent competition," Bietau said. "We've been concentrating on conditioning and not on head-to-head competition because we'll get that as more matches come up."

turn anybody away without some kind of answer."

Linda Barrett, the director of a rural counseling agency in Kirksville, Mo., said our identity in this society is "we are what we do," and people accept that, sometimes without thinking about it.

"In reality, our self esteem is more than that one dimension," Barrett said. "Sometimes we are doing something that we hate just to survive, but that doesn't necessarily reflect who we are."

Barrett said the conference has broadened her knowledge about the information and resources available to people in this field.

"It feels very lonely out there, and there has been so little offered (assistance). This conference has made me realize how many people are out there and caring about the homeless," Barrett said.

Linder warned against stereotyping the homeless. She said the typical picture one could get when thinking about the homeless is a wino stumbling down the street, somebody who just got off the last box-car or a chronically lazy person who just doesn't want to work.

"It could be you, someone you know or your neighbor," Cox said.

Linder offered these three things to think about:

- Every 53 minutes in America a child dies because of poverty.
- Every 47 seconds an American child is abused or neglected.
- Every 67 seconds an American teen-ager has a baby.

Hispanic students said they asked the bartenders to take the signs down, but the bartenders said they couldn't because they would lose their jobs.

A police officer also testified in the complaint that the manager, Rich Kriftewirth, seemed displeased that Hispanics were present.

Kriftewirth testified in the complaint that he did not realize the significance of San Juan Day. He said he was mad at the students for having an unauthorized party at the establishment.

He also stated other customers were complaining about the reggae music played that night.

"It's the wrong way to look at it," he said. "Once something like incest happens, it has already occurred. Education can't stop that. She's failing to be specific."

Earlier Thursday at a meeting with the Kansas Center for Rural Initiatives in Durland Hall, Beth Tatarko, research assistant for the Division of Continuing Education, asked Finney about her comment on incest cases of abortion.

Finney said she believes if a woman has financial independence from her spouse, then she will be able to leave the home if her children are threatened.

"If women had economic independence, then they'll be able to say 'Don't do that to my little boy or girl,'" Finney said. "They can say 'I'm going to leave. I'm going to quit.'

"We need to give women the courage and support to pull out or threaten to pull out," she said.

Tatarko said she thought Finney's answer was incomplete. She said she hates to see a problem like incest to be put in such simple terms.

control/I'm giving in to the temptation/I've lost control, I don't know what to do/I'd sell my soul if I could stay with you."

Touching.

So does Firehouse have even slightly more intelligent lyrics to offer on the remaining three songs? Judge for yourself with "Rock on the Radio:"

"Like thunder, like dynamite/Ya know I'm gonna blow my speakers up tonight/I'm ready, going all the way/'Cause rock on the radio is here to stay."

So these guys can't write, and they can't sing. Can they play their instruments? Not really.

Leverty makes a gallant effort on the instrumental, "Seasons of Change." However, it takes more than the ability to play 250 notes in 10 seconds to be Eddie Van Halen.

Bass player Perry Richardson and drummer Michael Foster are equally mediocre.

At first, I thought the only group Firehouse could possibly appeal to was early-adolescent males. But I have a brother who is 14, and he's much too intelligent for these guys.

At the end of the liner notes, Firehouse urges its "fans everywhere to FLAME ON!" They put it in all caps, not me.

Instead, I think what Firehouse needs is a good hosing-down with some cold water.

not nearly as enthusiastic about American military involvement in the Middle East as they initially were.

"Continued American involvement has left the Arab world paralyzed. They are concerned and fearful that a major outside power may set up camp and stay," Suleiman said.

He said he feels the United Nations should be the agency to lead any kind of official position and military effort, not the United States or other world powers.

"If it comes to war, at least let it be a United Nations effort," Suleiman said.

"When we have tours around the county, the school district supplies buses and drivers so we don't have to worry about insurance or the expense to rent an over-the-road bus."

Area businesses also need to be willing to work hard to restore a communities historical value, Palmer said. The buildings on the main street of a small town were curmbling down, and the merchants decided to restore them. They used their own money with no help from the government. Now people want to go there to see the buildings.

In the community, a local tourism committee organizes events, tours and brochures, she said. The committee also has slide shows for those who can't go on the tour in person. The slides are available for many groups which promotes the community beyond those who are able to tour in person.

THE RIDE

made possible through the fine arts fee

The department of art will organize a series of trips to art museums throughout the current academic year. The student fine arts fee assessed at registration will subsidize the cost of the travel. Please take advantage of this wonderful opportunity to view exciting exhibits and collections in the region. Keep an eye on The Collegian for activities associated with THE RIDE.

The first trip will be to see an outstanding collection of drawings at the Salina Art Center, Salina, Kansas and to visit Lucas, Kansas to see the Garden of Eden (listed on the National registry of Historic Places). The collection of drawings at the Salina Art Center is entitled Training The Hand and The Eye: American Drawings from the Cooper-Hewett Museum. The exhibit includes exploratory drawings, and works in progress by 34 American artists including Winslow Homer, Frederic Church, Thomas Moran, and William Chase. The Garden of Eden was created by S.L. Dinsmoor, an eccentric Kansan. He built a home of native limestone and in the yard surrounding the house he created a concrete wonder that defies description. The first Ride will leave the K-State Union at 8:15 a.m. on Friday, October 5, 1990. Reservations are required.

Contact the Department of Art 532-6605, or stop by room 105 in the Art Building for information or to reserve your seat. Make your reservations by the end of the day on Monday, October 1st.

The cost of the trip will be eight dollars per person, includes bus transportation and entry fees.

Budget plan released

Payroll withholding increases, luxuries taxed

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration and congressional bargainers announced Sunday that they had forged a package of tax increases and spending cuts designed to make a five-year, $500 billion dent in the federal deficit.

The pact, announced by Bush in the Rose Garden at mid-afternoon, will avoid a chaotic disruption in federal programs that would have begun at midnight.

Bush appeared with top congressional leaders at his side, and said, "I do not welcome" the tax increases, but deemed them necessary.

Bush said the terms of the budget plan would serve to stimulate economic growth and lessen the nation's dependence on overseas oil.

The higher taxes included an increase in the federal gas tax of eight cents a gallon, a boost in payroll withholding taxes and a new tax on the sale of luxury items.

"The bipartisan congressional leadership and I have pledged our very best to get this plan passed into law by Oct. 19," Bush said in ending the budget-summit negotiations that began last May.

He acknowledged that some in Congress would likely oppose the budget pact, with its tough program-spending cuts and tax increases.

"Sometimes you don't get just what you want," Bush said, declaring compromises were necessary "to get this deficit under control."

House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash, said, "It's not going to be easy to obtain the votes," and Senate Democratic leader George Mitchell added, "Now comes the hard part."

The 1991 fiscal year was beginning at midnight and the House and the Senate convened a rare Sunday session for a down-to-the-wire vote that would skirt $85 billion in crisis budget cuts.

Democrats had to accept cuts in benefit programs, and Republicans had to swallow tax increases. The package boosts taxes on gasoline and all forms of energy, increases the bill the elderly and disabled will pay for Medicare coverage, and takes a deep bite out of the Pentagon budget.

"This will be seen as sufficient pain, I think," Foley said.

Overall, about $130 billion of the savings would come from new taxes and fees, $170 billion from defense cuts and $120 billion from reductions in benefit programs like Medicare. The rest would come from reduced debt payments.

Negotiators, dickering since May, hammered out final details at an afternoon White House session with President Bush, who interrupted weekend business at the United Nations in New York to dash back to Washington.

The two sides also agreed to drop another idea that made Democrats and Republicans alike nervous: exacting savings from the nation's 33 million Social Security recipients.

Dole confirmed that proposals to increase taxes on Social Security benefits or to restrain the growth of those benefits both fell by the wayside, victim to both parties' fears of angry and notoriously well-organized elderly voters.

With no agreement, federal spending would automatically be slashed by $85 billion Monday, enough to force many of the government's 2.1 million civilian workers to face unpaid days off and the public to deal with curtailed services.

Included in the furloughs were air-traffic controllers, workers who process Social Security checks and FBI agents.

Exempt from the cutbacks were soldiers, Social Security benefits and many programs that help the poor and veterans. The thousands of programs subject to reductions would see their budgets slashed by about one-third.

City businesses to prosper

Renovations, mall to increase profits

By Susan Boos
Collegian Reporter

As the Manhattan Town Center enters its third year, it is projecting big profits. The rest of Manhattan's business community is also ready to profit from the Town Center.

When the mall opened, businesses were skeptical about how 60 new businesses would affect their customers' shopping habits. While many businesses experienced a decline in sales with the mall opening, business has since stabilized and, in some cases, has grown.

"When the mall first opened, our business dropped a little bit, but I knew customers would eventually come back," said Bryan Taylor, manager of the Palace in Aggieville.

And the customers did come back. Taylor said business at the Palace is up about 10 percent.

"I'd like to think that the increase is due to the renovation, but I don't know that for sure," Taylor said.

The Aggieville renovation, which is expected to be completed Oct. 1, cost $1.95 million and was paid for by Aggieville merchants and the city of Manhattan. Taylor said the renovation was needed to upgrade the area and to compete more aggressively with other Manhattan businesses.

Cheryl Sieben, Aggieville Business Association executive director, said the renovation project is attracting a lot of people to Aggieville.

"The renovations have definitely improved Aggieville aesthetically," Sieben said. "But there also seems to be a new attitude around here."

Aggieville is not the only area in Manhattan to implement an improvement project. The Manhattan Main Street Project was established five years ago to revitalize Downtown.

"We were a catalyst between Downtown and mall developers," said Kim Brecheisen, of the Manhattan Main Street Project. "We do a lot of marketing for Downtown,"

■ See related story, Page 5

When the mall opened, the downtown area was the most affected, but Brecheisen said they will be the ones who will benefit most from the mall in the long run.

"Seven businesses from Downtown relocated in the mall when it opened," Brecheisen said. "This causes a lot of anxiety. We had vacancies for a long time."

The Dollar General will occupy one of those vacancies when it opens in the J.C. Penney's building in October. The Penney's building was

Lafene adopts new policy for emergencies

Doctors say to call 911 as initial step

By Shannon Heim
Collegian Reporter

Lafene Health Center has developed a new system to ensure care will be provided in the event of an emergency on campus.

Lannie Zweimiller, Lafene director, said he still suggests, however, calling 911 as the first step in obtaining emergency help.

An individual who comes into Lafene seeking help in an emergency will immediately be directed to the treatment room where a nurse will take charge of the situation, Zweimiller said.

The nurse will ask if the individual has contacted 911. Whether or not the individual has called, the nurse will also call 911, he said.

"We advise anyone to call 911 in an emergency because we still think the best medical response is an ambulance," Zweimiller said. "We don't have staff on stand-by with equipment because we're not set up to respond outside the center."

Larry Moeller, Lafene chief of staff, said that 911 should always be the first call and that Lafene should be a backup.

"Certainly I can understand the student's expectations in an emergency, but that's why communities have a 911 emergency system," Moeller said. "If we didn't have 911, we'd have to rethink the situation."

Moeller said he has responded to campus emergencies in the past.

"Usually by the time I got there, the person had recovered (from a fainting spell) or an ambulance had already arrived," he said.

Zweimiller said setting up a campus ambulance service would not be feasible because the community already provides an adequate service.

An emergency care unit requires special equipment as well as a staff specifically trained in responding to traumas, Zweimiller said.

"We would have to set up to be prepared with equipment and personnel trained for emergency situations. The cost would cause student-health fees to increase tremendously," he said.

Zweimiller said 75 percent of Lafene's funding comes from student-health fees, currently $80 per semester.

The fee was increased in the fall of 1989 to help stabilize Lafene's financial situation, he said.

"It (the increase) got us in good shape, and we'll keep providing services," Zweimiller said. "We do not foresee any increase for two to three years."

In an effort to communicate with students, Lafene staff members work with the Student Health Advisory Committee. Also, students are asked to complete patient satisfaction forms, Zweimiller said.

"We can't be everything to everybody, but we want to meet the needs of more people," he said.

African month concludes; future activities uncertain

AFRICAN AWARENESS MONTH

By The Collegian Staff

After a month of panels, speakers, films and radio shows, African Awareness Month, which began Sept. 6, concluded Saturday with an 8 p.m. party in the K-State Union Ballroom.

"We wanted to exhibit and share with K-State, Manhattan and regional communities some of the rich and diversified cultures of the African people," said Neba Mike, chairman of the planning committee for African Awareness Month.

Mike said the other objective of African Awareness Month is "to look at Africa's past, estimate the present and plan for the future."

African Awareness Month began with speaker Victor Toko, executive secretary from the Organization of African Unity. Toko spoke about OAU's role as an instrument of peace and development in Africa, Mike said.

Information about Africa was provided in many ways, including an African art display, a presentation of traditional African songs and dances, several panel discussions and radio programs on KSDB-FM.

The movie, "A Place of Weeping," was shown. It is based on a true story of the frustration of blacks as workers in South Africa, Mike said.

Gaspard Nderagakura, president of the African Student Union, spoke about the effects of international dependency on African economic developments. There was also a slide presentation, "Development and Impact of African Art on Western Art," during the month.

"For some events it was really successful, for some other events, because they were during the week, people were busy," said Robert Guei, planning committee member.

Guei said the events drew people from Wichita, Kansas City and Lawrence.

"Even before the month ended we got a response from Theodore Roosevelt grade school," Mike said.

Guei said that Roosevelt's principal expressed interest in having African students teach African culture to the grade school students.

Despite what Mike termed a successful month, this may be the last year for African Awareness Month.

The African Student Union band performs Saturday night at the K-State Union Ballroom as part of the closing activities of African Awareness Month. The event was attended by more than 50 people.

U.S. fighter plane crashes

DHAHRAN, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Two U.S. Air Force pilots were killed Sunday when their F-15 fighter plane crashed during an exercise in Saudi Arabia, the U.S. military command said.

They were the first Air Force personnel reported killed in Saudi Arabia since the beginning of Operation Desert Shield nearly two months ago. Another F-16 crashed earlier but the pilot was not hurt.

The aircraft, assigned to the 4th Tactical Fighter Wing, was on what was described as a routine mission in the southern Saudi desert on Sunday morning, officers said.

The pilots' names were withheld pending notification of relatives. A board of inquiry was assigned to investigate.

Analysts say gulf war likely

LONDON (AP) — The likelihood of war in the Persian Gulf has grown significantly as sanctions and a hostile world push Saddam Hussein into a corner with no diplomatic escape, European and Israeli military analysts say.

But they say there is still a window for peace, before the effects of sanctions sink in further, and U.S.-led forces in Saudi Arabia become strong enough to consider launching a military operation to push Iraq out of Kuwait.

"I think another six to eight weeks is available to prevent a conflict, but after that it becomes almost inevitable," said Paul Beaver, publisher of Jane's Defense Weekly.

With the United Nations demanding an unconditional Iraqi withdrawal from Kuwait and Iraq reiterating almost daily that it will never leave, the analysts see little room for a negotiated solution.

Soviets restoring relations

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The Soviet Union and South Korea established full diplomatic relations Sunday in what was a major victory for the Seoul government and a devastating setback for Communist North Korea.

The Soviet Union has been a major ally and arms provider for North Korea.

Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze and his South Korean counterpart, Choi Ho-joong, signed an agreement establishing the ties, issued a joint communique and stood together in a U.N. corridor, smiling and answering questions.

"We have agreed to establish diplomatic relations between the Soviet Union and South Korea as of today," Choi later told a news conference.

He said both sides had agreed to an exchange of high-level visits, possibly by heads of state, but no date was set. He said a Soviet trade and economic delegation will visit Seoul next month to discuss broad economic cooperation.

Kansan rapist flees to Texas

VAN HORN, Texas (AP)— Authorities searched the West Texas mountains Sunday for a man wanted in three Kansas counties on rape and kidnapping charges.

Mitchell Thomas fled toward the mountains Saturday after authorities confronted him in a routine traffic stop near Van Horn, about 120 miles east of El Paso.

On Friday, an off-duty Kansas Bureau of Investigation agent found Thomas' car at a Wichita motel.

The 31-year-old Great Bend restaurant worker apparently asked someone to leave the car there. There was no indication Thomas actually was in Wichita, Reno County Attorney Tim Chambers said.

Budget woes hit universities

(AP) — State budget problems are leading to more crowded classes, fewer teachers and higher tuition at many public universities across the country this fall.

"We're in a situation that's deteriorating very rapidly," said Richard Novak, director of state education policy and finance of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities. "What's happening in Northeastern and Midwestern states is spreading. ... They are facing sharp cuts that will have untold impact on those institutions."

Schools in at least 15 states — most of them on the East Coast and Midwest where state financial problems are most severe — are operating on restricted budgets that have led to program cuts, more crowded classes and reductions in faculty positions.

The average around the country this fall was 7 percent, according to a College Board survey released last week. But officials believe that some campuses will tack on mid-year tuition surcharges if conditions worsen as expected.

Hayden narrows gap in poll

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Gov. Mike Hayden has moved to within four percentage points of Democratic challenger Joan Finney, according to a poll taken for a newspaper and two television stations.

The poll had a margin of error of 4 percent, meaning the two candidates were in a virtual tie.

The poll published Sunday by The Kansas City Star also indicated that 43 percent of the respondents disapprove of the job Hayden has done in four years in office and 42 percent approve. The poll was also taken for KMBC-TV in Kansas City and KAKE-TV in Wichita.

Hayden trailed Finney by 43 percent to 39 percent in the telephone survey of 500 registered voters conducted Sept. 21-23.

Eighteen percent were undecided.

Skills course teaches control

By Rob Batchman
Collegian Reporter

The number of single mothers and their children who live in poverty is increasing.

"Thirty-two and a half million Americans live at or below the poverty level," said Linda Thurston, associate professor of special education. "Ninety-five percent of these are women and young children. One out of every three female heads of households lives below the poverty level."

Thurston spoke Friday at the 10th Annual Working With Families Conference in the Union.

Thurston has developed a Survival Skills program, a skills training course designed to help low-income women gain self-confidence in themselves and to learn to achieve their goals. The program centers on developing self-esteem and a positive self-image.

"The program is a series of 10 workshops of three hours each with groups of about 12 to 15 women," she said.

The program teaches women basic skills and behaviors which lead them to take better control of their lives. Workshops involve such topics as assertiveness, money management, personal health and self-advocacy. The women work with support groups, adding to their learning.

■ See related story, Page 8

Thurston said the traditional intervention used to help women sometimes weakened the family structure.

"It can create a cycle of dependence rather than a cycle of independence. As women are helped, they don't learn the self-help skills they need to become independent," she said. "We thus have the family becoming more and more dependent."

The survival-skills program helps women to learn how to best use their income, how to get better jobs and how to take advantage of educational opportunities. The program is being offered around the country in both rural and urban areas.

"The program is offered through women's centers, community colleges, welfare agencies and employment and training centers," Thurston said.

Shirley Marshall, an employee for New Directions, The Single Parent and Displaced Homemaker Program on campus, said Thurston's program would help build the responsibility of single mothers.

"The kinds of women that she's working for are increasing. There are lots of women raising children alone," she said.

Rain fails to dampen on-field spirit; Band Day attracts 64 high schools

K-State Marching Band Director Stan Finck directs the high school band ensemble in its rendition of the "1812 Overture" from a cherry-picker above the field.

Collegian Reporter

Despite the shivering 58-degree weather and a steady mist, 3,500 students from 64 high schools participated in the annual K-State Band Day.

Plastic bags covered instruments as students clad in sweatpants and rain ponchos marched in the annual parade down Poyntz Avenue to begin the day.

Stan Finck, assistant professor of music and band director, said the parade was almost canceled.

"We waited until the last minute to decide to go ahead with the parade," Finck said. "We didn't want them to march in the pouring rain, but since it remained a fine mist, we decided to go ahead."

Not only did the rain make Band Day participants uncomfortable, but it also threatened the instruments.

"The rain was real problem for the woodwinds," Finck said. "There were 505 woodwinds, and that is a major expense when you consider all the pads you will have to replace on the instruments."

Because of wet weather, some schools chose not to participate in the parade.

"Schools had the option of marching in the parade or just skipping the parade and meeting everyone at practice, but only a few schools opted not to march in the parade," Finck said.

After the parade, participants were scheduled to practice on the football field from 3:30 to 5 p.m., but the practice was shortened due to the drizzling weather. When practice began at 4 p.m., the field came alive with color as the students shed their ponchos to show their school's uniforms.

Finck gave directions over the stadium's loud speaker to the participants as he stood on the sidelines 20 feet above the turf in a cherry-picker.

"OK, that was lousy; let's try it again," Finck said, his voice echoing through the stadium. "Snare drums, there are 202 of you, and you are too loud. This time play at my tempo."

Participants began "Cold Hearted" again. Pop star Paula Abdul's hit song took on a new dimension, but this time the group sounded together.

"Much better," Finck said. "Let's move on to the next song. Percussion, this time you watch or you die."

The group practiced "Wildcat Victory," "Cold Hearted," "Whole Lotta Shakin' Goin' On" and the "1812 Overture," which they would perform in a formation of the KSU

Museum siege more dangerous than photos

On April 7, the art scene turned into a crime scene. On that afternoon, police entered Cincinnati's Contemporary Arts Center and ordered it closed.

Seven photos out of an exhibit of 175 portraits were deemed obscene, and the curator and museum were accused of pandering obscenity and the misuse of a minor in pornography.

Last week, Dennis Barrie, the curator of the museum in question, went to court to defend himself and his actions. He didn't take the photographs. He didn't make anyone look at them. He displayed them in his museum.

The photographer, artist and responsible party was Robert Mapplethorpe. The exhibit was a retrospective of his work.

Some of the photos show flowers, others show naked people, some show people engaging in sexual acts, and others have arresting images of the naked human form.

Since the art museum siege, culture cops and morality missionaries have leveled attack after attack against the First Amendment, chipping away at fundamental American rights.

The warning signs are now appearing in record stores near you. Albums with questionable lyrics are beginning to carry the ominous black-and-white label cautioning parents its words may warp children.

From Mapplethorpe to 2 Live Crew, local, federal and state governments have taken an active hand in seeing to it that certain things aren't seen.

Even though the lyrics in 2 Live Crew's "As Nasty As They Wanna Be" could be called disgusting, abusive towards women, sick and obscene, should the artists be persecuted for it?

The music of 2 Live Crew may not appeal to all and certainly didn't until the controversy boosted the album's sales out of the cellar, but if they are offensive, shouldn't we fight for their right to be offensive?

Basically, American society from Washington to City Hall is controlled by a group of older, white, heterosexual males, and what they deem offensive is therefore offensive to us all. Their consequential racism and homophobia then penetrates all facets of our collective psyche and controls our thoughts.

"We are protecting you from evil," they say. "Trust us."

Evil. Evil as in artist. Evil as in music. Evil as in everywhere. Someone should be told it is better to see and understand evil than to have others tell us what is evil.

But that's not how it's becoming in the new America, an America in which the sight of a naked body is more horrible than the sight of police pushing people away from looking at a naked body.

There is something dark and evil ahead on the American highway, only we can't quite see it because no one will allow us to.

Identity realized by honesty

Kevin Zwink

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

We all play certain roles. If we assume complete responsibility as the decisive force for the roles we play, then we essentially should choose parts that genuinely reflect the kind of person we are. But many times we take on roles that are escapist by nature rather than being a sincere component of one's own true identity.

An extremely powerful human impulse is the desire for self-transcendence. We consciously or unconsciously attempt to overcome the boundaries of our own existence, those limits that are peculiar to human beings.

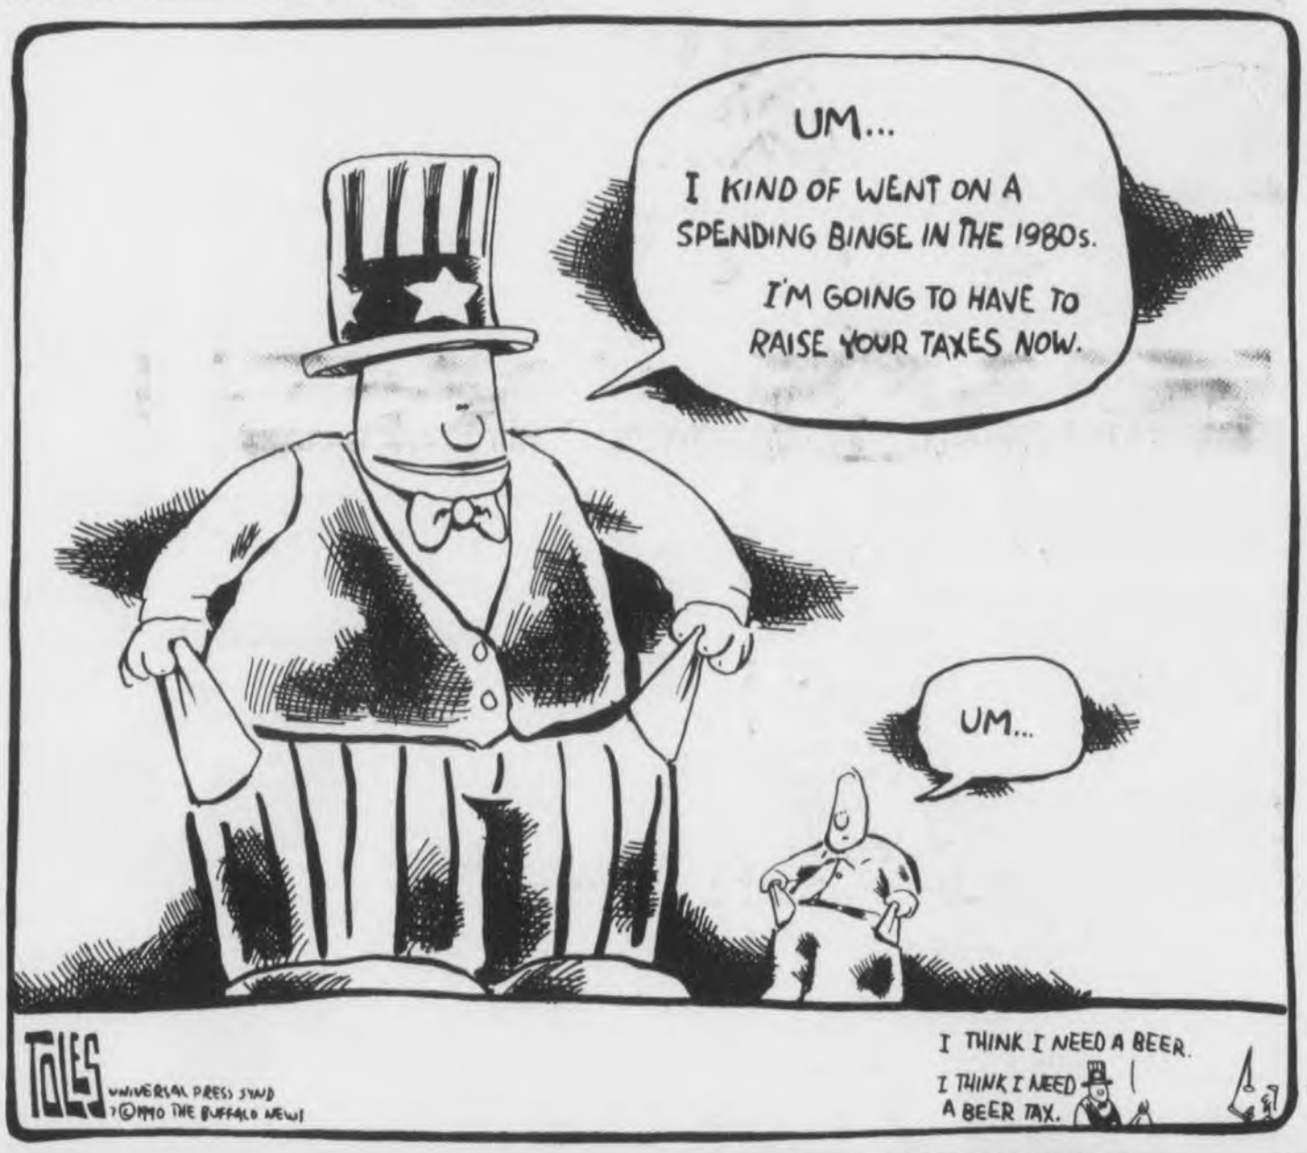
The ability to overcome who we are within the present can definitely be a means of accomplishing great and noble things. But sometimes our desire for self-transcendence, by the undertaking of certain roles, is motivated by the wish to escape from those things we dislike about ourselves. Some roles assumed are simply self-deceptive tools used to get away from who we really are, to avoid self-confrontation, and to preoccupy ourselves so as not to acknowledge our own self-disappointments. These roles can be a means of evading changes we actually feel are necessary.

Jean Paul Sartre would suggest that we flit back and forth between the facticity of our past and the transcendent possibility of our future. All the facts and truths about our past tell us what we are not in the present. All the possibilities of the future tell us also what we are not. We understand ourselves negatively. I mean that we understand who we are by what we are not. It is a little overwhelming to realize that we are not so many things and often, rather then accept it, we escape it.

Drug and alcohol abuse is the clearest example of roles assumed in order to escape from one's self. Alcohol or drugs become such a central issue and problem in the abuser's life that it is the only problem they deal with. Where and how to get it and the defensive stance taken that the drugs and alcohol are not the problem are the only topics the abuser deals with. It is a means for them to escape many of the real issues that plague their lives. They use the outlets of drink or drugs to forget who they are and to compensate for what they are not.

In addition to these blatant cases of lying to one's self, there are some roles of escape that are more subtle. Often we escape in jobs. Sometimes we pile ourselves up with so many things to do that we have no time to think about what we are not and what we actually wish we were. Then, of course, there are the couch potatoes who sit at home with nothing better to do than passively zone on a tube of soap operas or other mindless programs. It is a simple way for them to forget that they are doing nothing at all. They're learning to chew cud like the rest of the herd.

Relationships are the most common means of escape. One can get so preoccupied and distracted with all the different developments that they can avoid taking a good look at themselves.



Operating on a hope of a possible transcendence, they begin the initial dance steps of the relationship. The first phase is one of excitement and intrigue. Then the mutual dance ensues, each movement suggesting the promise of transcendence. As the promise becomes illusion, the dance falters. The phase of realness causes a stumble and disappointment in their dance. As they are forced to rescind their expectations of transcendence, they find themselves face-to-face with themselves in the dance-hall mirror.

One of two things happen. They either start the dance again and go through the same movements, or they choose a different partner who seems to offer better promise.

So often we are in search of another human soul to connect with, hoping it will take us beyond ourselves. The phases of relationships are circular. Sometimes the dance allows us to escape from the fact that maybe we are not where we would like to be.

So what is evident is that rather than acknowledge that we want to change ourselves, we escape through relationships, alcohol or drugs, or various other roles we play that do not reflect our true identity. Sometimes we simply can't deal with what life has to offer us. It scares us.

We must accept complete responsibility as the decisive force for the roles we play. If we wish to give an authentic style to our character, then we will choose the roles carefully and deliberately. We must acknowledge that the past is always going to inform us of what we are not and that the future is going to loom over us with endless possibilities. We can dance with our identity just as we like, or we can lie to ourselves. We can learn to chew cud, or we can fly.

LETTERS

Letter misinformed

Editor,

I have some sympathy for the only semblance of a decent point William Nathan Wright made in his Sept. 26 letter to the editor entitled "Editorial ignorant." He said it is not practical for military leaders to reveal battle plans to the media. The rest of his letter is another thing.

In the case that military action is taken as a last resort to defend against aggression, to protect innocents from harm, then it makes sense that military leaders might be justified in their secrecy. But military might is usually used for nefarious pursuits, for power-grabbing, defending the wealth of elites and the like.

As for Wright's criticism of freshmen for "prematurely exercising their right to express themselves" and of the Collegian's editors for printing letters from freshmen, I do not think Wright's letter reflects much of the maturity and learnedness he implies that he has. Concerns for space do not allow me to go into detail about the several parts of Wright's letter that are either grammatically flawed, ambiguous or logically problematic. Of course, Wright can always blame those deficiencies on the Collegian's editors' "all-out ignorance." It is also my silly and naive conviction, based on that silly and naive Bill of Rights, that both freshmen and the Collegian's editors can do without commissars to decide when they can exercise their right to express themselves "prematurely" or what they can print.

Wright claims that the U.S. and British attacks on Grenada, the Falklands and Panama were shown "play-by-play" by CNN and "covered ... in detail" by "reputable newspapers in this country." Well, if his definition of reputable includes left-wing newspapers like The Nation and The Guardian — which from his conservative stance, I doubt that it does — then yes, the ugliness and horror of those imperialist ventures were covered in detail. However, I don't recall CNN or any mainstream newspaper giving a "play-by-play" account of U.S. soldiers incinerating the bodies of Panamanian civilians, or burying them in mass graves in Stalinist fashion — hundreds of them — in order to minimize the appearance of their atrocities, which amounted to between 2,000 and 3,000 dead and tens of thousands left homeless.

Wright insults the deeply religious peoples of the Middle East by referring to their homelands as "the God-forsaken place." (Christian pop quiz: Where did Jesus live?) Not only are the traditional gods of these cultures very much present, the American god of wealth (which a number of obscenely rich Middle Easterners share) is obviously there as well, or else our leaders probably would not give a damn about one group of otherwise negligible people.

Wright says, "No American wants a war in the Middle East." Does that sophisticated blanket assumption include the U.S. soldiers bound for Saudi Arabia that a friend of mine encountered in an airport who were all pumped and ready to go kill some "sand niggers" and "camel jockeys?"

Come to think of it, I have sympathy for more than one of Wright's claims. I also wonder whether the Collegian should print "letters" from "misinformed readers."

Trees essential

Editor,

I have a dozen new heroes. To the K-State employees who stood between the bulldozer and five trees north of Umberger Hall, I offer my thanks and admiration. You saw what was happening to your environment; you didn't like it, and you changed it. Now the construction will continue, but the trees will be incorporated into the design, not paved over. This makes me wonder why the trees had to be destroyed in the original plan. Everyone should be happy.

Everyone is, it seems, except for Director of Facilities Planning Larry Garvin, who was obviously upset at the development. Garvin stated that the plan had been appropriately reviewed. If this was accurate, he would not have been surprised by the dozen's outcry.

The truly upsetting part of the story was Garvin's comment that none of the trees were "unique or an essential part of the teaching environment." The same could be said about Garvin and his parking lot. Obviously, this is a poor paradigm to judge the value of a human or a tree. The trees are a unique and essential part of the environment in the truest sense of the word, and if Garvin doesn't understand that, I suggest he examine his criteria for assessing value.

This small groundswell of environmental responsibility should serve notice to anyone who thinks that no one will care if nature is unnecessarily disturbed.

Mall to see larger profits

By Susan Boos
Collegian Reporter

Manhattan Town Center merchants made $18 million last year, and Chris Heavey, Town Center general manager, projects a larger profit for this year.

Leasing agent Michael Ortega said the Town Center makes $205 per square foot, but Heavey said this figure is too high over the long run.

"Right now, we might be making $205," Heavey said. "But we will close (at the end of the year) at about $183 to $184 per square foot for 122,000 feet of occupied space."

This adds up to $22.5 million for the year. Heavey said, however, the mall has not yet lived up to expectations.

Although merchants made a huge profit last year, Forest City Enterprises, owner of the mall, lost money. Heavey said it would be five to seven years before they are out of the red.

Heavey said taxes are the mall's biggest enemy right now.

"Taxes are horrendous. They have increased from 12 percent to 30 percent, and that really hurt us," Heavey said. "Under the tax system, the college doesn't pay any taxes, the military doesn't pay any taxes, and the Manhattan Town Center pays 30 percent taxes. That's our biggest nightmare."

While taxes have increased, so have sales. Heavey, who projected a 5-percent increase in sales, was surprised when sales were much higher.

> "I have no doubt we'll be successful.
> —Chris Heavey
> Town Center general manager

"We're doing 16.7 percent more sales in dollars than last year," Heavey said. "Nobody in the Midwest or in Forest City Enterprises has done that well. However, I don't think we'll increase that much again next year."

Heavey is pleased with how the mall is running, and he said they are no longer the new kid on the block.

"The attitude from the community is very different than when we opened," Heavey said. "The Manhattan Town Center belongs to the community. It's like a community center.

"We have proms here," he said. "Where else in the country do you have community activities like this in a shopping center?"

Heavey said that the mall is somewhat of an experiment and that it is the only mall of its kind in the Midwest. Heavey said malls like it will open in towns with Manhattan's demographics all over the Midwest if the Manhattan mall is as successful as he anticipates.

Manhattan's demographics have been attractive. Heavey said the mall is 87 percent full with 62 permanent stores and seven temporary businesses. Heavey said he would like to see more Manhattan merchants. Seven have businesses in the mall now.

"We're doing awfully well," Heavey said. "I have no doubt we'll be successful."

SPORTS MONDAY

Wildcat defense rolls over Lobos

By Russ Ewy
Sports Reporter

K-State rolled in the second half to seal a 38-6 victory over New Mexico Saturday night, improving their record to 3-1 overall and 3-0 at KSU Stadium, both firsts for K-State since 1982.

The 3-1 non-conference mark flip-flops the Wildcats' 1989 non-conference record.

Coach Bill Snyder entered the game with some concerns about the team maintaining its momentum after losing a 14-point lead in the second half of last week's 42-35 loss to Northern Illinois, but K-State never let go of their grip on the Lobos after posting the first score of the game midway through the first quarter.

"I was really proud of the way our kids rose to the occasion. Once we had the lead, we didn't let it slide like we did last week," Snyder said. "It was a great win for our kids, but it doesn't, by any stretch of the imagination, mean we have turned the corner. It is just another step up the ladder."

K-State turned up their defensive pressure on New Mexico and thrived on turnovers, turning four of the six Lobo mistakes into points.

"Overall, our kids did what we felt they need to do for a chance to win," Snyder said. "The turnovers, obviously, were a big factor in the ballgame. We knew that we had to get back and create turnovers and prevent big plays.

"We knew we had to create turnovers with an improved pass rush. We knew we had to do a good job of disrupting receivers at the line of scrimmage. All those things, for the most part, happened."

No one felt the cost of the turnovers more than Lobo coach Mike Sheppard, who saw quarterback Jeremy Leach throw four interceptions, cough up one fumble and recover running back Derek Coffman's fumble for a safety.

"We work all week on keeping and protecting the football, and it's really embarrassing to come here and lay the ball down," said Sheppard, former offensive coordinator at Kansas. "I don't know what was different, but there was something missing."

Despite seeing a sub-par performance from his team, Sheppard was surprised by the 'Cats intensity.

"I think you have to give Kansas State the credit they deserve. They worked their tails off, they're well-coached, and they're gaining some confidence," Sheppard said. "I think their schedule benefits them, and I think Bill (Snyder) and the administration have taken a big step forward because we're not a bad football team — not as bad as we looked tonight."

On the opening drive, New Mexico drove to the K-State 3-yard line before linebacker James Enin-Okut jarred the ball from Lobo running back Dion Morrow. Strong safety Danny Needham's fumble recovery started the 'Cats' 95-yard drive which ended in a 45-yard touchdown pass from Carl Straw to Michael Smith.

K-State continued its first-quarter dominance by killing two Lobo drives with interceptions late in the period by C.J. Masters and Rogerick Green and with a 32-yard Tate Wright field goal with 5:13 left. The 'Cats have outscored their opponents 59-0 in the opening period.

New Mexico came back quickly with Leach's 35-yard touchdown pass to Mike Henderson to start the second quarter, but K-State defensive tackle Tony Williams blocked the point-after attempt.

K-State closed out the first half scoring when defensive tackle Ekwensi Griffith caused Coffman to fumble into the Lobos' end zone. Leach fell on it for the safety, giving K-State a six-point halftime lead.

Things only got worse for New Mexico in the second half. K-State halted another Lobo drive when cornerback Jaime Mendez picked off Leach at the Wildcat 28-yard line and returned it 72 yards for the score.

Just a little more than two minutes later, Leach threw another interception, this time to linebacker Chris Patterson on the Wildcat 45-yard line.

Paul Watson, moving in at quarterback after an ankle injury sidelined Straw late in the first half, drove the ball to the New Mexico 2-yard line with a 54-yard completion to Smith before scoring on a keeper.

Watson came back on K-State's first drive of the fourth quarter with a

Watson grabs chance to make impression

By David Svoboda
Sports Editor

If not by air, then by land.

That seemed to be the thinking of K-State backup quarterback Paul Watson Saturday night, as his efforts in the second half as a runner were as instrumental to the Wildcats' 38-6 win as his performance throwing the ball.

And for Watson, who in high school rewrote the passing record book at Park Hill in Kansas City, Mo., that was no small feat.

His pair of touchdown runs in the second half included a 40-yard romp on a quarterback draw on which he broke through the initial wall of defenders and ran for daylight.

"It has been since high school since I did anything like that," said Watson of the 40-yard touchdown run that gave K-State a 31-6 lead. "And I don't think I had that long of a run in high school, to tell you the truth."

He certainly hadn't broken one that long as a Wildcat. Prior to his 66-yard night against the Lobos, Watson had totaled minus-11 yards on 79 carries at K-State.

Watson had looked somewhat out of synch in running the Wildcat option attack two weeks ago against New Mexico State. An errant pitch, in fact, hit an Aggie defender in the middle of the back and resulted in a lost fumble.

"A couple of weeks ago, I didn't know what it was," Watson said. "I made some poor decisions. Tonight (Saturday), I felt real good out there."

Watson's positive feelings carried over to his performance throwing the ball as well. He hit on 6-of-11 passes for 114 yards, including a 54-yard strike to Michael Smith that set up Watson's first touchdown run. And all of this in just over one half of play.

The quarterback was confident that he could be successful any way he attempted to attack the Lobo defense.

"There weren't many times when we went three downs and out," Watson said of the team's offensive performance. "There was always something we could go to."

The quality of Watson's performance in a relief role, after starter Carl Straw injured his right leg in the second quarter, didn't surprise K-State coach Bill Snyder.

"He's experienced those kinds of things before," Snyder said of Watson. "He's come off the bench on a number of occasions and has done a very commendable job."

And the aforementioned problems with the option were absent for the most part, Snyder said.

"I thought Paul played with a considerable amount of poise, and I expected that," Snyder said.

Volleyball squad falls to Sooners

By Russ Ewy
Sports Reporter

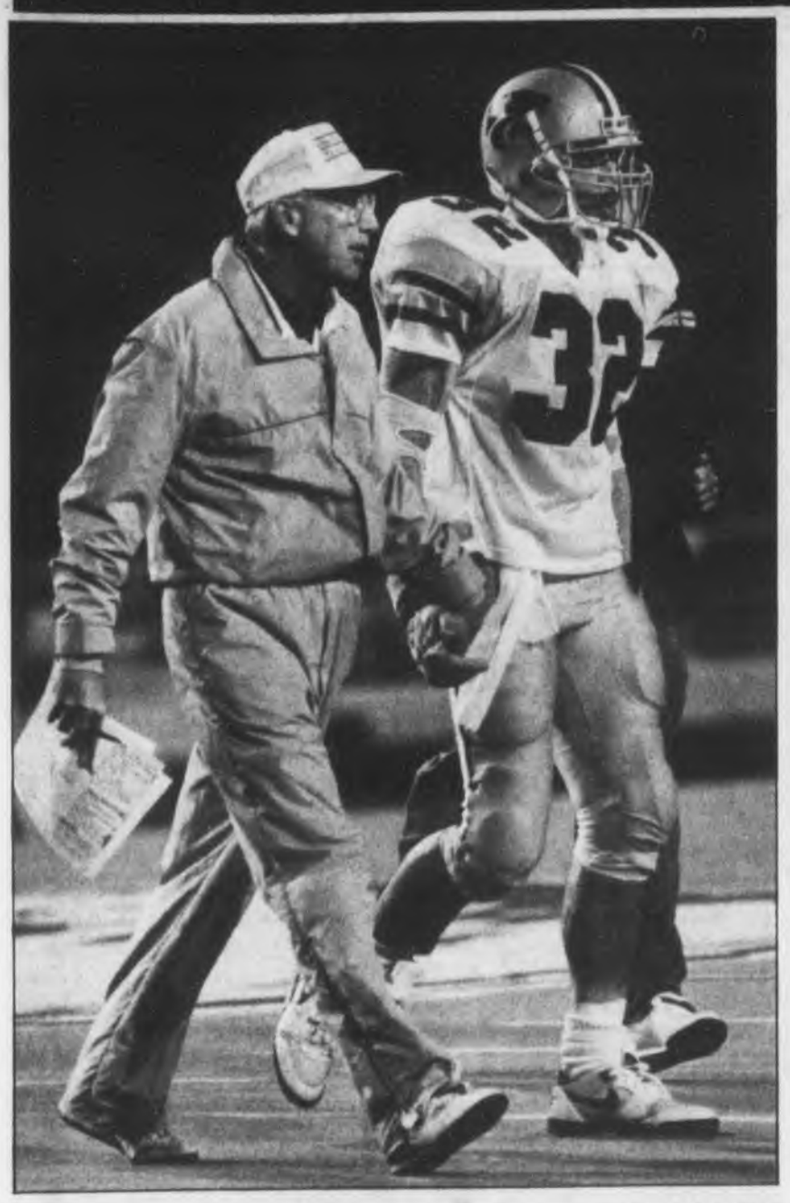
The K-State volleyball squad took its first Big Eight loss Friday, falling in four games to the Oklahoma Sooners.

After leading the Sooners 7-2 in the first game, the 'Cats stalled and OU went on to win 15-8. K-State jumped out in the second game as well, 7-0, but this time held on to finish off the Sooners 15-3.

Oklahoma came out strong in the third game to lead K-State 8-1, then weathered a comeback that cut it to 10-9, and hung on to pull out a 15-9 win. In the fourth game, the spikers again jumped out to an early lead, 5-0, but the Sooners rallied to win the game 15-11.

"We have talked about not being content with losing, but we also talked about our execution and some of the things we need to improve on so that next time we're winning the match 3-1," Coach Scott Nelson said. "Like I've said, (Oklahoma) is a team that always ends up in the top two or three (in the conference), and I thought they played well enough tonight to be in that position again this year."

"Late in the fourth game, when they were at 14, we were real focused on our defense and offense. We weren't intimidated or afraid, we were just out there doing it, and that's a good sign."



The spikers improved their hitting, putting away 63 kills and hitting for a .218 percentage, but had trouble early in serving. The 'Cats had five serving aces but racked up 14 errors.

Nelson made some changes in K-State lineup going into the OU match to provide the 'Cats with more power. Outside hitter Kathy Saxton made her first start and registered 11 kills.

"Kathy is one of our strongest attackers, so we made a trade between blocking, giving up some height and gaining a little more power," Nelson said. "Right now, we can't afford to have Julie (James) and Rhonda (Hughes) carry the whole load of our offense. We need to have kills coming from different areas along the net. I thought she did a nice job for her first start."

The Sooners gained momentum in the final game after struggling in the first and second.

"Oklahoma went with a variety of serves and offensive shots that threw our defense off a little bit," Nelson said. "I thought they did a nice job of changing what they were doing during the course of the match."

Team's work ethic spurs 'Cats to win

David Svoboda
SPORTS EDITOR

Last Saturday, K-State lost — as a team — to Northern Illinois.

This Saturday, K-State won — again as a team — against New Mexico.

The team, the team, the team.

Bo Schembechler, the former Michigan head football coach who is now the general manager of baseball's Detroit Tigers, uttered those six words before most of the key games his Wolverines played while he was head coach.

Did Bill Snyder hear Bo give the speech before a Michigan battle with Iowa? Well, maybe the K-State head coach never broke into the opposing locker room and listened to any pregame speeches while he was an assistant at Iowa, but he sure speaks the same language to those wearing purple and white.

And it shows, on the field and off.

On the field, during moments of jubilation during the win over New Mexico, Wildcat teammates acted like kids who had been let loose with a handful of cash in a Toys-R-Us store.

Can you say "jump up and down and roll around on the ground like first graders"?

I thought you could.

The celebrating was the result of the team play Snyder harps on.

The defense scored points, registering two on a safety and six on Jaime Mendez's return of an interception. The offense scored on the ground and through the air. And the special teams tacked on a few on the strength of Tate Wright's leg.

Seems like reason to celebrate to me.

And it seems like a sound theory is being bought into by a group of players that is now truly believing in its abilities — as a team.

That theory requires K-State players to have a blind faith in the fact that they can, and will, get it done here.

The confidence level, Snyder said, is up.

"I think it's much improved," he said. "But I wouldn't slight where our confidence level was a year ago. I think last year, they believed they were on the verge of something. This year, they know they are."

What they also know is that the job is far from over.

Team play is what has this K-State team 3-1 going into the Big Eight season, and team play is what will make or break this team during the next seven games.

Win or lose from here on out, one thing has been established through the first four games of 1990 — there is now a football "team" playing at K-State. Individual stats are nice, but the "W" column is reached only by those groups which do things together.

The team, the team, the team.

Gover takes title in 1st tennis meet

By Todd Fertig
Sports Reporter

Angie Gover captured the No. 4 singles title at the Nebraska Women's Tennis Invitational, the K-State team's first meet of the season.

No team scores were kept in the eight-team invitational that consisted of Nebraska, Drake, Texas Tech, Baylor, Colorado, Wichita State, Minnesota and K-State.

Coach Steve Bietau was pleased with the performance of the squad in its first meet.

"There were a lot of positive things that we saw, and it was a real learning experience for us," Bietau said. "We were able to identify a lot of specific things that we can work on after seeing how we played in match situations."

Gover defeated Nebraska's R. Collins 6-4, 6-1 in the No. 4 singles finals Saturday. To reach the championships, Gover beat A. Guy of Baylor 6-3, 6-4 in the first round and then got by Texas Tech's A. Ryan 6-1, 4-6, 6-2, in the semifinals, dropping her only set of the tournament.

Gover played the tournament wearing an air-cast to protect a stress fracture in her leg. Bietau was particularly pleased with Gover's play because she has been battling injuries.

"I think this just proved that if she can stay healthy and play some matches consecutively, Angie is going to develop into a fine player," Bietau said.

"It was probably the best tennis I've played in a long time," Gover said. "I was real relaxed and didn't think too much about the injury. I was just able to play and worry about my opponent."

Two newcomers reached the semifinals in their singles flights at the meet. No. 1 singles player Michelle Riniker placed fourth in her first meet at K-State, defeating K. Theck of WSU 7-5, 6-4, then losing to J. Moe of Minnesota 6-1, 6-2, and T. Vail of Drake 6-1, 7-5.

Playing in her first tournament, Neili Wilcox from Tyler (Texas) Community College took third in No. 5 singles. Wilcox defeated M. Knipp of WSU 6-3, 6-1, then lost to S. Gilreath of Texas Tech 6-4, 2-6, 7-5. In the match determining third place, Wilcox edged E. Schaumberg from Colorado 7-5, 6-3.

In No. 2 doubles, Gover and Thresa Burcham placed fourth, beating the team of Marshall and Hansen of Colorado 6-3, 6-4 before dropping their last two matches.

Next on the schedule for the team is the Missouri Valley Intercollegiate Tournament at Springfield, Mo. Friday and Saturday.

KU gives Oklahoma close call

By The Associated Press

NORMAN, Okla. — Gary Gibbs said he expected his ninth-ranked Oklahoma Sooners to play with the necessary emotion against Kansas. For about a half, they did.

For the rest of the way, however, it appeared the Sooners simply went through the motions, which allowed Kansas to make things interesting.

In the end, Oklahoma won 31-17 Saturday in the Big Eight opener for both teams. But if not for four Kansas turnovers that Oklahoma turned into 24 points, Gibbs and his team may have had something to worry about.

"Kansas was able to control the ball on us better than anyone else this season, and a couple times we got tired," said defensive tackle Scott Evans. "We just stood around too much on defense today."

Kansas (1-3) wound up outgaining the Sooners 396-261, thanks to a 223-43 advantage in the second half. The Jayhawks had 21 first downs to Oklahoma's 11 and had the ball about 12 more minutes.

Their first drive used more than six minutes but ended with a fumble. Another second-half drive ate up eight minutes and resulted in a touchdown that made the score 31-14. Another short drive, which ended with a field goal to make it 31-17, used more than four minutes.

"For the first time since I've been at Kansas, we saw the makings of a football team out there today," said Coach Glen Mason, in his third year with the Jayhawks.

"There were times in the game when we had too many guys standing around, waiting for someone else to make the play. That's not characteristic of this football team, especially defensively," Gibbs said. "But I want to say again we were happy with the win."

And Mason, while displeased with the loss, was thrilled with the performance of his team.

"It's not tough to be a coach, no matter whether you win or lose, when you've got kids like those," he said of the Jayhawks.

Meet heat slows runners

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State women's cross country team finished second, and the men's team finished third at the Oklahoma State Cowboy Jamboree meet Saturday in Stillwater, Okla.

The women were led by Janet Haskin, who finished fourth in 17 minutes, 22.86 seconds. Janet Treiber finished seventh overall in a time of 17:36.94 to finish as the second Wildcat to cross the finish line.

Other K-State placers included Paulette Staats, 14th; Jennifer Hillier, 19th; and Janet Magner, 20th.

The K-State women trailed the winners from Arkansas by nine points.

In the men's competition, K-State finished behind Arkansas and host Oklahoma State.

The top Wildcat men's finisher was David Warders, who completed the course in a time of 24:46.52. He was followed by teammates Ron Smith, Todd Trask, Jason Goertzen and Kevin Lashley.

The meet was about what Coach John Capriotti said he would have expected.

"The men had a few problems with the heat, and Arkansas got us back on our heels," Capriotti said of the men's race. "But for the second meet of the year, I think it turned out to be a quality meet."

Capriotti said he was happy with the men overall.

"With the guys, we don't have a lot of depth. I think we can go to nationals in a few weeks, though, if we can all put it together on the same day," he said.

As for the women, Capriotti said the three finishers behind Haskin and Treiber can improve their times and placings.

Capriotti said K-State's training emphasis — which has called for runners to train for endurance for the coming big meets, and not speed in the immediate future — was a contributing factor to the finishes and times of some K-State runners.

Thank you

Dear Students,

On behalf of the athletic department of K-State, we would like to thank you for your attendance at Saturday evening's game against the University of New Mexico.

The weather, being far from ideal, would have given anybody an excuse not to attend. But you, like you have since Coach Bill Snyder's arrival, supported your fellow students in their quest to represent K-State with the class and dignity that we all desire.

Thank you again for your support of all of our athletes, as it means so much to them.

Pirates clinch division

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The Pittsburgh Pirates clinched their first National League East title since the disco days of "We are Family," beating the St. Louis Cardinals 2-0 Sunday on Doug Drabek's three-hitter.

Pittsburgh, which has won a season-high seven straight games and 10 of 11, will play Cincinnati starting Thursday in a rematch of the 1979 NL playoffs. The Reds and the Pirates were the only NL teams not to win division titles in the 1980s.

With seven catches for 179 yards, Smith became the first K-State receiver to have six career 100 yard-plus games and his 91 receptions places him fifth on the 'Cats all-time receiving list.

Sophomore linebacker Brooks Barta caught the attention of the Lobo offense by compiling six tackles, causing and recovering a Leach fumble, and registering 3½ sacks for -47 yards.

"I thought Brooks played real well," Snyder said. "Brooks is not one of those guys that has a lot of the natural gifts, but yet he does so much with what he has and by being intelligent. He offers very quiet but yet very good leadership on the field because he has a good understanding of what's going on and plays so hard."

Chiefs pound Browns in 34-0 victory

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Marty Schottenheimer insists he takes no special gratification in a 34-0 pounding of the team that forced him out as head coach, but his players don't buy it.

"Marty is a gentleman, and he would never say anything," defensive end Bill Maas said Sunday after Schottenheimer's Kansas City Chiefs handed the Cleveland Browns the lopsided defeat. "But this one had to be special for him."

"There were signs all week that this was a special game for the coaching staff. Just little things," said quarterback Steve DeBerg, who threw for two touchdowns. "For one thing, Marty kept telling us all week that it was not special. But you could tell it was."

Chris Martin and Kevin Ross each returned blocked punts for touchdowns and Albert Lewis recorded his third block in as many weeks as the Chiefs (3-1) took advantage of Cleveland mistakes to make their best getaway since their last playoff year of 1986.

Schottenheimer, who was forced out as Browns coach two years ago, withstood a frustrating 10-10 tie when he had his first encounter with his old team a year ago. He shook his head when asked if this was his most emotional victory.

"I've said this before," he said. "But I'm not motivated by personal things. I'm really not."

The Browns dropped to 1-3, their worst start since 1984 when they hired Schottenheimer at mid-season as head coach.

"This is a very frustrated team right now," said Bud Carson, Schottenheimer's successor. "I wish I could stand here and give you a good reason for what happened. The sad part is that we are a much better football team than it looks like."

Cleveland quarterback Bernie Kosar, sacked 13 times coming in, suffered one sack and numerous knockdowns and hurries and was replaced by backup Mike Pagel late in the third quarter.

"There's no question that this is a very low point," Kosar said. "I really think it's time now when a lot of guys around here have to realize we have our backs to the wall."

Nobody on either team could remember hearing of a player blocking punts in three consecutive games.

In the second quarter, Martin made a 31-yard touchdown return when Charles Washington blocked Bryan Wagner's effort. In the third, Ross went four yards to score when Lewis blew through the middle for his third block in three weeks.

"You only get one shot," Lewis said. "Every player on that line went hard. You just go in there as hard as you can and hope for the best."

The Browns, who committed three turnovers, were so inept that at one point Kosar and running back Eric Metcalf ran into each other trying to make a handoff and took a five-yard loss. The Chiefs mounted a 24-0 halftime lead when the Browns' six first-half possessions ended in three punts, two turnovers and Washington's block.

"It's a sad commentary on this coaching staff when somebody like Kansas City, who had blocked two the previous two weeks, gets in and blocks two kicks against us," Carson said. "I've never been so sick about something in my life."

"I can understand how they feel over there," Chiefs center Mike Webster said. "When you get a kicked blocked against you, it's devastating. When you block a kick, it gives everybody a rush of energy and adrenaline."

Leroy Hoard negated a good Cleveland drive at the outset by fumbling at the Chiefs' 3. A short time later, DeBerg drove Kansas City 58 yards in three plays, hitting a wide open Robb Thomas with a 47-yard touchdown pass.

After Nick Lowery kicked a 39-yard field goal, Washington and Martin teamed on the block and return for a 17-0 lead with 4:54 left.

Naz Worthen's 37-yard return of a Cleveland punt set up the Chiefs on the Browns 17 late in the first half and six plays later DeBerg lofted a 6-yard scoring pass to Emile Harry.

DeBerg guided the Chiefs on a seven-play, 64-yard drive late in the third period that Lowery capped with a 34-yarder for a 27-0 lead.

In the second quarter, Kosar passed to Metcalf over the middle. But after advancing 31 yards, Metcalf dropped the ball and Martin recovered at the Chiefs 26.

It may not be a special victory for Schottenheimer, but it was for the Chiefs.

"I'm glad we won," said Stephone Paige, who caught four passes for 90 yards. "They had a great thing in Cleveland, and they let him go."

Ag leadership roles lack equality; Women urged to take measures

10th Annual Working With Families Conference

By Danette King
Collegian Reporter

She's not what people would expect. She wasn't dressed in a black-and-white power suit, and she doesn't have a powerful, projecting voice. She's Sarah Vogel, North Dakota's commissioner of agriculture.

Vogel was on campus to speak during the 10th Annual Working With Families Conference sponsored by K-State's Family Center in the College of Human Ecology. Vogel addressed more than 100 people during Friday's luncheon in the Union Ballroom, speaking on "Women: Compassion, Action, Results and Equality, or Women: CARE."

Vogel spoke about equality and the absence of women in agricultural leadership roles.

"The absence of them (women) is a very, very big mistake," Vogel said.

She encouraged the primarily female audience to become more involved in areas of local leadership by explaining that each woman must take her own measures in order to gain such positions.

Charlie Griffin, coordinator of the Working with Families Conference and instructor in community development, said one of Vogel's past presentations in Iowa motivated him to write and request that she be a part of this conference.

"I was very pleased to hear her put an emphasis on families and the importance of farmers having a voice in policy," Griffin said.

Griffin said he felt that having such a well-known speaker on the last day of the conference helped in the attendence retention.

Vogel is the first female to be elected or appointed as a state's agriculture commissioner in the United States. Ironically, this soft-spoken woman, who said it was the farmers who carried her through the 1988 election, isn't a farm girl.

Vogel kept the atmosphere light with frequent comparisons between North Dakota and Kansas agriculture and how North Dakota produces better agricultural products.

Although she used her dry sense of humor to keep the crowd chuckling, she was serious about her topic. Vogel drew an anology between farmers and a rubberband.

"The farmers were pulled on in 1983 and then in 1987," Vogel said referring to the farm crisis years as she pulled on an imaginative rubberband between her hands. "Then they were pulled on a little more and a little more. Pretty soon, the rubberband is not going to stretch anymore. The farmers are now under high tension."

Vogel said she feels that there is a lack of compassion for farmers.

"USDA statistics show farmers have never been so well off," Vogel said. "We in North Dakota know better."

Vogel noted that action designed to help the farmer can't necessarily come from the farmer.

"They (the farmers) are tired; they've been through the '80s," she said. "There is not such a thing as a

THE GREAT MANHATTAN SWEEP OUT.
Over the counter drugs can play tricks too. Nasal decongestants if used excessively may case the nose to be worse than it was in the beginning. These topical products will over time cause a thinning of the mucosal membranes in the nose, which can lead to many problems. Follow the manufacturer's recommendations and know HOW to take it.

K-State duo to perform, open Faculty Artist Series

By The Collegian Staff

A husband and wife team will kick off the Faculty Artist Series with the sounds of Hindemith and Schubert at 8 p.m. Tuesday in All Faiths Chapel.

David and Mary Ann Littrell have played the cello and piano together for 20 years. Both attended K-State as music majors and met when a professor asked Mary Ann to provide piano accompaniment for David's cello.

Since then, the couple has performed numerous concerts and recitals and perform together as a general rule.

David has taught cello and bass at K-State for four years. He also conducts the K-State Symphony Orchestra. Mary Ann is a local church organist.

"Our upcoming recital has a lot of variety," Mary Ann said. "We play three completely different styles, so there should be something for everyone to enjoy."

The Littrells will perform three sonatas, beginning with one by Hindemith. The second, written by Schubert, is to be played on an arpeggione, an instrument similar to the cello. The Littrells will conclude with "Sonata in G Minor," a piece from the Romantic period by Rachmaninoff.

Other upcoming faculty recitals in the series include the K-State Symphony Orchestra, featuring oboe soloist Sara Funkhouser, associate professor of music. Funkhouser studied oboe at the Juilliard and Manhattan schools of music in New York. Before coming to K-State, she was the principal oboist with the Kansas City Philharmonic and the Kansas City Lyric Opera Orchestra. The K-State Symphony Orchestra will perform compositions by Brahms and Strauss at 8 p.m. Oct. 16 in McCain Auditorium.

All Faiths Chapel will host a trumpet recital featuring Gary Mortenson at 8 p.m. Oct. 24. Mortenson recently conducted the K-State Trumpet Ensemble in the 1990 International Trumpet Guild Conference at the University of Maryland.

"These concerts are quality performances which benefit the community, students and the faculty members which are featured," said Jennifer Edwards, assistant instructor of music.

Admission is free to all recitals in the Faculty Artist Series.

bad farmer anymore because anyone who made it through the '80s is damn good."

Vogel said it is the policies made by politicans that have led to the farmers on food stamps.

"Farmers don't have the money to fly to Washington to lobby," she said.

"I didn't do it for all farmers," Vogel said. "It wasn't a legal issue; it was a human thing."

Vogel said being a woman in a traditionally all-male office has its advantages.

When asked about her serving in an agricultural capacity without the usual farming background, Vogel replied by asking how many farmers ask the commissioner of agriculture for farming advice.

"I don't need to teach the farmer how to farm. He already knows how to do that," Vogel said. "But I can help with the policies that affect farming."

vacant for three years. The building, which housed Maurices, Braun's and Brass Buckle, remains vacant.

In spite of vacancies, business is beginning to increase Downtown.

"Downtown is just now beginning to surge again," Brecheisen said. "We're starting to see a real turnaround. It's taken us three years, which is not long. I'm really pleased with the way things are going."

Other areas of Manhattan were not as affected by the opening of the mall as Downtown.

Taylor said Aggieville is also beginning to benefit from the mall.

"Now the mall has a positive effect on the community because it draws people from out of town to come and shop in Manhattan," Taylor said.

letters at halftime of the football game.

Practice soon ended, and K-State admissions representatives gave away prizes to Band Day participants as they waited their turn to perform at the pregame show.

Marcie Israel, Wathena High School sophomore, said she liked Band Day except for the weather.

"My favorite part is watching the K-State marching band," Israel said. "They're really good."

Although the rain hampered the day, Finck said it was still a success.

"I thought the day went very well," Finck said. "They played well, and they stayed together as well as they ever have."

Union smoking areas reduced

Complaints, venting systems cited as reasons for change

By Scott Berg
Staff Reporter

Two of the K-State Union's smoking areas have recently been snuffed out.

The decision was made last spring by the Union Governing Board to eliminate smoking in the Stateroom cafeteria and the TV lounge across from the Little Theatre, said Jack Connaughton, Union associate director. The governing board is made up of students and faculty and sets and regulates Union policy.

Except for designated areas on campus, each building is a non-smoking structure, said John Lambert, director of public safety.

"No one person is in charge of assigning all the smoking areas in the buildings," Lambert said. "There are too many buildings on campus for one person to handle."

The department heads in each building decide where smoking areas will be permitted, Lambert said.

Connaughton said that the Union dropped the two smoking areas for obvious reasons.

"We had a lot of complaints about the smoke," Connaughton said. "You could walk in and see a blue haze of smoke hanging in the air of both rooms."

The current exhaust system couldn't handle the burden in the Stateroom cafeteria, Connaughton said. Improvements were added to the system and machines designed to filter the air were brought in, but both measures failed, he said.

■ See related story, Page 8

Estimates were taken on the cost of reventing the eating area and having a consultant redesign the area's venting system, Connaughton said. The process would cost about $10,000.

The feedback has been mostly positive, and there have been relatively few complaints by smokers, Connaughton said.

Jill Broyles, a junior in business administration who smokes, said she noticed the change in policies in the Union.

"I noticed that it is pretty limited," she said. "I transferred from Cowley County Community College, and its smoking area was a lot larger. It seems funny that a big university would have less areas for smokers."

Smokers now use the smoking area in the K-State Union Courtyard and the second-floor concourse after the Stateroom and the TV room outside the Little Theatre were converted to non-smoking areas.

Germany prepares for party of century

10,000 activists set for march in city

By The Associated Press

WEST BERLIN — Germans on Monday got ready for the nation's party of the century — a celebration of unity that could be disrupted by thousands of radical streetfighters in Berlin.

In Hamburg, West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl said the powerful new country will have to take on a greater international role.

"Everyone must know that there is no withdrawing into a comfortable niche of world politics," Kohl told a convention of his Christian Democratic Union.

In other developments:

■ East German authorities began releasing some prisoners under an amnesty program designed to make amends for sentences imposed by the Communist system.

■ The U.S. commandant, Maj. Gen. Raymond E. Haddock, formally deactivated his West Berlin command at a ceremony attended by top-ranking diplomats and his two Allied counterparts, Maj. Gen. Robert J.S. Corbett of Britain and Maj. Gen. Francois Cann of France.

■ Tens of thousands of Poles flooded into West Berlin, on one last, wild shopping spree before visa requirements are imposed on unification day.

When the clock strikes midnight Tuesday, the two German states will become a single, sovereign nation, ending more than 45 years of postwar separation.

What started with church-sponsored protests in the gritty East German industrial city of Leipzig last year has led to the merger many had considered only a nostalgic dream.

The result: an economic powerhouse of nearly 78 million people in the heart of Europe.

Kohl is given much of the credit for bringing about unification less than 11 months after the opening of the Berlin Wall. The chancellor was able to calm Polish and Soviet fears enough to remove potentially sticky obstacles coming from the East. That included an unusual agreement to let Soviet troops stay in what is now East Germany until 1994.

At the same time, Kohl joined with President Francois Mitterrand of France in pledging an even greater push for European integration in the West.

Kohl will lead the celebrations starting Tuesday night in front of the Reichstag, the historic German parliament building that still bears the scars of fighting between Soviet and German soldiers at the end of World War II.

Beer will flow and fireworks will light up the night sky.

Police were bracing for trouble from thousands of leftist and rightist radicals.

The mass-circulation Bild newspaper said that 10,000 leftists were expected to go on a rampage, breaking store windows and looting merchandise. Police fear they will clash with rightists who have also vowed to march through Berlin.

West Berlin police spokesman Joerg Gallas said he thought the number was exaggerated, but acknowledged authorities will be on the alert.

As Kohl's Christian Democrats merged Monday with their East German-sister party during a convention in Hamburg, Kohl looked ahead to the country's place in international affairs.

"A united Germany must become more involved than it was possible to do during the separation," he said.

For decades, West Germany and East Germany followed the lead set by Washington and Moscow. Lately, there have been growing demands for Germans to help secure the world stability from which its businesses profit handsomely.

As one step, the all-German parliament will consider a proposal to let German troops take part in United Nations peacekeeping missions.

Germans for weeks have been looking forward to the unification parties, as friends and relatives plan to visit one another to ring in the new era. Celebrations are planned from Flensburg on the Danish border to the winter resort of Garmisch-Partenkirchen in the south.

Supreme Court to hear 25 cases

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court, opening its 1990-91 term one justice short, agreed Monday to decide whether juries may impose stiffer sentences because of a crime's impact on the victims or their families.

The court said it will use a case from Ohio to consider reversing recent rulings banning such victim-impact evidence.

The case was among some 1,000 acted upon by the eight justices as they returned from a three-month summer recess. They rejected appeals in the vast majority, agreeing to hear and decide just 25.

David Souter, President Bush's first nominee to the high court, is expected to fill the vacancy created by the July retirement of Justice William Brennan. The Senate is expected to confirm Souter on Tuesday, making him the 105th justice in the court's history.

The court in this term plans to hear arguments in key cases involving abortion counseling, fetal protection, school desegregation and the war on drugs. The justices previously granted review of appeals in those cases.

Copyright ownership of telephone directories will be explored in a Kansas case granted Supreme Court review Monday.

The justices said they will hear an appeal by a company that distributed an edited version of a Kansas telephone directory.

The company, Feist Publications Inc., unsuccessfully tried to buy the white pages from Rural Telephone Service Company, which has customers in the northwest part of the state. The telephone company has a monopoly for its area.

Feist then edited the Rural directory, relisting the names by towns in a 15-county region that included the area served by Rural. Feist has distributed its directory since 1978.

A federal judge ruled that Feist violated copyright law and awarded Rural $6,000 and attorneys fees.

The 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the damage award last March.

The appeals court rejected Feist's arguments that Rural violated antitrust law by monopolizing the listing of its customers.

Feist's appeal to the high court is supported by the Association of North American Directory Publishers and the Directory Publishers Association representing more than 100 publishers of telephone directories.

Czechoslovakia headlines luncheon

European country's political change, lecture showcases student revolution

By Mary Skinner
Collegian Reporter

Czechoslovakia's revolution last year should free the country from being classified as a Soviet-bloc nation.

The current situation in Czechoslovakia was discussed by Joseph Hajda, professor of political science, in the K-State Union Monday at the International Activities Luncheon.

The luncheon series has consisted of topics of interest that have involved faculty overseas, said William Jorns, assistant director of international agricultural programs.

"We try to get them to share their experiences with the faculty," Jorns said.

The presentation, given to about 70 people, focused on the revolution that occurred in Czechoslovakia from Nov. 17 to Dec. 29 of last year and the current situation there.

"The most important thing is that designating Czechoslovakia as a Soviet-bloc country is obsolete," Hajda said. "It should now be designated as a Central European country."

Hajda said that the revolution was peaceful and that most people backed it.

The revolution was started by students and those involved with the theater. After work, theaters would be used for public debates dealing with the issues of the revolution and how it should be carried out. The students would then deliver the information to outlying areas.

"The students and theater people became the backbone of the revolution," Hajda said.

The revolution drew support from other workers who had had enough of the mismanagement of the country by the communist leaders.

Hajda said the media's role in addressing the expectations of the revolution helped those that were unsure about the revolution to choose to back it.

"Without the political changes in the Soviet Union and Poland, there may not have been the chance for the revolution," he said.

The people of Czechoslovakia have four main expectations of the revolution, Hajda said. The first is that the political system can be transformed into a democracy with free elections and political parties. The second is to change from a direct-planned economy to a market economy.

The third deals with the enhancement of internationally recognized freedoms, such as freedom of media and religion, and the fourth deals with the willingness of the government to build a friendly relationship with the rest of the world.

Although the Communists did have candidates in the first free election June 6, the revolutionary forces had enough support to win. There were 23 political movements represented in the election.

"People vote with a desire to be a part in the election," Hajda said. "No one is forcing them."

The country is focusing on drafting new constitutions, making price reforms and possibly changing enterprises from state to private ownership, he said.

The people of Czechoslovakia have a widespread respect for human rights and freedoms, Hajda said.

"The new Czechoslovakia demands new thinking and a new vision," he said. "It is a dependent country in Central Europe that needs to go to a democracy that is prosperous and free."

Area bar, student to settle dispute

By Erika Parker

The Kansas Commission on Civil Rights must decide what action should be taken against Bushwackers after a racial incident in the summer of 1989.

The commission recently decided in favor of Luis Montaner, fourth-year student in veterinary medicine. How the decision is to be enforced is still unclear.

Montaner filed the complaint after Bushwackers' management allegedly posted signs saying "Fuck San Juan. The Management." on San Juan Day, June 23, 1989. Puerto Rican students had been celebrating the holiday that night.

The commission decided that Montaner had probable cause in his complaint.

Robert Lay, assistant director of the commission, said he could not make specific comments about the case, but could give general information about complaints such as this.

First, the commission would like the two parties to resolve their differences voluntarily through conference and conciliation, Lay said.

Montaner is asking for $2,000 and a discrimination workshop from the establishment.

"At this time, I see no reason why I should compromise," Montaner said.

However, Bushwackers' owner Don Ramey said he offered similar compensation last summer.

"When this whole thing happened, we offered to raise some money to donate to charity for San Juan or any Puerto Rican charity, which would have been about $2,000. He (Montaner) said, 'No. You'd be buying yourself out of the thing,'" Ramey said.

As a result, Ramey said he is unsure if he is willing to give in to Montaner's request.

Montaner said Ramey did offer to send money to a Hispanic charitable organization, but not a K-State organization.

"So yes, he did offer money, but I rejected because at the time it seemed that he was just trying to reach a solution that was not addressing the problem," he said. "They were not really trying to reach a solution, but they were trying to do what was quickest to get me off their back."

If Ramey and Montaner do not reach an agreement, Lay said, a public hearing will be conducted. The location has not been decided yet, but it will probably be in Manhattan.

Iraq makes peaceful gestures

(AP) — President Bush assailed Iraq on Monday but hinted that a withdrawal from Kuwait could lead to a settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict. Israel warned its response to an Iraqi attack would be harsh and painful, and said it was giving out gas masks to all citizens.

In Baghdad, Iraqi President Saddam Hussein ordered the release of nine French nationals believed to have been detained at strategic Iraqi installations as shields against attack.

It was Saddam's second conciliatory gesture to the West in as many days. On Sunday, he had urged a peaceful international dialogue and mentioned France as a possible negotiating partner.

U.S., French and British officials all rejected Hussein's offer Monday, saying they wouldn't talk until Iraq withdrew from Kuwait.

Cheating husband pays price

JERUSALEM (AP) — Rabbis ordered a straying husband to deposit $3,250 with the Ministry of Religion on Monday to discourage extramarital affairs, a newspaper reported.

Daily Yedioth Ahronoth said a mother of six asked Beer Sheva's rabbinical court to stop her husband from living with his young mistress.

The court, which deals with marriage, death, birth and divorce, ordered the husband to deposit the money. The cash will be awarded to the wife if she proves her husband has continued relations with other women, the newspaper said.

Jail suicides up in Britain

LONDON (AP) — A prisoners' care group on Monday blamed harsh conditions in British prisons for doubling jail suicides.

The National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders said there were 104 deaths officially recorded as suicides in 1987-1989, compared with 54 in 1980-1982. In the 1980-1989 decade, 242 prisoners committed suicide.

Although remand prisoners who are awaiting court proceedings account for only 20 percent of the prison population, 132 of the 242 deaths were by prisoners on remand, the group said.

Bond set for accused rapist

PECOS, Texas (AP) — Bond was set at $75,000 Monday for a man wanted in Kansas on rape and kidnapping charges.

Authorities searching the West Texas mountains Sunday arrested Mitchell Wayne Thomas, 31, near Toyah.

Thomas had fled on foot toward the mountains Saturday after authorities confronted him in a routine traffic stop near Van Horn, about 120 miles east of El Paso.

Thomas was charged Monday with aggravated assault in connection with the Ward County abduction and sexual assault of a woman late Friday night.

On Friday, an off-duty Kansas Bureau of Investigation agent found Thomas' car at a Wichita motel. Officials said the Great Bend restaurant worker apparently had asked someone to leave the car there, but was not there himself.

Kansas police allege Thomas attacked women motorists after following them in his car. They say he tricked them into stopping on the road by flashing his headlights.

The attacks began in January, soon after Thomas was released from Larned State Security Hospital where he had been held for about five years.

Man steals plane, crashes

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — A man has been accused of stealing an airplane and buzzing downtown high-rise buildings before crashing into a wooded area.

Jeffrey Campbell, 33, faces charges of theft, burglary and criminal mischief.

The single-engine Cessna 172 was stolen early Sunday from Anchorage Air Center at Merrill Field, said Police Sgt. Gary Lee. Campbell then flew it between the Arco and Hunt office building towers, circled the Sheraton Anchorage Hotel a few times and slipped between the towers of the Hotel Captain Cook.

"He did a few very erratic maneuvers," Lee said. "Then he disappeared."

The plane crashed on a firing range at Fort Richardson, but he managed to walk away and call a cab to take him home, Lee said.

KPL investigation requested

TOPEKA (AP) — Two state legislators asked the agency that regulates utilities Monday to investigate the recent closings of several business offices of the state's largest utility.

Reps. Robert Krehbiel, D-Pretty Prairie, and R. Rand Rock, D-Arkansas City, said they were concerned about the possible effects the recent changes may have on KPL Gas Service customers. They sent a letter Monday to the Kansas Corporation Commission.

KPL spokesman Tom Taylor said the Topeka-based utility is closing some small business offices but not removing maintenance workers from the affected towns. He also said the most recent closings are part of a 5-year-old effort to cut costs.

Parties claim win in NEA vote

TOPEKA (AP) — The decision of the state's largest teachers' union not to endorse a gubernatorial candidate is a clear victory for Republican Gov. Mike Hayden, a Hayden spokesman said Monday.

Frank Ybarra, Hayden's campaign press secretary, said the governor did not expect to receive the endorsement of the Kansas-National Education Association. Republicans traditionally have viewed KNEA as a Democratic organization.

Democratic State Chairman Jim Parrish played down KNEA's decision not to endorse the Democratic nominee, State Treasurer Joan Finney. He said the group's decision was a slap in the face for the governor.

KNEA's 28-member board voted not to endorse a candidate Saturday. The group represents about 24,000 teachers.

Kay Coles, a KNEA spokeswoman, said the board didn't think Hayden has made a strong enough commitment to increasing state financing for education programs. However, it did not endorse Finney because members thought she has only a superficial understanding of education issues, she said.

Finney gains more resources

TOPEKA (AP) — The Democratic Party is putting more of its resources into Joan Finney's bid to become the state's first woman governor as result of a meeting Sunday, officials said Monday.

Chairman Jim Parrish said the state party has been responding to requests from Finney's campaign since she defeated former Gov. John Carlin to win the Democratic nomination in the Aug. 7 primary. She is trying to unseat Republican Gov. Mike Hayden, who is seeking a second term.

"Now we are assuming more of the responsibilities," Parrish said. "We have allocated more of our party's resources, personnel, to that campaign."

The Dreamettes, played by Lacey Watson and Adrienne Carter, left, and Kymberly Lewis, rehearse Monday in the Purple Masque Theatre for the Ebony Theatre Company's production of "Dreamgirls."

'Dreamgirls' actors rouse audience in production

By The Collegian Staff

Sometimes, the weekend entertainment scene in Manhattan can be a nightmare. The Ebony Theatre Company's production of "Dreamgirls" is a welcome wake-up call.

"Dreamgirls" is a brilliant display of talent in a production that practically beckons the audience to jump up and sing along — and many people do just that.

The Tom Eyen/Henry Krieger musical will run Thursday, Friday and Saturday in the Purple Masque Theatre.

"Dreamgirls" centers on the rise and fall of several musical groups searching for fame.

As the struggling musicians enter the spotlight of fame, changes are made to ensure their continued rise. One such change involves demoting Dreamettes lead singer Effie to backup vocals and making backup singer Deena the main attraction.

Unable to settle with this new arrangement, Effie becomes increasingly difficult to work with and is eventually replaced.

Effie sets out to find fame on her own. By the story's end, she achieves her goal and can forgive and forget for one final hurrah with the Dreamettes, who have changed their name to the Dreams.

"Dreamgirls" sports a talented cast. Effie is played by Kymberly Lewis, junior in marketing. Back-up singers in the Dreamettes, Lorrell Robinson and Deena Jones, are played by Lacey Watson, junior in apparel design, and Adrienne Carter, senior in psychology, respectively. Effie's replacement, Michelle Morris, is played by Eve Wilson, junior in journalism.

The band's manager/songwriter, Effie's brother C.C. White, is played by Gregory Williams, junior in physical science. The cast is rounded out by Derek Walker, junior in apparel and textile marketing, who plays big-time manager Curtis Taylor; Anthony Pauldin, senior in humanities/social science, who plays singer James "Thunder" Early; and Christopher Bryant, junior in business, who plays Marty.

While music largely carries this play, the acting abilities of the characters are no less important. Admirable performances are given by all members of the cast, but are particularly noteworthy in the cases of Walker, Lewis, Watson and Bryant.

Undoubtedly, Lewis was cast as Effie because of her extraordinary voice. Her performances of "I'm Not Going" and "One Night Only" are impressive displays of talent. Her acting abilities measure up

Streetside reunites for Saturday event

Doo-wop group to perform oldies

By Stacey Lentz
Collegian Reviewer

Streetside will perform some oldies but goodies from the 1950s at its reunion concert Saturday in the Manhattan High School Auditorium.

Streetside is an a cappella doo-wop group that was formed 10 years ago by students at Manhattan High. It emphasizes vocals and demonstrates perfect vocal harmony.

The group was started after Pete Kahler saw singers on a street corner in the movie "Rocky II" and was inspired by their singing "Two Kinds Of Love."

"Streetside started out practicing singing in the boys' bathroom by the choir room because it had good acoustics," said Streetside member Mark Kahler, a K-State graduate.

From those humble beginnings, Streetside has developed into a popular group with a statewide audience.

Streetside performs about 60 to 70 shows a year including a show at the Kansas State Fair. The group has performed at the K-State All-University Open House for the past five years and has performed the national anthem at several K-State basketball games. Twelve of the members have attended K-State.

Streetside has four members and two alternates. It has had 20 members over the last ten years.

"It's always been Manhattan High School graduates," Kahler said. "As members leave, new ones take their place."

Saturday's performance will be a reunion of all the singers who have ever been members.

The group will perform a wide variety of songs, ranging from Billy Joel's "For the Longest Time" to Paul Anka's "Put Your Head On My Shoulder." Songs from a recently released Streetside tape will also be performed.

"It's really difficult when you go into the studio," Kahler said. "Everything has to be perfect. It would take us two hours to record a two-minute song."

Proceeds from the reunion concert will help set up a scholarship fund for the high school's choral music departments.

"This reunion is sort of a homecoming for us," Kahler said. "We're coming back to where it all started and giving something back to the school."

Tickets will be available at the door or by phone at 539-7272. Prices are $3 for adults and $2 for students.

A water-purification system developed at K-State is being tested by U.S. special forces for use by American military personnel in the Middle East.

"All I can really say is that we know it is being tested, both by special forces and by other units of the military," said John Walters, president of K-State Research Foundation. "But right now they have not authorized them to give any additional releases about what their plans are, if they have actually ordered any or haven't ordered any. All we know is that it is being tested."

The system was developed by John Lambert, professor emeritus in the Department of Chemistry, and Louis Fina, professor emeritus in the Division of Biology, and was first patented through the Research Foundation in 1974.

The process, called PentaPure, uses small iodine resin beads. Though the beads are normally insoluble, Lambert and Fina found that coming into contact with bacteria in water causes the beads to release just enough iodine into the water to kill the bacteria.

"It doesn't appear to make sense. Intuitively we think that if something is insoluble, everything it does will be slow, but actually it can be quite rapid," Lambert said.

They later found that not only will the resin beads kill bacteria, but also viruses and most protozoa if the exposure is long enough.

"Admittedly, it's not an idea that you just think up. It just occurred to me, and we tried it, and it worked," Lambert said. "We were very lucky. It did even more than we anticipated."

The Research Foundation first sold the rights to market the system in 1976. It is presently being marketed by Water Technologies Corporation in Plymouth, Minn.

Products range from a small straw, similar to a normal drinking straw, to systems large enough to supply pure water to an entire building.

NASA is among the earliest and largest users and boosters of PentaPure, Lambert said.

The Research Foundation offered to let NASA use the system free early in its development. NASA was interested, but Skylab was just over a year away at that time and NASA felt it would be too soon to try the new system.

When the shuttle program got underway, NASA contacted Lambert and Fina, Lambert said.

"NASA has been using it since then and has been really happy with the results," Lambert said. "It has been on manned space stations, missions to the moon and the shuttle flights."

The system has far-reaching applications and is presently being used globally. Nearly all U.S. embassies have installed some form of it, Walters said.

Besides NASA, promotional materials name the U.S. Army and Air Force, the Canadian and American Mount Everest Teams, the U.S. State Department and major corporations both in the United States and abroad as large-scale users of PentaPure and the Water Tech Purifier.

The system also has practical uses closer to home. The straw and drinking cup can be used by backpackers, campers, hikers and international travelers, according to a brochure provided by Water Technologies Corporation.

Larger units can be installed under a household sink to purify all water used for drinking and cooking.

"There are lots of reasons for purifying all of your drinking water, even that which comes straight out of the tap," Walters said. "You can imagine how useful it is then, if, for instance, you are in a foreign country or camping and wanting to drink out of a stream."

Interest in water purification is growing steadily, partly because heightened concern for environmental problems in general. Also, the situation in the Middle East has brought the issue to the attention of the military again.

"I can remember drinking water with iodine in it when I was in the Army," Walters said. "It tasted awful and had far more iodine in it than was necessary to purify the water."

Lambert said he agreed.

"The beauty of this system is that there is only enough iodine released to kill the bacteria in the water," Lambert said.

"I don't really know what will happen in the Middle East, but we have been promised that we will be the second people to know, next to Water Technologies," he said. "It's mostly in their hands now, but they keep us informed."

Some people don't think hunger is a problem in our area.

The Palmers would disagree.

Unbelievable. Disgusting. Not in our area. Not in this day and age.

But, today, men and women and children will be forced to dig through garbage to find their next meal. Right here.

Which is why we need your help.

Member agencies of the United Way of Riley County use your United Way gift to feed the hungry. It's money well spent. Doing the most good. Right here. In one month recently, over 500 people survived on United Way-assisted food.

Giving to United Way means your money helps agencies that undergo strict evaluations of their programs, staff, and facility. And that means they are better prepared to give people like the Palmers the help they really need.

When you get your Riley County pledge card this year, choose to help the Palmers. Let your gift show you care.

Recent protest shows conscientious effort

Many people say there are no real protests anymore.

Sure, people tie-dyed some shirts, sang a few songs, smoked a little dope and virtually stopped a war, but who's to say anything short of that is not a protest.

Last week, the protestors on campus were not wearing tie-dyed regalia and smoking dope, but with the help of a few bars of "We Shall Overcome," they managed to successfully stop a war.

The ongoing battle with the green-consuming parking lot monster was finally tested, and the beast was stopped in its tracks.

A group of K-State Cooperative Extension Service employees put their jobs aside and saved several trees outside their office from destruction by standing between them as the bulldozers prepared to munch down.

Construction plans for parking lot B-11, along the northeast side of Umberger Hall, called for the removal of several trees along a storm drainage area, the future site of a new blacktopped backyard.

The trees were spared and the parking lot redesigned because of the extension service employees' effort.

The environmentally conscious protestors should be commended for their efforts and their bravery to look the administration in the face and say, no, not this time.

President Jon Wefald should also be commended for responding to the group's demands so quickly and appropriately.

As for the facilities planning staff who designed the parking lot, and all the others on this campus, they should try to resolve the parking problem in a more efficient and environmentally aware manner.

Hopefully, the planning department has considered building vertically, rather than horizontally. There are limited resources in Kansas. Land is one of them, sky is not.

When the University is concerned about saving money, it would be absurd to pay someone to remove trees from an area and then buy more trees to replace them.

The students, faculty and staff also need to fight the trend of swapping trees and grass for asphalt by driving less and biking or walking more.

With efforts from the entire campus community, the evil parking lot monster can be slayed.

Unproved theory evokes unneccesary fears

In a little more than two months, residents along the New Madrid Fault will be shaking in their boots — literally, according to one scientist.

Iben Browning's prediction of an earthquake measuring 7.0 or greater on the Richter scale on or about Dec. 3 has people worried. He has received much media attention for his theory, and people along the seismic zone have received more troubles to put in the back of their minds.

Many experts have denounced Browning's ideas. But this is little consolation to those living in an area from Marked Tree, Ark., across southeastern Missouri to southern Illinois. After an earthquake measuring 4.6 further rattled nerves Wednesday, some residents started taking Browning's prediction more seriously. One resident even said she wanted to move to another part of the country.

Scientists should keep grandiose predictions to themselves and not attempt to draw attention to their work with off-the-wall statements. Although many individuals probably took the theory with a grain of salt, some people got scared. This in an area of the nation not commonly known as earthquake country, but rather one known to experience hundreds of small quakes every year.

While scientific research is important to solving the mystery of earthquakes, spouting off half-baked theories of destruction and geological violence is self-serving and unnecessary.

Dating guidelines helpful

Karin Dell'Antonia

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

At long last, my promised article about blind dating has arrived. I haven't been feeling well this week, so if I were Gary Larson or Dear Abby or Dave Barry, there'd be a little blurb that said "Karin Dell'Antonia is on sick leave. We are rerunning some of her favorite columns until she returns." But I'm not any of those people, and I don't really have any favorite columns that are old enough for anyone to want to read again. Instead, I'm trying to clear the Kleenex bits away from my brain to produce something entertaining. I've taken so much cold medicine that if I can stay awake long enough, I'll laugh at anything.

Don't worry. I wrote most of this before the snot took over my mind.

Anyway, not too long ago I set some friends up on blind dates. For whatever reason, romance just doesn't seem to be in the air this fall. So, Cupid's arrow having missed the friends in question, I set out to play matchmaker myself.

I used to absolutely refuse to set friends up under any circumstances, but this month my resolve failed me. As a happily coupled person myself, I undertook the usual task of matching his friends with mine in the hope that we'd somehow end up with another couple that we could stand to double-date with. Next time I'll just have Dr. Frankenstein cook us up a nice pair.

No, really, it wasn't that bad. I've concluded that you can safely set up friends on dates if you safeguard yourself by following a few simple rules.

1. Never, ever raise high expectations. I don't care if you're setting Sean Penn up with Madonna to create the match of the century. Never say somebody's gorgeous, really hot, or even cute. People have different standards of good-looking (one person's really hot can be another's cool to lukewarm), and a date that starts with a whispered, "I thought you said he was cute!" usually ends in disaster.

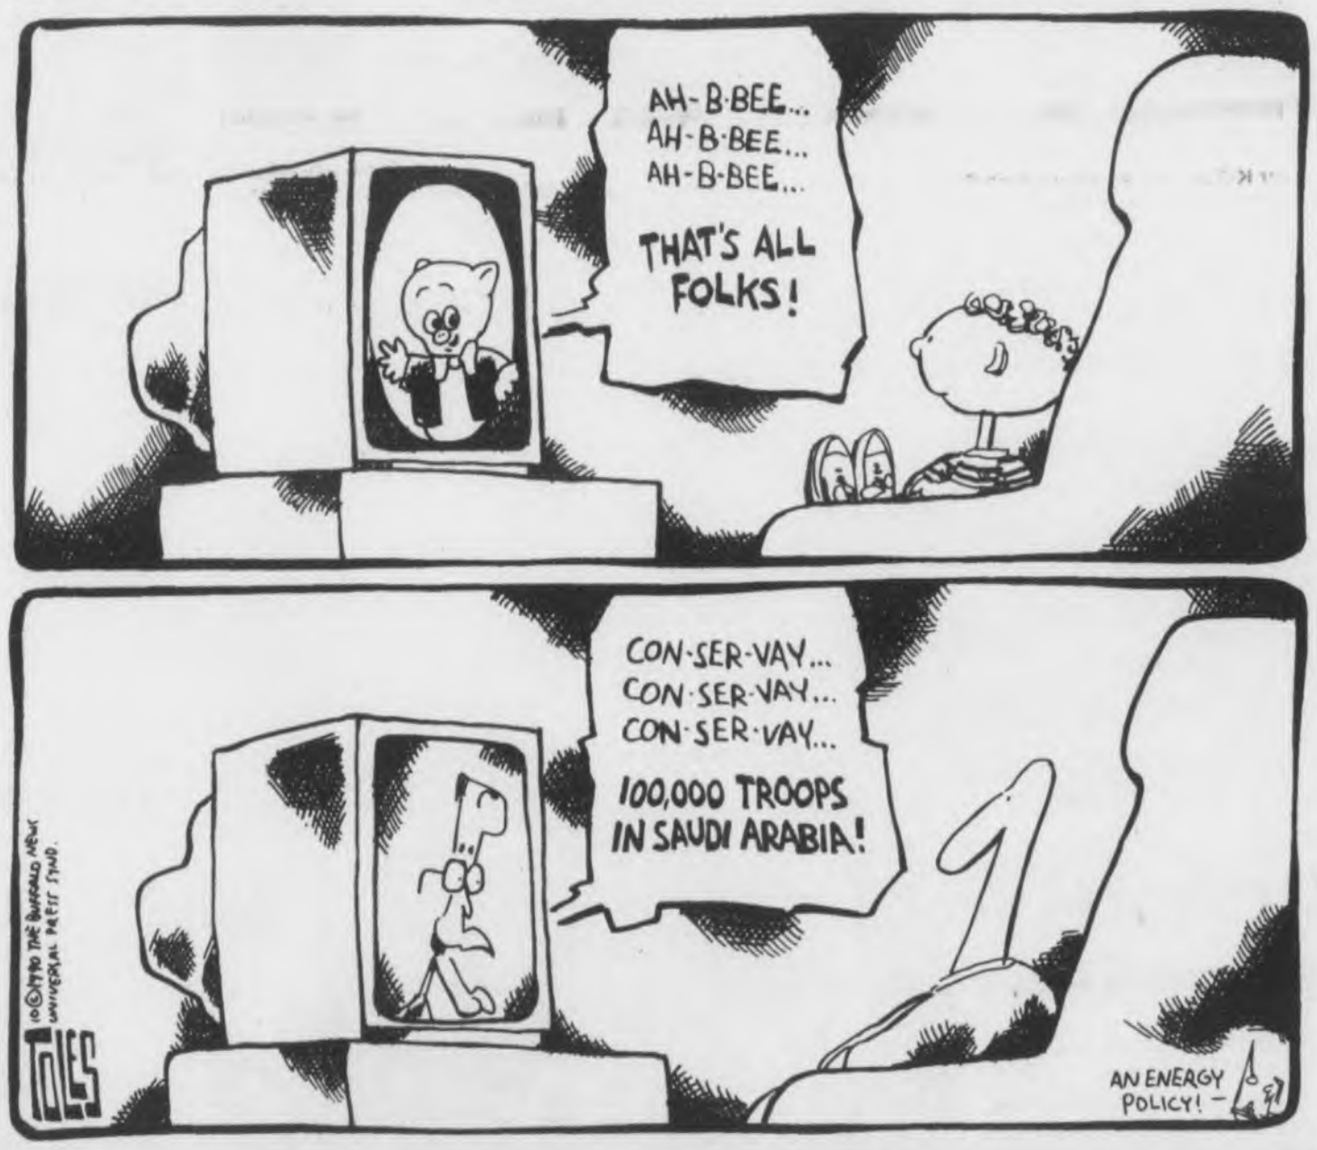
On the other hand, there's no need to go to extremes. Everybody knows what "She has a good sense of humor" means. I usually limit myself to admitting that he or she has the required number of eyes and ears and that they're all in the usual places.

2. Never, ever raise high expectations. I'm talking relationship expectations this time. It's cool to set people up for a party, but not for a lifetime. Never say, "You're perfect for each other," or "I'm sure you'll like him." Nobody's ever figured out whether "opposites attract" or "birds of a feather flock together," and whichever one you're betting on is bound to be wrong.

To be on the safe side, it's best to stick with "I'm sure you won't decide you hate each other until you've known each other for at least 10 minutes." Anyway, I've given up setting up people based on things in common and thinking they'll like each other. If they're both free on the same night, that's enough for me. I've seen enough matches that I can't figure out to know that nothing I think matters really matters.

3. Character references are fine, but don't promise anything that you wouldn't bet a week's salary on. Of course, you wouldn't set your friend up with anybody you don't know, would you? Or anyone your boyfriend or girlfriend doesn't know? Or anyone your brother's cousin's roommate's aunt on her mother's side doesn't know? Of course not. But with all these exchanges of information, some may have gone astray. Check the date out in advance. Then you can safely say things like "I'm pretty sure he won't try anything if you're alone, but he's small and I think you can beat him up if he does," or "She doesn't look like Bruce Willis' date in 'Blind Date,' but here's a tranquilizer gun just in case."

4. The fourth and final rule is: Make no promises. People tend to behave differently on blind dates than they do in real life. This is the time to cover your behind. "I think he'll show up," or you can say, "I expect she'll talk to you for at least five minutes before she tries to pick up another guy." "I'm pretty sure he bought beer" is always encouraging for a party date, and "I don't think she'll fall asleep" is good for a movie.



I admit, blind dates can be successful. Sometimes, fate must interfere where I refuse to do so and guide people together. I just set 'em up and leave 'em be.

I can tell hundreds of stories about successful blind dates — everybody knows somebody who's parents met on one. My roommate and her boyfriend met when another friend asked my roommate and I which one of us wanted to go to a party. I said I would go, but somehow I ended up not going and my roommate went instead. That was more than two years ago, and they're still going strong. I'm not sure he would have asked me out on two dates. Fate definitely had a hand in that one.

Then there are the horror stories — the blind dates who traded dates with another couple halfway through the evening, and the one where both of the people you set up insist on talking to you the whole night and never exchange an entire sentence. Then there is the friend who hasn't forgiven you for setting her up with the guy who spent the whole night talking about his pet llama, Ralphie, and the countless blind dates who never show up at all and then say, "I got back together with my ex at the last minute. Sorry."

Then there are blind dates where they go, they have fun, they part friends and that's the end of it. At least then you don't have to worry that if someday they get married and have 12 kids and she leaves him for the diaper services guy, he'll hate you forever and make you babysit.

There are also the exceptions. My boyfriend and I set two friends up for a party. I told her he'd be a gentleman. He told him she was cute. "You'll like each other," we said. Believe it or not, they did. But hey — sometimes you've gotta break the rules.

LETTERS

Column miserable

Editor,

This letter is a response to Jana Leep's column in the Sept. 26 edition of the Collegian.

It is a shame that you live in a world which emphasizes such despair. You obviously have not considered the fact that the mystery of beauty and goodness exists just as much as the mystery of bad and evil. You should feel fortunate to live in a society which acknowledges your presence with a "Hello, how are you?" Yes, many times this question can be regarded as a euphemism, although well-intended. We all live in a world involving ups and downs, but if you choose to emphasize the downs, then you have made your decision to wallow in misery and self-pity.

Please excuse the people, Leep, who do not wish to hear the dreary details of how awful you feel on any given day. My suggestion is that you deal with the problem yourself and get on with life.

No, you probably will not care what kind of coffin you will lie in when you are dead, yet for those who loved and cared for you, it will be their way of showing their final respect when your time comes. What is wrong with that? No, it is not pleasant to watch a mother and her child being photographed for the purpose of a possible future identification, but at least measures are being taken toward finding a lost or abducted individual. Yes, automobile accidents do sound better than "two humans involved in a bloody metal collision." The details to "automobile accidents" are none of your business. Only family members and individuals directly affected by an accident are "privileged" to hear the horrifying details. Would you really want to hear those details day after day? Why don't you just have lunch at the morgue every day if you are so interested in morbid details.

No, Leep, many things are not well and good, but many more things in this world are. Events themselves do not hurt us or make us miserable. It is our reaction and the direction we choose to take once we are caught up in them that does.

The way we live is a decision. Articles emphasizing the bad merely cause people to focus on it. Instead of writing miserable journalism when you are feeling miserable, spare us until you are finished with your pity party, and then write us a piece of literature from which we may gain something to contribute to society.

The only risk you took was a lack of creative effort and an excuse to whine and complain. Speak your world into existence by focusing on what is good while maintaining a realistic perspective. It will make you feel better, and your readers feel better too.

Boozer looks toward Hall of Fame

Sports Information/File

Former K-State all-American Bob Boozer (31) plays defense against Missouri early in his career as a Wildcat. Boozer will be inducted into the K-State Athletic Hall of Fame Friday night.

K-State Athletic Hall of Fame

Bob Boozer

By Scott Paske
Sports Reporter

The induction of basketball great Bob Boozer into the K-State Athletic Hall of Fame Friday has an ironic twist.

The former Wildcat standout almost became a Cyclone.

"I wanted to transfer to Iowa State after my freshman year," said Boozer, an Omaha, Neb., native. "The talent we had here was not equalled by any other school in the conference at the time, and I didn't think I'd ever get to play here."

As the understudy to all-America center Jack Parr, Boozer felt the writing was on the wall. Then Coach Tex Winter stepped in.

"He called me into his office because he had heard from the Iowa State coach that I'd written to him about going there," Boozer said. "I told him that I didn't know if I could make the transition from center to forward like he was asking me to.

"He told me, 'Bob, I understand your feelings, but I guarantee you if you work hard over the summer and improve, you'll be one of my starting forwards next year.' So I worked like hell."

The work produced three seasons of eye-popping statistics from the 6-foot-8, 220-pound, perimeter ace. Boozer, playing long before the evolution of the 3-point field goal, averaged 21.9 points and 10.7 rebounds per game and finished as the school's all-time leading scorer.

In the 31 seasons since Boozer departed K-State for an 11-year professional career, only Mike Evans, Steve Henson and Rolando Blackman have amassed more points.

"I have to give credence to my teammates for my success," Boozer said. "In all my accomplishments, I'm thankful after the fact for the great teammates I had. We had good shooters, height, balance and speed. We could win games with the fast break or a set offense."

K-State posted a 62-15 mark during Boozer's career, including a 25-2 record his senior year in which the 'Cats finished the regular season atop the Associated Press and United Press International polls. K-State was knocked out of the NCAA Tournament by Cincinnati and superstar Oscar Robertson.

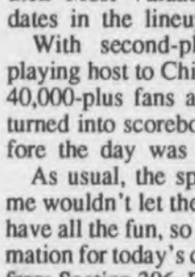
"It was a great season and one that provided many fond memories," Boozer said. "We finished 14-0 in the league and defeated KU with Wilt Chamberlain. Tex did an excellent job of molding that team."

Boozer, a two-time all-America selection, stayed out of professional basketball for one season to play in the 1960 Olympics. That team, featuring Boozer, Robertson, Jerry West, Jerry Lucas and Walt Bellamy, continued the United States' dominance of the sport by winning the gold medal.

"There were so many incredible players on that team," Boozer said. "One voting body selected it as the greatest Olympic team ever assembled."

Boozer played with Chicago, Seattle and Milwaukee during his NBA career. During Boozer's final season, the Bucks won the NBA championship by defeating the Baltimore Bullets in four games.

"Winning a world championship was a great thrill," Boozer said. "To play with the likes of Oscar Robertson and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar was really something."



Today, Boozer is the director of legislative and community affairs for U.S. West Communications in Omaha.

Boozer said Friday's ceremony carries great personal importance.

"Athletics provided a lot of real highs for me," Boozer said. "I'd have to say that the hall-of-fame recognition ranks up there with the Olympic gold medal.

"To be recognized by the institution where it all started is a tremendous feeling for me. K-State was the launching pad for both my athletic and business careers."

Pirates' victory top story

Scott Paske
SPORTS REPORTER

The lead story on ESPN's daily Sports Center program is usually a great measuring tool of the significance of the day's happenings. The few times I've attended the cable giant's top news event have been some of my greatest memories as a sports fan.

Add Sunday's top story to that list.

A few hours after K-State completed its 38-6 thumping of New Mexico Saturday, I started the trek eastward down I-70 to St. Louis. Twenty-two hours, 750 miles and two bloodshot eyes later, I returned to Manhattan after witnessing the Pittsburgh Pirates win the National League East title.

Never mind the fact that I'm a Pirates' fan. I'm sure all the skeptics are wondering when this small-town Kansas boy jumped on that once-lowly team's bandwagon. I think the scum ring around the headband of my Pittsburgh cap testifies to a lengthy allegiance.

No matter what team is No. 1, Sunday was a heckuva day to be at the old ballpark. Pittsburgh's magic number was down to one. The Pirates sent the likely Cy Young Award winner to the mound and had both of their Most Valuable Player candidates in the lineup.

With second-place New York playing host to Chicago, most of the 40,000-plus fans at Busch Stadium turned into scoreboard watchers before the day was over.

As usual, the sports journalist in me wouldn't let the sports fan in me have all the fun, so I compiled information for today's column — "Diary from Section 396, Row 10, Seat 10."

■ 12:10 p.m. — I go through the turnstile, and I am handed a green card. Memories of college enrollment and $1 off a large pizza go through my head, but this turns out to be a coupon for a free ticket to a Cardinals' game next season. I decide right there that I like Fan Appreciation Day at Busch Stadium.

■ 12:33 p.m. — The Pirates take batting practice and shag flies with ear-to-ear grins on their faces. Being in first place is nice, but don't these guys realize that the fat lady hasn't sung yet? I hope their minds are where they should be today.

■ 1:05 p.m. — Ten minutes before the first pitch. The scoreboard shows Chicago leading New York 2-0 in the second inning at Shea Stadium. It would be nice to see the Cubs add about 10 more runs, but I like what I see anyway.

■ 1:19 p.m. — Cardinal starter Joe Magrane works through the top of Pittsburgh's order looking like Sandy Koufax, indicating the next couple of hours will be a classic pitcher's duel.

■ Bottom of the second inning — Cardinal third baseman Terry Pendleton doubles down the left-field line and moves to third on a ground out. The home fans start the rally cries, but Pirate pitcher Doug Drabek retires the side without damage — except for a fan with an accelerated heartbeat in 396-10-10.

■ Top of the seventh — Magrane yields his second hit of the game, an infield single to Pirate MVP candidate Bobby Bonilla. The lefty comes back to mow down likely MVP Barry Bonds and Jeff King, leaving the score 0-0. The Mets have moved ahead of the Cubs 5-2, and the chance of a Pittsburgh celebration today is starting to look uncertain.

■ Bottom of the eighth — Drabek has just restored certainty by breezing through the Cardinals in the seventh, and the Pirate offense responds. Catcher Don Slaught singles to center, Jose Lind follows with a single to right, and Drabek lays down a two-strike bunt, beating the throw to load the bases.

Even the Cardinals' fans sense that Pittsburgh's golden hour has arrived. To their delight, Gary Redus lifts a sacrifice fly that scores pinch runner John Cangelosi. Their attitude: a good Met is a second-place Met. St. Louis will get two chances to erase Drabek's 2-0 lead.

■ 3:30 p.m. — Cardinal pinch hitter Denny Walling grounds to Jose Lind. He flips to Sid Bream for the final out. No more worrying about the Mets. Pittsburgh, for the first time in 11 years, has won a division title. The dugout empties on to the field, and the crowd roars its approval.

Georgia Tech moves into AP's Top 25 poll

By The Associated Press

ATLANTA — There was a time when Georgia Tech frequently occupied a spot among the nation's elite in The Associated Press poll.

That was during the days when Bobby Dodd was compiling a 165-64-8 record in 22 years. But when he left after the 1966 season, Tech's football program tumbled.

Bobby Ross is trying to get the Yellow Jackets back where they used to be.

His team achieved one goal Monday, moving to No. 23 in the AP's nationwide poll of sports writers and broadcasters. It was the first time Tech appeared in the poll since 1985, when the Jackets were ranked as high as No. 12 and ended the season 19th with a 9-2-1 record.

"There's not any real special significance being ranked for the first time since I've been at Tech," said Ross, who left Maryland in 1987. "I think it's a nice honor. The goal is not to just get there, but it is to stay there and show a consistency in there, not only in this season but in the years to come."

Golf team falls to 10th

The K-State men's golf team slipped a notch to 10th place after the second round of play in the Mizuno Peach State Invitational in Greensboro, Ga.

There is a two-way tie for first between Southwest Louisiana and Augusta College at 598 in the team competition. K-State is 34 shots back at 632.

Brett Vuillemin and Bill Graham lead the 'Cats with two-round totals of 157, 13 over par. Rounding out the K-State scores are Will Siebert, 158; Richard Laing, 162; and Greg Roberts, 167.

"I guess my expectations were a little too high coming into the tournament," said K-State coach Russ Bunker. "A majority of our kids are playing in their first college tournament."

Bunker said the play of his two top returnees — Vuillemin and Laing — has been a disappointment.

The tournament concludes with 18 holes today.

Defensive honors awarded to Barta

By David Svoboda
Sports Editor

For the second time in two years, K-State's Brooks Barta has been named Big Eight Conference Defensive Player of the Week.

The sophomore linebacker won his latest Big Eight honor in a split vote over Missouri cornerback Maurice Benson, a Manhattan native, and Oklahoma middle linebacker Chris Wilson.

Barta had eight tackles as K-State beat favored New Mexico 38-6 Saturday in KSU Stadium.

His play had head coach Bill Snyder and defensive coordinator Bob Cope singing Barta's praises Monday.

"I'm sure Brooks is deserving, as he always has probably deserved being in contention for the honor week in and week out," Snyder said.

"He has a lot of intrinsic values a lot of youngsters don't have," Snyder said. "He's always where he's supposed to be, doing what he's supposed to be doing."

Cope said Barta's size — or lack thereof — is not a major drawback. The 6-foot, 215 pounder makes up for his frame in many ways, Cope said.

"If you go up to the board and put up all the physical characteristics for a Big Eight linebacker, he doesn't have many," he said. "But if you put up the intangible qualities, he has an overabundance of them. Brooks certainly falls into the category of an overachiever."

Barta's first conference player of the week honor came in late September 1989 when he made 19 tackles against Northern Illinois in a home loss.

Following the 1989 season, the Associated Press honored Barta by naming him the Big Eight Defensive Newcomer of the Year. He had 81 tackles, 36 unassisted.

Through four games in 1990, Barta has registered 36 tackles. He logged his first 3½ quarterback sacks of the year against New Mexico, accounting for minus-47 yards for the Lobos.

The Big Eight's Offensive Player of the Week was Missouri quarterback Kent Kiefer, who completed 20 of 33 passes for 279 yards and two touchdowns in the Tigers' 30-9 upset of then-21st-ranked Arizona State.

"He had his worst game the week before," said Tiger coach Bob Stull. "This time, facing the team that had rejected him in the past, and being televised back to his hometown, his ability to bounce back mentally and perform as he did was one of the main differences. People don't realize the importance of this game to him."

Kiefer was chosen over K-State wide receiver Michael Smith.

Manhattan preschool to integrate special education children this fall

By Cindy Jeffrey
Collegian Reporter

Sean Cheatum is 3 years old and has cerebral palsy. He is in a wheelchair. But this year he's attending preschool just like any other 3-year-old.

For the first time, the K-State Early Childhood Lab, in cooperation with the Manhattan-Ogden Unified Public School District 383, is providing an integrated classroom for 3- and 4-year-old children with special needs.

"They are all children first," said Ann Hawks, head teacher at the lab. "They have more in common than not."

Integrating, or mainstreaming, means handicapped children and non-handicapped children are together, Hawks said. The child with special needs is not pulled out of the class for therapy, but rather the therapist comes into the classroom.

"Young children tend to do what is therapeutic naturally," Hawks said.

The other children get actively involved, which is much better than an adult trying to show a child what to do, she said.

"I love this program so much," said Ulrike Cheatum, Sean's mother. "The children treat Sean like any other child. When I see that, I feel normal too. Well, not normal, but like every other parent — not different because my child has cerebral palsy," she said.

The program is just as valuable to the non-handicapped child, Hawks said. They learn how to be helpful and do a lot of problem solving by figuring out ways for Sean to be involved in activities.

"The beautiful thing about this age, before five, is that children's values and biases are just being formed," Hawks said. "What they learn now will be invaluable as they grow into productive adults."

Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 wrote a grant to offer educational services to 3- and 4-year-olds, said Laura Clark, director of special education services for the district.

The salaries of the head teacher and two para-professionals are paid for in part by the grant. The district also provides the services of the district's social worker, psychologist, speech/hearing specialist, occupational and physical therapists and vision consultants, Clark said.

"The state of Kansas will require all school districts to provide this, beginning in 1991. We wanted to get started now," Clark said.

Because of an existing connection with the lab and the willingness of the University to provide the facility, the integrated program became a reality this past summer.

"We are very excited about this program and working with USD 383," said Susan Wanska, professor of human development and family studies.

The lab trains students in early childhood education and provides a research site, as well as serving the families of the community, Wanska said.

"We knew about the first of August we would have a child with a wheelchair attending this fall," Hawks said.

She contacted Sigrid Vovk, accountant with the Department of Human Development and Family Studies about a ramp.

A request for a ramp was submitted to Gretchen Holden, coordinator of services for the physically limited, Vovk said.

"I thought I knew every place on campus without handicap access," Holden said. "But this came out of the blue."

Sean Cheatum was wheeled up the new ramp in a ribbon-breaking ceremony, Oct. 1, followed by his schoolmates.

New Currents grows in numbers, plans

By Cari Richert
Collegian Reporter

Jazz, new age and fusion music is encouraged by New Currents, a music appreciation club which will meet tonight at 6 p.m. in Seaton Court.

The primary goal of New Currents is to "broaden the horizons of college students by exposing them to new artists and new types of music," said Jeanne Purduski, club vice president and senior in industrial engineering.

Eric Bunt, club president and senior in electrial engineering, said the most common question people ask is if New Currents performs. The answer is no — New Currents doesn't perform — but it does meet informally each week to attend listening sessions, concerts and plan traveling tours to surrounding cities.

This semester, the club went to the Manhattan Jazz Festival at the Sunset Zoo and attended a George Winston concert on campus.

Active membership of the group has grown from 8 to 17 people since Brunt and Purdunski founded the club last fall. That number is expected to increase because of student interest shown at the K-State Union Activities Carnival.

Club member Charles Kulp, graduate student in economics, said one of the best benefits from being part of New Currents is that members are eligible for discount rates on records and concert tickets when purchased as a group.

Because of the increase in participation, the club has been encouraged to sponsor campus activities. The club's main semester goal is to coordinate a one-night jazz festival on campus. The club also hopes to sponsor a noon-hour concert in the Union.

They plan to promote interest in their group by having announcements played on KSDB-FM's Jazz Show and posted in the Collegian and wearing their newly designed New Currents shirts and sweatshirts.

Alice Hall, freshman in arts and sciences undecided, joined New Currents after she saw an ad in the paper.

"I am mostly interested in listening to jazz, going to places and knowing about concerts ahead of time," Hall said.

The club usually meets in the Union on Sunday or Tuesday nights at 6:45 p.m. for business, and then moves to a member's house to listen to music in a more comfortable atmosphere.

Nobel laureates inspires student

By Kimis Timotheadis
Staff Reporter

A senior in biochemistry had the opportunity this summer to work in the same environment as Nobel Prize winners.

James Wassenberg spent six weeks last summer at the University of Dallas Health Science Center as part of an internship.

He said the offices of two Nobel laureates were down the hallway from his lab.

"We really didn't work with them, but they gave us a couple of lectures," he said. "It was nice working in an environment just knowing that Nobel laureates were around."

He said it made him motivated and willing to work harder.

"I didn't want them to be disappointed in me, especially because I didn't know what my professors from here had said in the references about me," he said.

"I wanted to work hard for my own satisfaction and because I wanted my professor here, Dr. Mueller, to feel proud of me," Wassenberg said. "If you do well, the professors down there can write you a good reference to get into graduate school."

He said he learned how to do things on his own and at the same time learned how to communicate with others on a scientific basis.

"In science, when you try something, there is no room for an ego," he said. "You never even come close to knowing everything. You have to discuss with other scientists, and get their opinions."

Wassenberg said that he had the opportunity to learn new information, and he also saw what it is like to be a graduate student.

"It gave me a good idea of what graduate school will be like, and it also made me decide what I really want to do with my life," Wassenberg said.

He said he now knows what specific field, out of the many in biochemistry, he wants to follow — protein chemistry.

Delbert Mueller, assistant professor of biochemistry and Wassenberg's adviser, said internships are a big step in students' careers.

"Internships are a good chance for students to get exposed to other students and research and for students to have the opportunity to try something on their own," Mueller said.

He said that there were three interns from the Department of Biochemistry this summer, something that

Mueller said he is impressed with the rising number of undergraduates in biochemistry and with their outstanding quality.

Wassenberg said he recommends internships for everyone.

"Everyone should apply for an internship, anywhere," he said. "You can decide what you really want to do in your life — something which is very important for every individual who just starts his career."

If the hearing examiner decides in Montaner's favor, he would issue an order to Bushwackers to be approved by the commission, he said.

The decision could be appealed in a state district court, he said.

The examiner can award up to $2,000 for pain and suffering to the complaintant. He can also issue a cease-and-desist order if the accused is still engaged in unlawful practice.

The commission provides a representative for the complaintant but does not provide a personal attorney to either party, Lay said.

equally well.

Walker gives a wonderfully nasty performance as the greedy and sometimes underhanded agent. His combination of singing and acting talents shouldn't be missed.

Though Watson doesn't have as many solos as Walker and Lewis, she proves herself exceptionally competent in those she does have. Her musical gifts are, unfortunately, not allowed the attention they surely deserve. That is not to say she should have had Lewis' role. It is our loss that "Dreamgirls" doesn't allow for more attention to be paid to the character of Lorrell.

Though there is little opportunity to sample the musical abilities of Bryant, his acting skills seriously rival those of Walker. Here we find another major oversight. Casting Bryant in a role as large as his talents would have benefited the production.

"Dreamgirls" is well worth the admission price — $2 for students/seniors and $3 for adults. All performances are sold out except for Saturday's afternoon performance. About 50 tickets remain.

were left as a smoking area. When a poster sale was held earlier this fall, much of the smokers' space was used.

Larry Enochs, junior in English, said he wondered why the Union decided to move poster sales into the only dining area available to smokers.

"The old smoking section in the cafeteria was always crowded, which means there are a lot of smokers who use the Union," Enochs said. "Now that there is a smaller area, they try to crowd out on the balcony."

Connaughton said the area is proportionate to the other smoking areas on campus.

"The Union has a fair amount of space for smokers and is in good condition percentage-wise with the rest of the buildings on campus," Connaughton said.

"It is my opinion that it won't be long before the Union is mandated as smoke-free," he said.

The smoking areas in the Union include all halls except for the third floor — which is entirely non-smoking — the recreation area in the basement and the courtyard area.

Cigarettes release 200 poisons into air

By Scott Berg
Staff Reporter

Second-hand smoke has been proven to be a health hazard to non-smokers who have contact with smokers.

When smokers light a cigarette, they release 4,000 chemicals into the air, including 200 known to be poisonous. Included are DDT, arsenic, cadmium, formaldehyde and carbon monoxide, according to an American Lung Association brochure.

According to the brochure, when a cigarette, cigar or pipe is lit, the smoke enters the air in two forms, mainstream and sidestream.

Mainstream smoke is drawn into the lungs and then expelled. It joins sidestream smoke, which goes directly into the air, to form second-hand smoke.

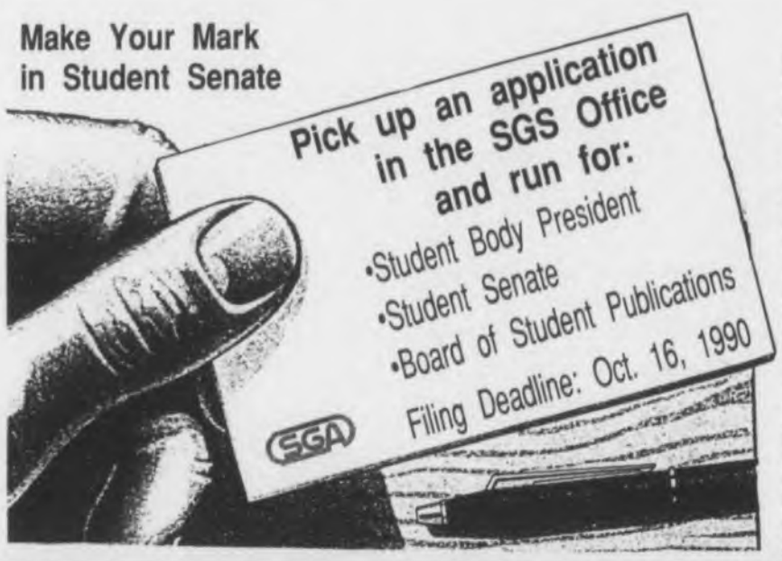
Sidestream smoke contains higher amounts of harmful compounds — including tar, nicotine and carbon monoxide — than mainstream smoke, according to the brochure. Carbon monoxide robs the blood of oxygen. Several of the other substances are suspected of causing cancer.

"The farther the non-smoker is from the smoker, the more diluted the smoke particles become in the air," said Jean-Pierre Perchellet, associate professor in biology. "The smaller particles travel farther and are more dangerous. They can get into the cells easier."

According to the brochure, most of the smoke in a room is the result of sidestream smoke, which results in passive smoking when non-smokers breathe it.

Second-hand smoke is especially bad for smokers' children, according to brochure. They have a higher rate of lung diseases in their first two years of life than babies of non-smokers. Other problems brought on by smoking include impaired lung function, asthma attacks and doubled chances for acute respiratory illnesses.

"A child of a heavy smokers has an increased risk for respiratory problems," Perchellet said.



Smoke affects asthma by irritating the lungs and knocking out their resistance, causing increased chances for an attack, said Cindy Burke, health educator at Lafene Student Health Center.

There needs to be more education on smoking, Perchellet said. People don't realize the dangers because nothing happens for a long time and because some people are more resistant to effects of smoke than others are, he said.

Many individuals won't accept the facts and don't believe they play a direct role in harming others, Burke said.

"The present trend is to be a non-smoker, and people are becoming health conscious," she said. "Society is putting pressure on smokers to quit and designating areas where they can and can't smoke."

One-country German flag waves again

By The Associated Press

BERLIN — The Western Allies ceded their post-war occupation powers Tuesday as the clock ticked toward the historic moment when East Germany will be absorbed, with all its problems, into a new united Germany.

A vast party across the land of 78 million people was getting under way in anticipation of the midnight unification of Germany, with fireworks and ceremonies to last through Thursday. Today has been declared a national holiday.

Police in Goettingen near the disappearing East German-West German border reported 1,000 leftist protesters opposed to unification rampaged through the city late Tuesday, breaking store windows and chanting "Never Again Germany!" and "Nazis out!"

Police were gearing up for trouble from rightist and leftist radicals planning demonstrations in central Berlin, where the Berlin Wall used to stand. Hundreds of riot police assembled near Leipziger Street in East Berlin, a march route for radicals from the west.

City authorities banned demonstrations near the Brandenburg Gate, the 200-year-old monument that will be a focus of celebrations, which start at the nearby Reichstag, the old German parliament building.

The broad thoroughfares east and west of the Brandenburg Gate were thronged with tens of thousands of people hours before the historic occasion, and many vendors were selling food, drinks and souvenirs.

About 150 to 200 leftist radicals lined a police barrier outside the Schauspielhaus, blowing whistles and jeering at dignitaries arriving for a formal state ceremony hosted by the departing East German government.

The radicals chanted "Germany, drop dead!"

The arriving dignitaries included West Berlin Mayor Walter Momper and Hans-Jochen Vogel, chairman of the Social Democratic party.

They were rushed into the historic house, under heavy police guard. The Schauspielhaus is in the eastern part of the city, a few hundred yards from where Checkpoint Charlie used to be.

Chancellor Helmut Kohl said in a statement to the Frankfurter Allgemeine newspaper that the new Germany will help stabilize Europe, and that it would not be a restless Reich like Nazi Germany, which plunged Europe into its most disastrous war.

The unification of Germany is a "European, indeed a world event of historic rank," Kohl said.

Several German newspapers published the approved verse of the national anthem to be sung in unified Germany — not the old "Deutschland Ueber Alles" verse — but the third verse, which starts: "Unity and Justice and Freedom for the German fatherland."

The verse admonishes Germany to bloom, not to be above all, the old mission that frightens some Europeans.

The Soviets agreed to let united Germany remain in NATO and to remove their troops by the end of 1994, although Germany is paying Moscow $9.5 billion to finance the withdrawal. The Allies will keep troops in West Berlin until the Soviets leave.

The last formal steps to clear the way for unity were taken mostly by the foreign powers who defeated Nazi Germany and retained legal powers as occupiers in Berlin.

In New York on Monday, President Bush and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze were present for the signing of a declaration of a suspension of the Allies' special powers.

Student assaulted on campus

Case still under investigation

By Elvyn Jones
Staff Reporter

The on-campus beating of a student is under investigation by the K-State Police department.

Ed Skoog, sophomore in English, said he was assaulted by three men while walking on Lover's Lane Drive in front of Justin Hall about 10:20 Saturday evening.

After first shouting at him from a car, Skoog said the three men got out and tried to provoke him into a physical confrontation. One man put a beer on the hood of the car, and other beers were on the dash of the car, but Skoog said he did not think the men were intoxicated.

Skoog said he was attempting to reason with the men when one hit him. This initial attack was followed by five or six more blows, he said.

The assault ended when his attackers noticed another student approaching, Skoog said.

Skoog said he went to the student's apartment, where he called the K-State Police. He said he was able to give the police the license tag number from the car his assailants were driving. He said he was told the car was from Fort Riley.

Skoog said the attack left him with a bloody nose, cut tongue and a large lump on his head. He said he is still suffering from headaches.

Detective Richard Herrman said he was trying to contact Skoog to get more details of the incident.

Skoog said the incident has made him concerned about campus safety.

"I stand 6 foot 6 inches and weigh 280 pounds," he said. "(I) have to question how safe the campus is if this can happen to me in a well-lighted area."

Jeff Gwirtz, instructor in grain science and industry, developed the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtle cereal and many others while working for the Ralston Purina Co. for eight years prior to joining the K-State faculty. Gwirtz worked to match cereal marshmallows to the cartoon Turtle's weapons.

Cowabunga! K-Stater develops Ninja Turtle cereal

By Dana Thomson
Collegian Reporter

Following the Saturday morning cartoon and the motion picture mania, the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles have found their way onto breakfast tables across America, and the heroes in a half-shell have even touched K-State.

Jeff Gwirtz, instructor in grain science and milling, helped formulate the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtle cereal. Gwirtz worked on the cereal while employed by Ralston Purina Co.

Gwirtz, a 1979 K-State graduate in milling science and management, has also worked on other cereal formulations including Dunkin' Donuts, Instant Oatmeal, Oat Bran and Bran News.

When formulating cereal content, the researcher must decide on a grain for the texture of the cereal. Gwirtz said the most difficult step in formulating cereal might be getting enough vitamin content into the product.

"You have to develop a coating that has enough sugar and salt in it for good flavor, without overriding the vitamin content," Gwirtz said.

He has also worked on products involving copyrighted material, including Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles, Barbie, Batman and Donkey Kong cereals. Occasionally, the cereal formulators must work directly with the creator.

"Sometimes you do have exposure to the product's creator. These people do have an influence on the final product," Gwirtz said. "It is their character, and their standards must be met."

Quality control was also part of Gwirtz's job. Moisture content, sugar level and ingredient quality are all aspects that need to be controlled.

Beyond the cereal, marshmallow figures are an important part of children's cereals. The formula for these figures is similar in all cereals. The shapes, however, have to be redefined for each cereal. Gwirtz said he would consider such things as what shapes are needed, what shapes could be made and how big the shapes could be. During this phase, the reseachers work with marketing personnel to establish these items.

After deciding what is needed, Gwirtz said he would send a sketch and color qualifications to the manufacturer.

"I would send them drawings and other specifications," Gwirtz said. "They would then make a test sample. I approved the final product as it came of the line."

Ralston Purina provided Gwirtz with an opportunity to work with the product's marketing department.

"This isn't always the case in larger companies," he said. "Larger companies often use a go-between, but at Ralston we sat in on the marketing meetings."

Marketing personnel frequently uses taste tests to push the new cereals, Gwirtz said. One way is going to a central location, such as a mall, and giving free samples to the public. The samplers then critique the cereal.

Another way companies perform taste tests is in homes. The cereal is distrubuted to the homes, and the users are asked to respond to the product's quality.

On the shelves, Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtle cereal is not selling well, said Randy Plummer, assistant manager of Dillons in Westloop.

Working with pre-sweetened children's cereals put Gwirtz in a position where he had to defend his work. He said he is often one of the people blamed by the public for causing tooth decay in children.

"We try to fortify these cereals with vitamins and minerals," Gwirtz said. "They don't intend for your kids to eat it all day."

State politicians view budget plan

CAMPAIGN 1990

The Issue: National Budget

By Alan Wilds
Staff Reporter

Kansas U.S. representatives and their challengers are searching for decisions on the deficit reduction plans outlined by Congress Sunday.

President Bush along with congressional leaders from both parties began the election-year task of selling their $500-billion compromise to lawmakers Monday.

The plan includes $134 billion in new taxes on gasoline, alcohol, tobacco, airline tickets, $105 billion in spending reductions for benefit programs such as Medicare and a 23 percent reduction in the five-year, $55 billion agricultural budget.

The House of Representatives is scheduled to vote on the budget plan Friday.

Jim Slattery, D-Kan., said he does not approve of the plan because it favors the wealthy and its regressive tax increase would affect rural health care.

However, he said he believes Congress may be forced to vote for the proposal because of the grim alternatives.

"Many members may end up voting for it even though they don't like it," he said. "The only alternative may be across the board budget cuts that would result in economic chaos."

Slattery said he has not decided which way to vote and critized Bush concerning his priorities.

"The president's No. 1 priority with this plan has been to keep taxes away from the rich," he said. "In my opinion, the wealthiest citizens should pay the same marginal income tax everyone else does."

The fuel tax, which is part of the proposal, also would have a much greater impact on persons with income under $50,000 a year, Slattery said.

A spokeswoman for Rep. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., said Roberts is concerned about the budget plan's effects on agriculture and farming, but has made no decision on how he will vote on the current proposal.

"At this point, we are undecided," said Sarah Coleman, Roberts' press secretary. "However, the Congressman does feel there are better ways to reduce the deficit than through increased taxes."

Roberts has always favored a freeze on government spending as an alternative to a tax increase.

Brian Gaston, press secretary for Rep. Jan Meyers, R-Kan., said Meyers' initial reaction was one of concern. However, she is examining several stages of the plan to determine her vote.

"We have concerns about the provisions of the budget plan. It certainly will not please everybody," Gaston said. "There is enough in that proposal to anger everyone when you're talking about $500 million."

A spokesman for Scott Morgan, Republican challenger for Slattery's seat in the 2nd district, said Morgan is also witholding final judgement. But, Morgan believes the budget plan reinforces his criticism of Congress, which he has expressed throughout his campaign.

"If anything, it gives him a better foundation to make his charge that Congress is not dealing with the deficit problem the way they should," said Mike Broemmel, Morgan's campaign manager.

Voters asked to support budget

Democratic head, Bush urge bill

By The Associated Press

In a 10-minute televised speech from the Oval Office, President Bush explained the $500 billion package of tax increases and spending cuts approved as a compromise in budget talks.

Bush asked taxpayers to bear a small burden initially, so that everyone will have larger burden lifted in the long run.

"Everyone will bear a small burden," he said. "But if we succeed, every American will have a large burden lifted."

Claiming rare unity with leaders of the Democratic-controlled Congress, Bush said the package was written in eight months of blood, sweat and fears of the economic chaos that would follow if the government fails to reduce the deficit.

"It is the best agreement that can be legislated now," Bush said.

Bush's address from the Oval Office was nationally televised, but his message was primarily aimed 16 blocks away at Congress, where an initial vote on the plan may be held as early as Thursday.

Although the package generally has support among Democrats, lawmakers from Bush's own party, particularly in the House, have balked at its tax provisions. Bush himself had to abandon his no new taxes pledge in the face of the growing deficit.

"The Democratic and Republican leadership tonight all speak with once voice," Bush declared.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, joined Bush in urging passage of the fragile package, saying the future of the nation is more important than partisan differences.

In a televised response, Mitchell acknowledged that Democrats and Republicans had deep differences over values and priorities that delayed an agreement for months. The Democratic leader called the agreement imperfect and warned that the compromise budget cuts and tax increases will demand sacrifice from all Americans.

"But, if enacted, it holds the promise of restoring a sound economy, from which all Americans will benefit," Mitchell said.

"Everybody who can should contribute something," Bush said.

Chinese jet crashes, 127 dead

CANTON, China (AP) — A hijacked Chinese jetliner cartwheeled into two parked jets at Canton airport Tuesday, setting off a fiery explosion, killing at least 127 people and seriously injuring 46 others.

"The plane split the jets into pieces," said a Chinese man who witnessed the crash. "It was a horrible explosion. The whole sky went red and the airport shook like an earthquake."

The crash occurred at 9 a.m., but ambulances wailed late into the night.

Court hears Oklahoma case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court was urged Tuesday to let Oklahoma City children attend neighborhood schools even though that has brought back racial imbalance.

Continued desegregation of public schools in hundreds of other American cities could be at stake as well.

Lawyers for the Bush administration and the Oklahoma City school board said formerly segregated school districts should be allowed to escape court-ordered integration plans once they achieve racial balance.

But a lawyer for some black parents in Oklahoma City said returning to neighborhood schools in a city where whites and blacks live in different areas had turned back the clock to a time when blacks and whites were required to attend separate schools.

Lawyer takes racists to court

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — A lawyer who bankrupted a Ku Klux Klan faction with a $7 million civil judgment is going after another white supremacist group with a lawsuit on behalf of the family of an Ethiopian who was beaten to death.

The $10 million wrongful death suit goes to trial Oct. 8 in another test of the idea of attacking racist groups through their wallets.

Three skinheads confessed to bludgeoning Mulugeta Seraw to death with baseball bats.

The lawsuit contends Tom Metzger, the founder of White Aryan Resistance, incited the killing by sending agents to a Portland skinhead group with a message of hate for blacks and Jews. Metzger denies the charge.

The lawsuit will be argued by Morris Dees, a lawyer for the Alabama-based Southern Poverty Law Center. He won a $7 million civil judgment three years ago against the United Klans of America after two Klansmen from Mobile, Ala., killed a 19-year-old black man.

Gas prices highest since 1981

NEW YORK (AP) — Gasoline prices at the pump rose 3.6 cents last week to an average of $1.346 for a gallon of self-serve regular unleaded.

The figures were released Tuesday in a nationwide survey by the American Automobile Association.

That puts gasoline 27.1 cents a gallon higher than on Aug. 1, the day before Iraq invaded Kuwait and threw world oil markets into chaos.

The average pump price remains below the highest ever recorded by AAA, which was $1.388 per gallon just before the 1981 Easter weekend.

Gasoline prices were up in all regions of the country, the AAA said in the survey.

The biggest price increase was found in the Great Lakes region, with sizable increases also reported in the mid-Atlantic states, the Midwest and the Southeast, AAA said.

Shooting suspect arrested

JUNCTION CITY (AP) — A young New York man sought for nearly a week in the shooting death of a Junction City man was found Monday hiding in an attic crawl space at an apartment complex.

Police said Chris Charles, also known as Chris Thomas, was arrested after an anonymous telephone tip. He had been sought on a first-degree murder warrant since the shooting Sept. 25 of Frank E. Jenkins, 26.

Jenkins died of multiple gunshot wounds in the parking lot of a different Junction City apartment complex early in the morning. The shooting occurred just hours after he was granted probation and released from the Geary County Jail on convictions of misdemeanor theft and delivery of marijuana.

Judge allows inmate to testify

OLATHE (AP) — A judge will allow a jail inmate to tell a jury about statements Richard Grissom Jr. allegedly made to implicate himself in the murders of three missing women.

Johnson County District Judge William Gray ruled Monday that the Johnson County Jail inmate was not acting as a police agent during a jail cell conversation the inmate says he had with Grissom.

The content of the inmate's claim has not been made public.

Democrats protest GOP action

TOPEKA (AP) — Democrats charged Tuesday that Gov. Mike Hayden's appointment of Nestor Weigand as head of a commision on government waste efficiency is just another re-election tactic.

Weigand, who was narrowly defeated by Hayden in the Republican primary last August, had proposed formation of such a commission during his campaign.

Sen. James Francisco, D-Mulvane, said creation of the Weigand Commission is an attempt by Hayden to shore up political support among Republicans who became disaffected during the primary. Francisco is the running mate of Democratic gubernatorial candidate Joan Finney.

"It's just window dressing," Francisco said. "He's not fooling the people with all of that."

Hayden earlier appointed another failed candidate for the Republican nomination, Richard Peckham, to head a task force that will study educational reform. Peckham came in third in the race, receiving 9 percent of the vote.

New lot not for students

The Ramada Inn, formally the University Inn, at Anderson Avenue and 17th Street has recently installed a new parking lot on the east side of the hotel.

Student parking is not allowed in the Ramada Inn lots and violators will be prosecuted, said Philip Brokenicky, president of FirstBank in Manhattan, which owns the hotel.

"The Ramada Inn provides private parking for its guests," Brokenicky said. "We will patrol our parking lot and tow away violating cars."

The Ramada Inn leases the property from the KSU Foundation.

To build the new parking lot, two buildings were demolished by construction crews. The two buildings, previously owned by the Foundation, were the occupied by International Trade Institute and Continuing Education.

The parking lot will provide more parking spaces to accomodate hotel guests.

Some people think every child in our area grows up to live happily ever after.

Young Jake would disagree.

All they ever do is fight. When he wakes up. After school. Before he goes to sleep.

Every day, children in our area live like this. Always expecting the worst. Afraid that at any moment, their families won't be families anymore.

Which is why we need your help.

Member agencies of the United Way of Riley County use your United Way gift to help families in trouble. It's money well spent.

Doing the most good. Right here.

Giving to United Way means your money helps agencies that undergo strict evaluations of their programs, staff, and facility. And that means they are better prepared to give families like Jake's the help they really need.

When you get your United Way pledge card this year, choose to help Jake and his family. Let your gift show you care.

Commerce gets more city funds

By Paul Noel
Staff Reporter

The Manhattan City Commission voted to give the Chamber of Commerce $75,000 for the 1991 Economic Development and Convention and Visitors Bureau Tuesday.

Randy Martin, chamber president, said there is a need to be more aggressive in building the local economy.

"People may choose to live in Manhattan if they have a job," Martin said, "but rarely do people come to Manhattan, buy a house and then proceed to find a job."

The city has previously given $55,000 a year to the chamber. The $20,000 increase in funding will help expand its Economic Enhancement Program.

"Its mission is to achieve a beneficial atmosphere for the future stability of the Manhattan area economy through a pro-active program of business support, encouragement and employment diversification," Martin said.

The response of people coming to visit Manhattan to consider it for the location of their business is up substantially, he said.

The program could cause a 2 to 3 percent employment growth per year and give a better handle on the economic potential of Manhattan, Martin said.

Although Martin asked the commission to give a five-year funding commitment to the development program, it voted to approve the funding yearly.

Commissioner Gene Klingler said the program is something that should be supported on a long-term basis, but the chamber will have to ask for the funding yearly.

"Technically, we are not able to provide a long-term commitment, but the six-year financial forecast would allow for the $75,000 each year," said Michael Conduff, city manager.

Martin said he thinks that industry in Manhattan will increase as a part of the economy as support increases.

The commission also heard arguments for urban area rezoning and voted against changing lots on Dondee Drive in the Stagg Hill area from single-family to two-

United Way of Riley County kicked off its K-State campaign Tuesday in the K-State Union Ballroom.

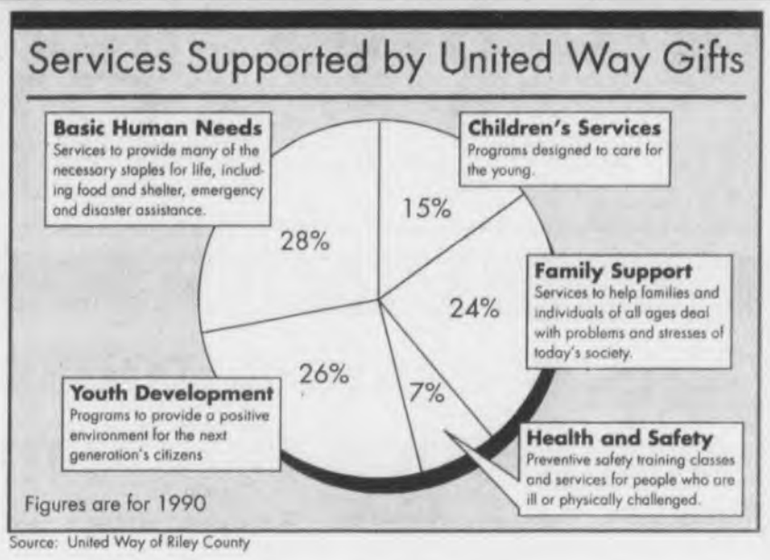
More than 300 people attended the start of the "I'll Be There ... Because We Care" 1990 campaign.

"This is going to be a high-energy, short time-frame campaign," said Gary Walter, campaign chairman.

Walter stressed the importance of the 600 campaign volunteers whose efforts will determine the success or failure of the campaign.

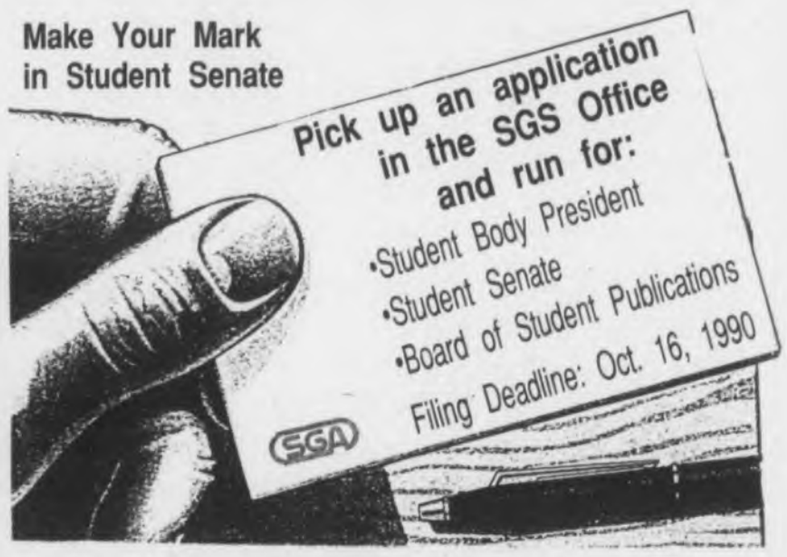
"This is a community effort and we thank all of you for your commitment," he said.

The K-State Pep Band played "Wildcat Victory" and threw footballs printed with the campaign's $500,000 goal into the crowd.



The United Way lends support and funding to 14 agencies in Manhattan, including the American Red Cross, Big Brothers and Big Sisters, the Crisis Center Inc., the Flint Hills Breadbasket and the Manhattan Emergency Shelter.

"These programs and others like them are essential to our community," said Dennis Mullin, a United Way community volunteer. "The United Way Agencies are there to help solve problems."



Mullin said the United Way strength is people.

"Each one of us can make a difference," Mullin said. "If we step forward, we will make a difference."

Funding by United Way is targeted to meet needs in Manhattan and Riley County.

Cases against tobacco companies ridiculous

Some people are too greedy.

A family in Mississippi recently sued a tobacco company and a distributor for $17 million after a family member died after smoking 2 packs of cigarettes a day for 35 years.

That's 25,550 packs of cigarettes.

The jury decided 9-3 that smoking had caused the death of 50-year-old Nathan Henry Horton, but determined the tobacco company wasn't the only culprit and declined to award money to the family.

What a revelation. Whether or not the tobacco company acted in an irresponsible way, as the jury said, such a lawsuit is a waste of time and money for the judicial system.

A related court case awarded a New Jersey widower $400,000 in 1988 after his wife died from lung cancer. An appeals court has since overturned the award and ordered a new trial.

If juries began to award in favor of plaintiffs in such trials, the effects would be felt by more than tobacco companies. Such logic would allow people to sue candy and soda manufacturers after getting cavities. Would alcoholics or families of alcoholics be allowed to take distilleries to court?

It is a fact that smoking is not healthy. It is sad Horton's family was unable to stop him from smoking while there was a chance, assuming they tried. It is sadder yet his family would use such a poor excuse to benefit from his death.

Yearly ticket campout needs reconsideration

K-State basketball.

Across Kansas, it conjures memories of Mitch and Steve, Rolando and Big Ed, Jack Hartman and Lon Kruger. Big Eight championships, NCAA tourneys and KU rivalries. Traditions in basketball abound at K-State.

But if you ask students on campus about K-State basketball, you will probably get a curious answer mentioning "the Campout."

Tradition has it that students should camp out for tickets. Great, another positive sports tradition for our University.

But does tradition have it that students should spend up to two weeks in near- or sub-zero temperatures? Or that they should skip a number of classes, throw footballs across a busy street, obstruct traffic and literally trash University grounds? Or that students should consume alcohol on campus grounds during this event?

Perhaps the students, administration or Department of Intercollegiate Athletics ought to override the Athletic Ticket Sales Committee's decision. Tradition has not always proven to be a good thing.

In her short story "The Lottery," author Shirley Jackson shows how unquestioned traditions may be wrong and harmful. She also shows how following unquestioned traditions blindly can end in real trouble.

In her story, a run-of-the-mill small town meets for an annual lottery, a tradition that has been the town's big event for almost as long as anyone can remember. She builds tension by showing the people's anticipation as they pick their lottery tickets.

Once the winner is announced, she is congratulated and then stoned to death. The people in the story fail to see the horror of this tradition, merely because they are too close to it. But readers become immediately aware of the wrongness and gasp at the blindness of the townsfolk.

In line with the cliche of not seeing the forest through the trees, perhaps we are all standing too close to the tradition of the campout.

Tradition easily recycled

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

She sat, wine in hand, thin neck between thickly wrinkled, swollen fingers, shrunken as if in a bath for at least half of a life. She sipped her first, and perhaps last, sips of wine, cackling. She is my Mother-Wise, with polished silver hair and curls wound slowly by rollers we young ones have no need for anymore. Hips like pudding, she moved as if a continent, with generations behind pushing or dragging, rooted in her porous, pale skin. I watching her, never loved anyone more for a moment as I loved her and her sloppy, wine-sipping smile.

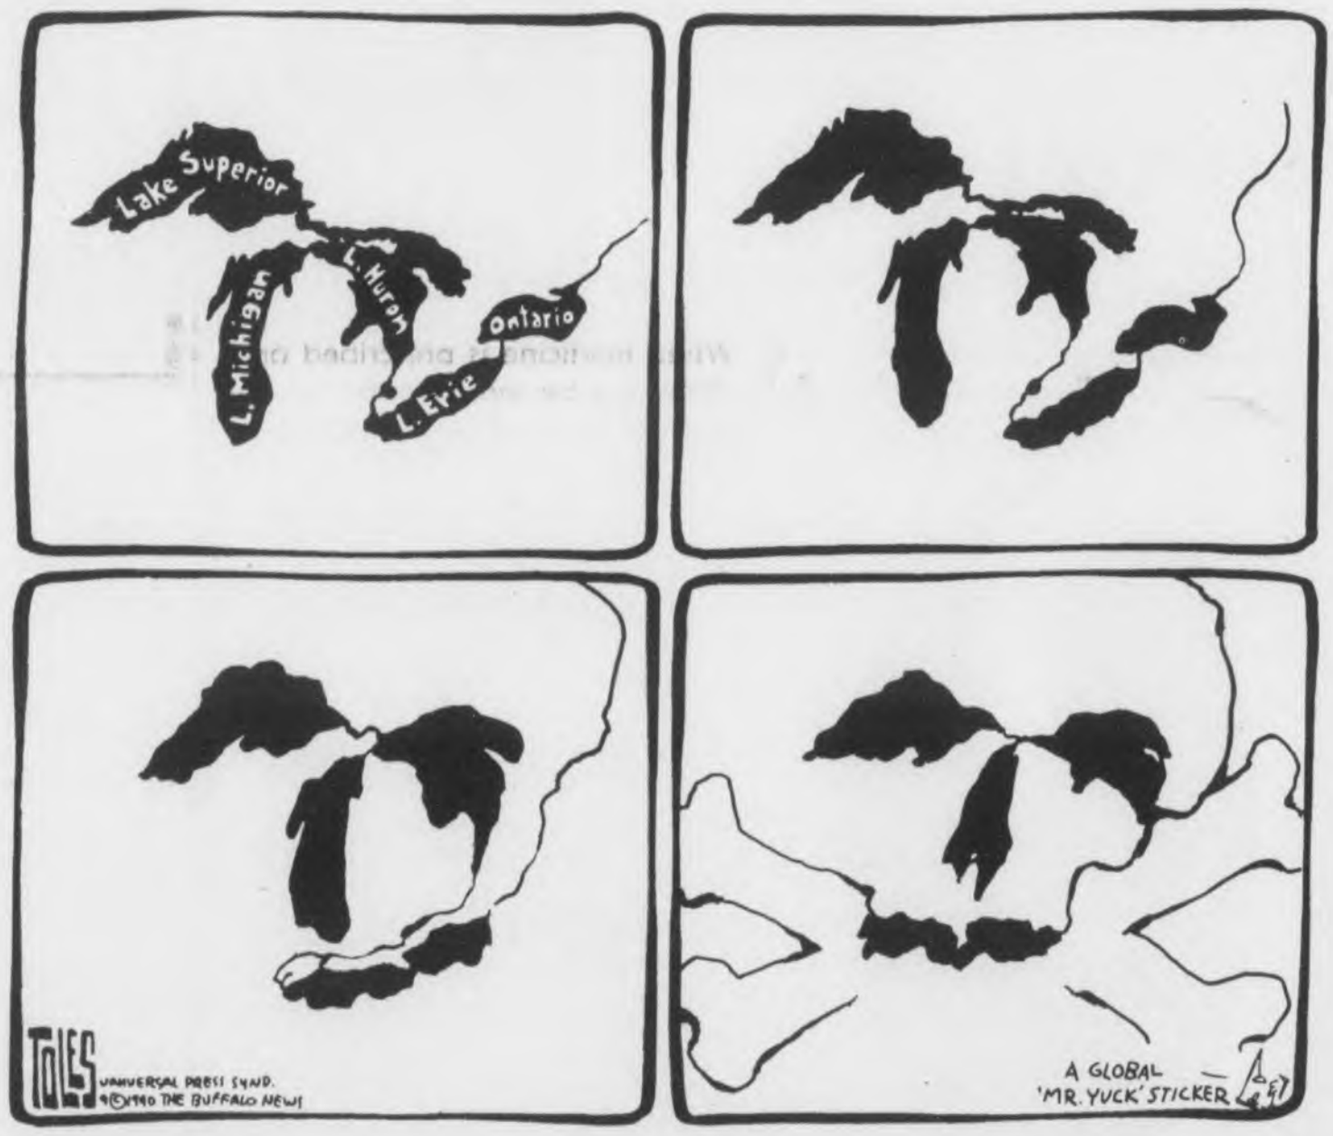
My Mother-Wise is a friend. We share a friendship through which aging skin and aged skin touch across decades and differences by holding each other's hands. A friendship through which two people share a connecting impulse that validates a beginning of life and an ending of life.

Holding my cat, I think of myself as a Mother-Wise. My Mother-Wise fed me. She washed me. She scolded me. She always loved me with such consistency and continuity that I fear her going away. My cat, if we could chat, would perhaps express that same fear.

I was supposed to visit my Mother-Wise this past weekend. I longed to drive home that Friday afternoon, through the patched pastures of color, and yet I knew the sloughing off of summer would only bring me closer to her mortality, my mortality, our mortality.

The land and the lifestyle of living within the land are hand in hand with my grandmother. Both Mother-Wise and Mother-Earth are neglected, disrespected, ignored and misused. Ethical treatment and social policy concerning the elderly and the environment parallel each other; both represent the foundations, the carriers of a value system that has been discarded.

My Mother-Wise has retained a simple way of life, where meeting basic needs is imperative. As a friend, I am able to share in her simplicity, to learn from her simplicity. But as her grandaughter, I hurt for her simplicity.



As a young mother of two children, pregnant with her third child, she visited her doctor, a man with almost heaven-ordained right over her body. This time, he took her into a special room and told her he must prepare for future complications. He must perform a special procedure. She left the office without her third child, not knowing or understanding what occurred within her, only knowing what he told her, that it was to prevent the population growth of white trash.

How things have changed and swung to the other extreme. Her history illuminates modern ethical issues, not only by showing relativity, but by exposing the exploitation possible from all sides of an issue and from all mediums of authority. These changes leave her confused. It leaves me confused. I have to ask myself, "Is there any institution with a constant nurturing presence?" The land and my Mother-Wise provide that presence, provide for me a hope and commitment to a future sustained by the values and the lifestyle of past generations.

My Mother-Wise was conserving and recycling before our modern concentrated efforts began. She lived through the Depression. Such a historical experience implanted priorities into her conscience. These priorities did not carry across into the next decade. Instead we are now having to clean up the mess, by picking up their old tools, almost as if rubbing two sticks together for energy is more than nostalgic, but is practical, sustainable and wise. We could learn from the wise of this country who have survived what most young people could not comprehend. War. Poverty. Economic Devastation. Rationing.

Why didn't I take that drive home this weekend? Time. And fear. Two foolish answers but very real. Neither should ever prevent communication. But time seems to have become a source of anguish and impatience, a non-renewable resource, that slips quickly through my clutched fingers. There is and never will be enough time. Except for the time that is within one's mind, the endless time that resides in the tasks of life that do sustain, that allow time to continue.

My Mother-Wise represents such sustaining and time-renewable tasks and values. I hope to extend her presence in my life through and to the tips of my way of living and loving in the world. The traditional must be recycled and assimilated into modern life with its limitations, parameters and technology. The elderly are a resource, but the younger generations must want to listen. The land is a resource, and the younger generations must listen, must stop ignoring and abusing its constant nurturing presence.

Remarks surprising

Editor,

I myself am surprised at Larry Garvin's remarks in the Sept. 26 article about the construction of parking lot B-1. Those five trees may not be essential to a teaching environment, but they are essential to our environment.

Garvin has a point in that the plans did go through the proper reviews. Believe it or not, there are many people who do not know what those procedures are. Most people on this campus depend on the Collegian for news about such happenings.

I am not aware of the long-term benefits this parking lot could bring. However, with all of the information available about our environment, I am surprised Garvin does not know of the need for trees. They provide necessary benefits that are, unfortunately, long-term.

We cannot replace trees as fast as we can cut them down. Convenience takes a poor second place to the needs of our environment. If it will only take a week to redesign the lot for those remaining trees, why was it not done so in the first place?

Smokers ignored

Editor,

Once again the Union shows a lack of willingness to listen to the students needs. As of this week, the Union management has closed the designated smoking area in order to permit an off-campus organization to sell posters there. After the elimination of the smoking area during the last poster sale, the Union received numerous complaints. Obviously the Union has ignored students' concerns and chosen not to respond.

Although the halls are still smoking areas, there is at this point in time no dining/smoking area. Imagine the sight of a half dozen smokers huddled around a solitary ashtray, reduced to eating lunch off their laps. Imagine them precariously balancing homework on what little lap space remains, holding a soda that really can't be put anywhere but the floor. If a person smokes, is it any reason to take away the use of tables and chairs, turning lunch into a picnic without the picnic tables or even a blanket?

The Union might be losing the business of smokers by not giving them a place to sit and eat. Smokers do eat, and like other people, would like a well-balanced meal.

The question may be whether the Union actually exists for the students or is a warehouse to hold sales and promotions for off-campus organizations. Is the Union a gathering place for students, or is it becoming a mini-mall?

A simple solution exists. The Union Courtyard has been used in the past for a variety of events including art rentals, computer sales and Open House. What makes these poster sales special? Why couldn't they be located in the courtyard, allowing the smoking area with eating tables to remain intact? The students should be the prime concern of the Union. The Union needs to respond to both the students' needs and suggestions, whether or not those students are smokers.

Comics depressing

Editor,

When I came home from class today to my Barbie Doll-infested dorm, I searched for a brief escape — the comics in the Collegian.

I rushed upstairs to sit down and check out Jim's day. Unfortunately, Jim's was no better than mine. I hate to bring this up, but aren't comics supposed to be funny? Jim's Journal is so dry, it's funny. But Glimpses and Campus Blues have got to go.

Do students write these? If they do, what are their qualifications? Do they just have to be able to read and write?

I'm writing to see if you could possibly put a comic in that would make us laugh. A smirk would even be nice. I do appreciate the Collegian, but if you keep these boring comics in, you might as well rename the section "Ignorant and Depressing Comics for K-State Students."

Flag to signal start of ticket campout

Priority given to ICAT members when buying reserved seats

By Jerry Sapp
Collegian Reporter

As another K-State basketball season creeps closer, living groups and organizations have begun to prepare for the annual ticket campout at Ahearn Field House grounds.

"We are going to run a campout at the northwest corner of Ahearn," said Perry Henry, advisory board leader of the "I Contributed a Twenty" athletic booster club. "There are three flag poles on the east side of Ahearn. When a purple flag goes up, campout begins. People have two hours to put their name into a lottery in order to draw a line slot."

ICAT membership gives students a chance to buy reserved seats in sections 17 or 18 at Bramlage Coliseum. The $20 membership fee is donated to the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics for the Mike Ahearn Scholarship Fund.

Students wanting to purchase non-ICAT tickets will also have an annual campout immediately to the east of Ahearn.

Basketball tickets for ICAT members and non-members are $70. But ICAT members, especially season football ticket holders and band members, have priority to purchase tickets before non-members. This privilege is granted by the Athletic Ticket Sales Committee to ICAT members for their $20 donation.

"We get our tickets first, before everybody else," said Doug Spencer, an ICAT advisory board member. "I wouldn't say it is a special privilege, even though our seats are pretty good. A certain amount of tickets are set aside by the ticket committee for ICAT."

The ticket committee, which is headed by Bill Nelson, senior in political science, is a branch of Student Senate. The committee is a nine-member organization consisting of three greek organization members, three residence hall members and three off-campus members. The committee decides how the athletic department will distribute tickets to the student body.

"ICAT has reserved seating because they (committee members) all voted on it, and that is what they decided," said Brenda Sedlacek, an ICAT advisory board member and ticket sales committee member.

ICAT tickets are sold on the first day of campout. Spencer said ICAT members have to wait about six hours to one day less than non-members.

"We are using a one-plus-five system this year," Henry said. "Each person in line can buy a ticket for themselves plus five more. But everybody has to be an ICAT member that they are buying for."

After the flag signals the start of campout, students camping out are subject to periodic roll calls.

"Nobody knows when the flag is going to go up — it is a mystery," Henry said. "We guess that our tickets will be sold Monday evening, Oct. 15, or Tuesday morning."

Last year the ICAT organization did not receive priority seating as it had planned.

"Our biggest problem last year was that we didn't know the ticket task force was going to change our seats," said Matt McMillen, director of Catbacker clubs for the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

"This year we have worked closely with the ticket task force to ensure that we have sections 17 and 18 reserved for our members."

In the 11 years before senior Thresa Burcham joined the K-State tennis program in 1987, the team had never compiled a winning record.

The squad, then going into its fourth season under coach Steve Bietau, had finished as high as sixth in the Big Eight only once. Since her arrival, Burcham has seen the program rise to a level competitive with most schools throughout the country.

Burcham has played in the No. 5 position on the team the past three seasons and is proud to have been a part of the improvement.

"Being here for four years, I've seen the program grow and change a lot," Burcham said. "That's really been exciting, being part of a group that can see where it's been and the direction that it's headed in."

In her freshman season, the team recorded its first winning season with a 9-8 mark. The next year, the squad jumped to 14-6 and a fourth place finish in the Big Eight. In the first half of the season, Burcham combined with Sara Hancock for a 14-0 record in No. 3 doubles. Switching partners at mid-season, Burcham and Annika Emtell took third place at No. 3 doubles in the Big Eight championships.

Last season, Burcham placed fifth at the Big Eight meet in No. 5 singles as the team finished 14-9. Also coming last season was what she calls the highlight of her career at K-State, a 7-6, 6-4 victory over Sheri Yandle of nationally ranked Brigham Young.

Though the squad lost four seniors from last season who made important contributions in the improvement of the program, both Burcham and Bietau call this year's team the most talented in school history. Bietau said that with several additions to the team, leadership will be crucial to carry on the development of the program.

Burcham, he said, will be counted on to provide some of that leadership.

"We're going to go through a lot of changes because of new personnel this season," Bietau said. "She's had far more experience on the collegiate level than any other member of our team. We'll rely on Thresa to carry over some of what we've developed."

Though as a senior she assumes the leadership role naturally, Burcham doesn't think the team looks for guidance from one particular member.

"Our team's really open and we're all pretty close. We don't try to single out any one person," Burcham said. "I guess after four years, you know what Coach expects, and you're kind of in a position to set an example. And after four years of seeing what works and what doesn't, I can help the others a little."

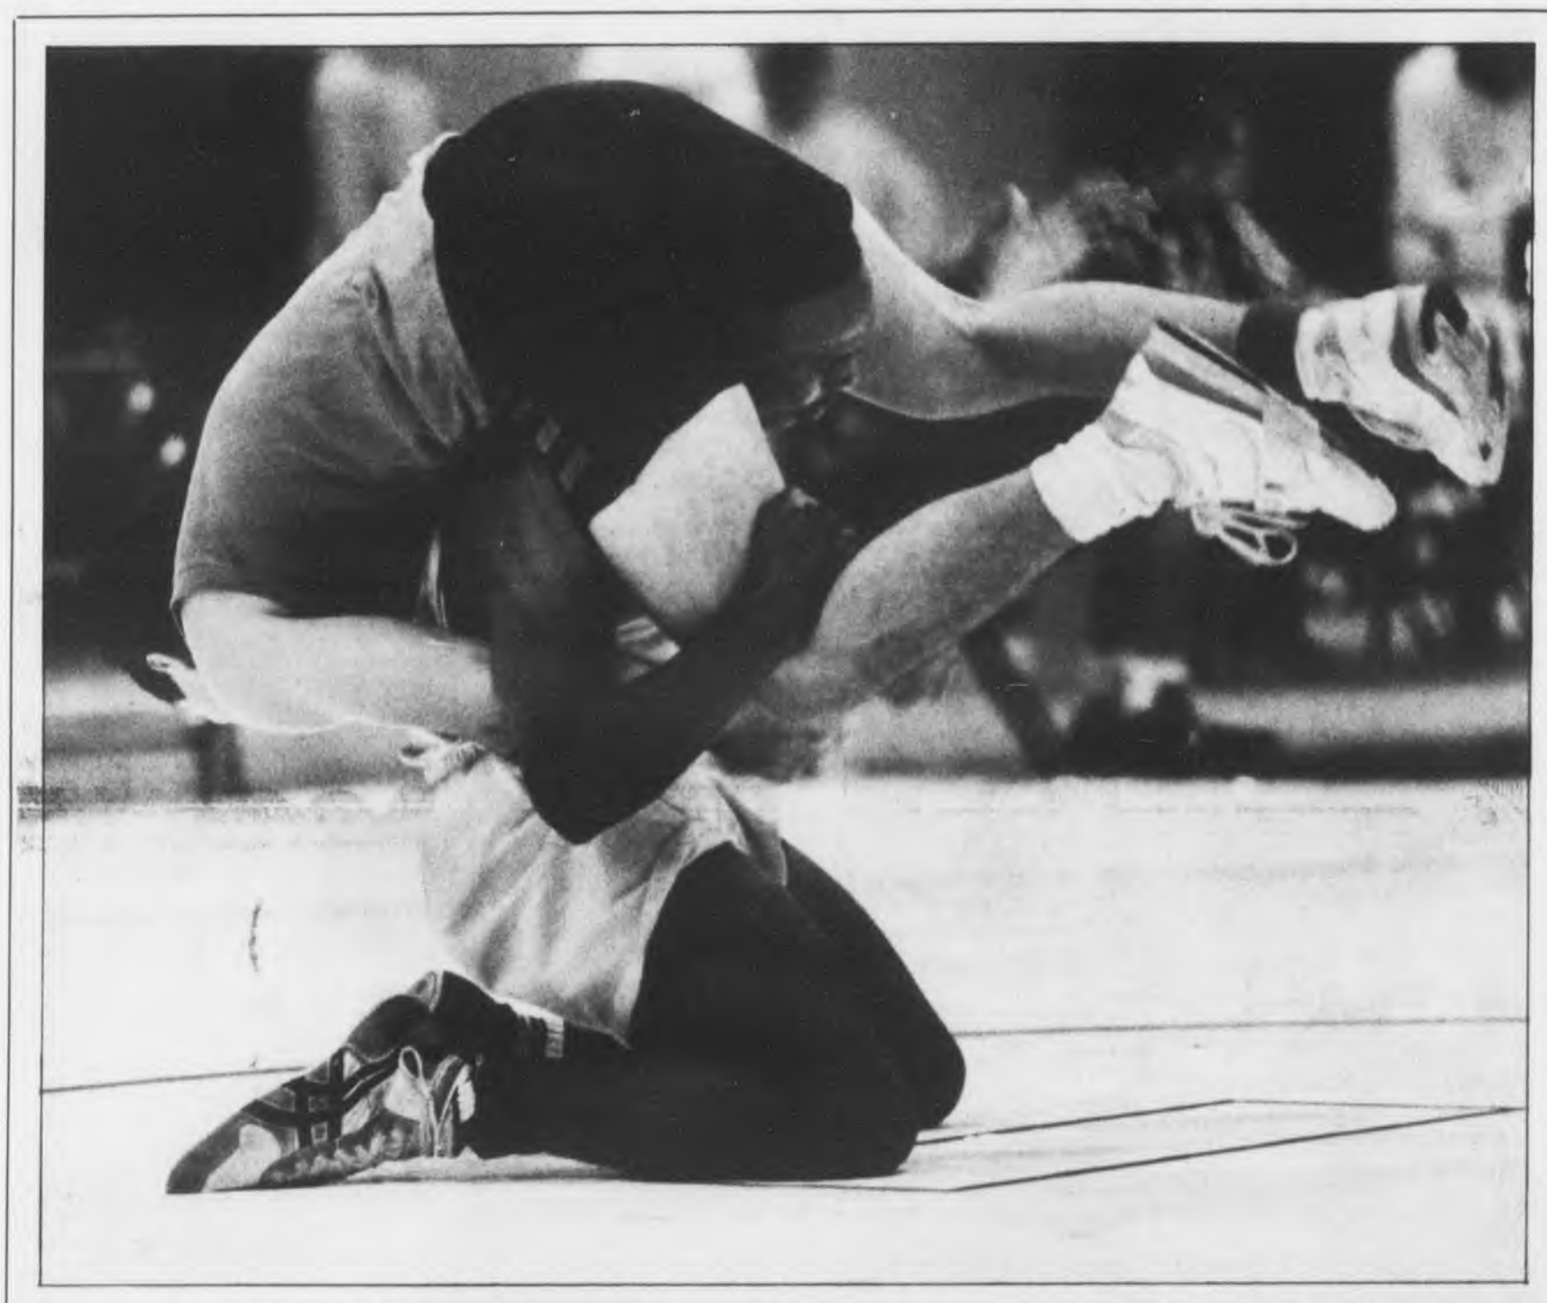
So far this season, Burcham has been playing in the No. 2 position. Making the jump from No. 5 to No. 2 has been somewhat difficult, she said, because at a lower position, she has a little bit more confidence. Burcham said she played in the No. 5 position for three years, not because she wasn't progressing, but because the team has gotten better each season.

"I've become a more aggressive player since coming to K-State," Burcham said. "I was strictly a baseliner before. Now I'm a more all-around player. All my strokes have become stronger, and my doubles game has dramatically improved."

Burcham came to K-State from Little Rock, Ark., where she played tennis in high school and on the junior-national level. She began competiting in tennis, as well as in basketball and track, in junior high school, and decided when she was a freshman in high school to concentrate her effort on tennis.

Under the guidance of a coach from the University of Arkansas-Little Rock, Burcham twice won state doubles championships and compiled a 30-2 record in No. 1 singles. In her senior year, she was recruited by several colleges and had nearly committed to attend Purdue. Her coach had become acquainted with Bietau, however, and encouraged her to use her last college visit to come to K-State.

"When I came here, I was pretty set on going to Purdue," Burcham said. "But I just loved everything here. They provide a lot of support for athletes, and the tennis program has really improved."

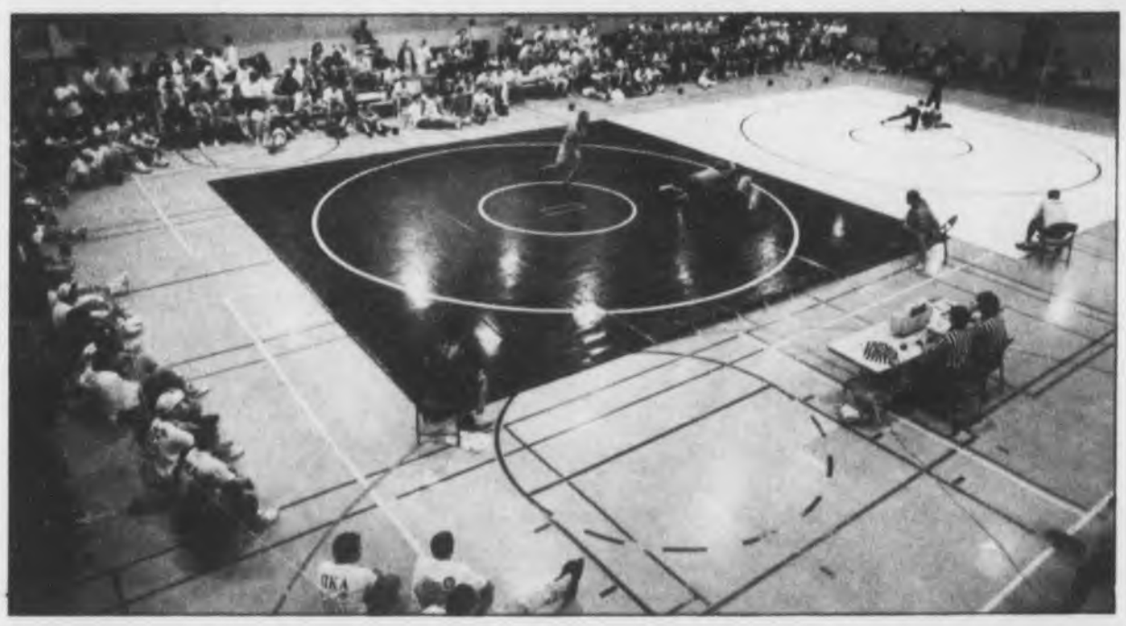


Playing tennis every day is occasionally frustrating, and maintaining the proper focus is difficult, Burcham said. A graphic design major, she said juggling school work and the year-round tennis schedule makes achieving her full potential in both areas a struggle. Through it all, however, Burcham said she has gained valuable experience and more than enough enjoyment to make it worth the effort.

In spite of the difficulties of playing in college, Burcham is far from burned out on tennis.

"I know I'll play for the rest of my life. Whether for fun or if I try to play in some adult tournaments, I'll definately keep playing after I'm done playing here," Burcham said.

Until then, however, Burcham is determined to make the most of her senior year, both for her team as the senior leader, and for herself.



"I'd really like to reach my fullest potential this season and show what I'm capable of doing in college tennis," Burcham said. "I'd love to do something like Helen (Schildknecht, a member of last year's squad who won the Big Eight No. 2 singles title) did. I'd love to go out winning the Big Eight, being able to always look back and say you did something like that."

Intramural forfeits needless, avoidable

Dan Wicker
SPORTS REPORTER

Exercise. It is a word that rings horror through the minds of students at K-State, but it is also something that students continuously say they need to begin.

Well, there is a perfect solution to everybody's fitness craze, and it's one that many students use. That solution is to enroll and participate in the K-State intramural program.

However, there is one problem I believe needs to be taken into consideration. Some students that want to exercise through intramurals are using it as a ploy to not exercise.

I hate to be the bearer of bad news, but signing up for intramurals is not going to help those "freshman 15" disappear. You actually have to remove your butt from its permanent spot on the couch and participate.

The intramural program appreciates the money dished out by students to enter, but it would also just as soon have the students get their money's worth by playing their matches and games.

Forfeits are creating a problem in intramurals that is alarming Steve Martini, director of intramurals.

"They are a really undesireable and negative part of the program, and it is really frustrating," Martini said. "I don't want to say that this is a rampant problem pervading our program. Forfeits are a part of participation, but I would just like to see the number of forfeits go down."

To be more specific, last year out of 2,700 games, 370 were forfeits. Five percent of all intramural basketball games, 14 percent of flag football and volleyball matches and 19 percent of soccer games were forfeits. But softball topped the charts, recording 21 percent of the games as forfeits.

The beginning of this intramural season has not seen much improvement from last year. There have been 36 forfeits out of only 213 games played in flag football, mostly in the co-rec division, where eight teams have forfeited out of the league.

If a team has two forfeits in its league, it is automatically dropped from competition. The number of forfeits and the number of times this rule has to be used is completely ridiculous.

Recreational Services makes it as easy as possible on the students to participate. When a team is registered, it is allowed to pick a time suitable to the players. Non-team sports participants are given a week to play their match.

A team may also add people to its roster if a conflict arises with a player, as long as the added players are not on another intramural team.

"Our concept when we do the scheduling is that we let the students pick the time they want to play," Martini said. "We are offering independent leagues at seven or eight different times during the week. Theoretically, they should pick a time that is convenient to them, but that is not always the case."

There are ways that Recreational Services could become nasty with the students who forfeit games, such as incorporating a new philosophy. There are schools that require a deposit of up to $20 in case of forfeits. If there are not any forfeits, the team will receive a full refund.

"It is not our belief that we should be taking more money from the students. They pay for this program through their student semester pay-

Golfers finish 11th

K-State finished 11th in the Mizuno Peach State Invitational men's golf tournament that was completed Tuesday in Greensboro, Ga.

Southeastern Louisiana won the 15-team tournament with a total of 888. K-State's team total was 949.

K-State's top individual finisher was Brett Vuillemin at 235. He shot a final-round 78. Will Siebert was next at 239, followed by Richard Laing at 240, Bill Graham at 243, and Greg Roberts at 247.

Water-ski team 4th

The K-State water-ski team finished fourth at the 1990 Midwest Conference Championships held last weekend in Decatur, Ill.

Michigan State won the team title with a score of 7,075. K-State's score was 5,400.

The K-State men's team finished fourth with a score of 3,410. In men's individual competition, James Hailey finished second in the slalom, Brian Shelinbarger took an individual championship in the jump, and Hailey was second overall.

In the women's team competition, K-State placed second with 1,990 points. Lori Eckerberg took the team's only top-five finish, placing fifth in the jump.

Students win championships

Four K-State students took individual honors at the Kansas Bodybuilding Championships held Saturday at Century II in Wichita.

In the men's heavyweight competition, James Griffing took top honors. Griffing also won the overall competition, besting a former national placer.

In the men's middleweight competition, Bobby Smith was victorious.

In the women's heavyweight meet, a pair of K-Staters battled for the crown. Elaine Ritter took top honors, edging Kim Carter. Ritter also took the overall competition.

Stephanie Mertz won the middleweight category for women.

The divisional state winners qualify for national competition in Los Angeles in two weeks.

Red Sox fail to clinch

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Red Sox failed to clinch the American League East title Tuesday night and sent the race down to the final day by losing to the Chicago White Sox 3-2 on Ozzie Guillen's two-out RBI single in the 11th inning.

The Boston loss, which came about one hour after Toronto won in Baltimore 2-1, left the Red Sox one game ahead of the Blue Jays with one game left in the regular season.

FAN FORUM

Coverage?

Sports Editor,

What does it take to get coverage of sports clubs' activities, and does it require extra effort to get coverage for women's sports?

The K-State women's rugby football club was resurrected in spring 1989. This is our fourth season. We have played more than 15 matches and participated in four tournaments. This fall season, we were invited to two more tournaments and have scheduled matches every weekend, except one, until Nov. 17.

Last spring season, we won the first-place trophy at Arkansas State University's rugby tournament. We play teams from Colorado State, Colorado, Nebraska, and the cities of Columbia, Mo., Kansas City, Mo., Little Rock, Ark., St. Louis, and more.

We are an established member of the Heart of America Rugby Football Union and the only recognized women's team in this union so far. K-State has something that KU doesn't. Isn't any of this newsworthy?

Last fall, we were told that we would be featured in an article. Pictures were even taken. And yet nothing happened. Then, last spring season, we were told that because we didn't have any home matches, we weren't worthy of mention. This season, I personally stopped in the Collegian office and gave a living human body our schedule and phone numbers of three contacts. I was told that we would be covered this season, especially since we have home games scheduled.

On Sept. 22, the KSUWRFC hosted Nebraska and Kansas City women's rugby teams right here in Manhattan, and we still did not receive any coverage. There wasn't even a home football game scheduled.

I think you are underestimating the wide variety of interests the K-State students have. I, for one, would like to see more coverage of the club sports, such as men's and women's soccer and rugby matches and lacrosse. It is sad that the majority of the students here don't even know we exist. And yet we represent them in so many ways at so many places.

I think it is pathetic when our own University newspaper that we support, as students and with our paid ads, doesn't recognize our own sports groups, while the Kansas City Star writes an article about the Kansas City's women's team within a week of its formation!

I ask the question once more. What does it take to get coverage of sports club activities? A well-rounded, open-minded reporter who writes for an unbiased, well-balanced paper, I suppose.

Campaign introduces cultural diversity

By Candace Plett
Collegian Reporter

K-State's first comprehensive, University-wide plan to change awareness of cultural diversity is in motion.

"We've got to change. Universities cannot become outstanding if they don't approach this issue," said Jane Rowlett, chairman of the diversity educational campaign initiated by President Jon Wefald.

Rowlett said a series of retreats are designed to introduce administration and faculty to the issue of diversity and why it is important at K-State.

"Most of the students and faculty are from monocultural experiences," said James Boyer, professor of education. "The campaign shares the fact that we do have problems. No single act of discrimination is being addressed, but we want to create an atmosphere that celebrates social diversity and sends out that message even before people get here."

Boyer, who specializes in ethnic and human relations, said the committee advocates prevention of future discriminatory acts.

"A more open campus would be wonderful for culturally different students," he said. "But, it's also absolutely essential to white students, because these students will be looking for employment in the larger framework of society."

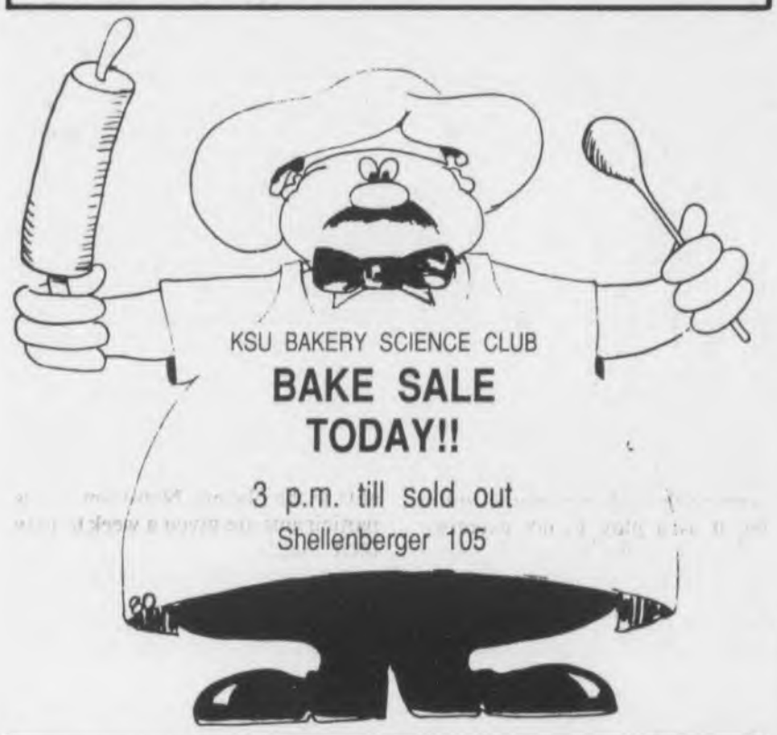
Boyer said the committee will try to emphasize three things: ethnic literacy, new skills of human relations and ways of appraising and evaluating people.

"Historically, these issues have taken a minor or low priority role in education," he said.

He also said the campaign moves the University in the direction of greater awareness.

Boyer was the featured speaker Tuesday at a meeting focusing on management, counseling and direct services.

Rowlett said strategies for encouraging cultural diversity may include creating faculty exchange programs with other colleges and universities, developing a videotape on diversity for orientation classes and advancing minority graduate programs.



She said the committee would like to form a plan of action by the spring semester using the ideas of faculty and administration, and then instigate that plan. Students will also be involved in the planning.

Andrew Cordero, director of the minority engineering program, said, "Our indications are that the campaign is well-received. People are not only listening, they're taking action. Momentum is building, and that's exciting to me."

Cordero said the efforts at other universities have happened in response to negative events and problems. He said he believes the proactive campaign stance makes it more workable and increases the potential for achievement and success.

Graduate vocalist returns to offer solo performance

By Rebecca Sack
Collegian Reviewer

The quality the K-State Music Department produces will be returned when Rich Brunner's voice echoes on campus again. Fans of vocal virtuosity will enjoy the homecoming today at 8 p.m. in All Faiths Chapel.

Brunner, who earned two degrees from K-State, will return to his alma mater to perform a vocal concert featuring the works of Mozart, Sondheim and Handel. Brunner received a bachelor's degree in music education for voice and viola and a master's degree in vocal performance.

Brunner's program includes two Francis Pilkington selections, Handel's "Alma Mia," Mozart's "Che Belta, Che Leggiadria," and an original titled "Psalm 65." The program varies widely, ending with contemporary songs including, "My First Love Song" from Steven Sondheim's "Roar of the Greasepaint, Smell of the Crowd."

While at the K-State, Brunner studied under Jean Sloop, professor of voice and singers' diction. Sloop said she worked with Brunner when he was a baritone with a high upper range. Brunner's concert will encompass both baritone and tenor ranges.

"I trust him," Sloop said. "Rich is a very fine musician. He's a string player.

"A former colleague of mine used to say that the best singers are often former string players — and in Rich's case, I think that's true," she said.

Brunner has performed opera with several companies, including the Chicago Opera Theater. He sang with the Chicago Symphony Chorus and currently sings with His Majesties Clerkes, a renowned choral ensemble specializing in music of the

Inflation eroding ability to acquire library serials

By Jenifer Scheibler
Collegian Reporter

The results of high inflation can be found everywhere, even in Farrell Library.

Although high inflation rates have affected all areas of Farrell, the inflation rate on serials is higher than on anything else, said Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries.

Anything received by the library as a standing order and paid for annually is considered to be a serial. Periodicals, such as journals, magazines and newspapers, are serials, along with other materials that aren't received on a regular basis.

Two years ago, Farrell cancelled 16,029 serial titles because of general inflation and the loss of the value of the dollar, Hobrock said.

Currently, Farrell receives about 8,000 serials, 675 of which are received as gifts to the library. These serials cost Farrell $1.17 million annually, said Charlene Grass, associate dean of collection and technical services.

"The University has been trying to help the library and has increased the budget," Grass said.

Although the budget for serials has been increased to $1.26 million, it is hard to offset the increasing inflation rate, Hobrock said.

"It promises to be worse this current year," Hobrock said. "The dollar is continuing to lose value in Europe."

Predictions from Blackwell's Periodicals Division, Farrell's principal supplier in Europe, indicate a 25 to 30 percent increase in the subscription price of serials.

"Publishers know libraries are locked in on serials," Hobrock said. "These serials have very important information, and libraries are reluctant to cancel their subscriptions because the faculty need this information.

"It's a game being played by publishers in extracting the maximum amount of money available out of subscribers, and those subscribers are virtually all libraries," Hobrock said.

When deciding what serial titles to subscribe to, those in charge of developing the serials collection consider input from all departments and faculty, Grass said.

"This year I would expect us to be very limited," Grass said. "We're just trying to maintain the ones we've ordered last year and all the ones we didn't cancel."

Journals are subscribed to for their research value, not for entertainment or general reading, and most support graduate work. Because of their specialization, they tend to cost more, Hobrock said.

family residential district.

The commission first sent the request to the planning board at its September 17 meeting. The board voted to not rezone the whole area and was deadlocked on rezoning the two lots in question.

After hearing arguments from owner Teresa Nelson and neighbors who were against the proposal, the commission voted against rezoning the lots.

The commission said it feels rezoning will have adverse effects on surrounding properties and would create a domino effect for future rezoning in the area.

Brunner will be one of four artists in residence this winter with the Florentine Opera. He will tour Wisconsin with the company, performing recitals and concerts in Milwaukee and bringing opera to hundreds of school-age children.

Brunner sings professionally with St. Chrysostum's Episcopal Church in Chicago and has written several pieces for the ensemble. This fall, his piece "Stabat Mater" will be sung by the choir at the regional American Choral Directors Association convention in Illinois.

TENANTS AND LANDLORDS HAVE RIGHTS AND RESPONSIBILITIES IN MANHATTAN

As a tenant you have the right to safe housing. These are just a few things you should look for in your rental unit:

*Does your rental unit have adequate emergency exits?
*Does your rental unit have smoke detectors that work properly?
*Do the electrical outlets work properly in your rental unit?

But as a tenant you also have the responsibility to maintain a clean and sanitary rental unit.

As a landlord you do have the right to protect your investment, but you also have a responsibility to maintain a safe rental unit for your tenants.

The City of Manhattan's Code Inspection Office can help you. We offer free inspections and will respond on request by either the tenant or landlord to inspect a rental unit to assure compliance with adopted codes and assist you in rectifying problems.

Official cites Bank of Horton waiver

By The Associated Press

HORTON — The Bank of Horton, which made a name for itself in the student loan business, could not have passed a Department of Education audit in 1988 without a special waiver allowing it to count unowned mortgages as assets, a retired government official said.

The small Kansas bank became the second-largest provider of student loans during the period of 1987 through 1989, and also the largest single provider of student loans that went into default.

Vance Norris, chairman of the bank, said Monday that in 1987 or 1988 department officials informed the bank it was in violation of a federal regulation limiting student loans to 50 percent of total assets.

"They gave us 10 days to stop making student loans, or remedy the situation," Norris said.

Bank officials, with the assistance of U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., responded by getting the department to agree in March of 1988 to let them count the unowned mortgages as assets, Norris said.

Norris said that on June 30, 1987, the bank had 71 percent of its assets in student loans, exceeding the federal limit by 21 percent.

Rodney Small, who at the time was director of the Department of Education's inspector general regional office in Kansas City, Mo., said the waiver enabled the Horton bank to pass an audit conducted from August to November of that year.

"Otherwise, the bank was probably one of the most deficient lenders of student financial aid," Small said.

Small signed the 1988 audit verifying that the bank was in compliance with federal requirements. He said that without the waiver, the bank "would have been in violation of the law."

But Slattery, whose role in the matter has drawn criticism from his Republican challenger Scott Morgan, said there was no indication that the bank violated any laws. He also said that the only thing he did was arrange a meeting between bank and federal officials in March of 1988.

But the congressman also said that he introduced a bill in December 1987 that would have changed the regulatory language to rescind the 50 percent rule. He did not promote the bill and it never came to a vote, so Slattery said it had no effect on the bank's problems with the department.

Morgan said that Slattery was probably sending a message to regulators that if they did not work out an agreement with the bank, Congress might force them to work under a new law.

"It's fairly typical in Washington to introduce legislation and use it as a hammer on a regulatory agency," Morgan said.

Biology selected for NASA center

K-State beats out 19 other programs

By Jenifer Scheibler
Collegian Reporter

NASA's only gravitational biology center in the world will be at K-State.

Wednesday, K-State's Division of Biology received notification that it will receive a $5 million grant to be paid over five years to conduct research in the field of gravitational biology, said Brian Spooner, professor of biology.

Spooner will be the director of the Center for Gravitational Studies in Cellular and Developmental Biology established for this research.

"The center will be conducting fundamental research into the role of gravity in cellular developmental processes," Spooner said.

"We are delighted," said Timothy Donoghue, vice provost for research and dean of the graduate school. "It is certainly prestigious for the University and obviously highlights the Division of Biology."

Donoghue said K-State was chosen from 19 university applicants for the center.

"The competition was tough," Donoghue said. "The best universities in the country were competing for this."

The grant is for $1 million per year with NASA having the option to renew after each year. The money will be used for a program consisting of three components — research, training and outreach, Spooner said.

The results of the research will be shared with NASA, and the training component will allow stipends to be given to graduate students in this field for research, Spooner said.

"We will produce the next generation of space-life scientists," he said.

Spooner said the outreach component will be directed at the general public and young people.

"Being selected to have the center at K-State puts us in the position to attract bright, young people into scientific careers," Spooner said.

Last May, the Division of Biology submitted a proposal to NASA in response to their request for applications.

The application went through a three-phase merit review system. A review committee chose the top four applicants in the initial phase with the second phase consisting of visits to those four sites by a team from NASA, Spooner said.

The committee then met again to evaluate the new information and decide where to establish the center, Spooner said.

Spooner said that the center will have national and international effects due to the fact that K-State will work with several institutions, including Johnson Space Flight Center in Houston, the University of Colorado's Department of Aerospace Engineering and the Canadian National Research Council's Department of Biotechnology in Alberta.

Both Spooner and Donoghue said the University and Division of Biology had received strong support from Kansas congressional members Sen. Bob Dole, Rep. Jim Slattery, Sen. Nancy Kassebaum and Rep. Dan Glickman during the selection process.

"This a strong mark for the biology faculty," Donoghue said.

Student stopped while skating

Campus police unsure about rule on rollerblades

By Eric Henry
Editor

Eric Foster, senior in landscape architecture, was stopped by campus police Wednesday evening for rollerskating on campus. Foster was skating on a type of rollerskates called rollerblades.

Rollerblades are a hybrid of rollerskates and ice skates in that the wheels are in line, much like a blade.

Neither Foster nor the campus officers knew if rollerblades were included in the University ban on skateboarding. Mike Baysinger, campus police officer, said he will make an informational report of the incident to the dean of student life.

Foster said he was skating on the sidewalk west of Seaton Hall on his way to studio. He said he had to swerve in front of a campus police car parked in the cul-de-sac west of the K-State Union plaza in order to avoid a group of people on the sidewalk.

He said that from there he skated east of Seaton to near Farrell Library where he spoke to some pedestrians who had inquired about his skates. He said he then returned to Seaton to go to studio.

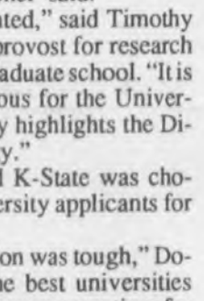
Foster said he was stopped by campus police officers when he entered Seaton. He was not ticketed.

"These skates put less wear on the sidewalk than a shoe does," he said. "I can't skate in the grass with them. But you can walk on the grass with shoes on."

Foster said he has skated on campus since spring without incident. He said he usually skates at night and avoids narrow sidewalks to avoid people.

"You can't do anything anymore," Foster said.

Mike Venso/Staff



Eric Foster, senior in landscape architecture, is questioned on the east side of Seaton Hall by KSU police officers after they chased him down for skating on campus sidewalks with rollerblades Wednesday evening. It is unknown if the rollerskate-like shoes fall under the restrictions of the recently passed ban on skateboards.

Temporary dean to be appointed

By Jan Puls
Staff Reporter

An interim dean for the College of Arts and Sciences will be appointed no later than the end of next week, said Provost James Coffman.

Administrators reassigned Thomas Isenhour to the chemistry department Sept. 24, leaving the dean position vacant. Robert Kruh, vice provost for academic services, is the acting dean until the interim dean is appointed.

Coffman

Coffman selected a faculty advisory committee Wednesday to assist him in naming the dean. The committee was chosen from a list of people who were recommended by faculty or individual departments.

"Any individual or department could submit nominations for the interim dean," Coffman said. "That's how the names came in, both from individuals and departments."

He said the advisory committee will meet this week and early next week to fill the dean position.

"A dean of a college of arts and sciences must have an understanding of a wide diversity of fields from fine arts to nuclear physics," Kruh said.

The new dean must have leadership skills, communication skills, administrative experience and good interpersonal-relations skills, Coffman said.

With plans for reorganization underway, faculty members want to be assured that the new dean will be a strong voice for the college, Kruh said.

"There are a significant number of people who have a broad understanding of the college," Coffman said.

The interim dean should have little difficulty representing the interests of arts and sciences, Coffman said.

A permanent dean should be hired by July, he said. The national search to fill the position will begin after the interim dean is appointed.

Germany aims for world peace

Leaders assure world of intentions, remember Nazi past

By The Associated Press

BERLIN — Leaders of a new Germany rushed to assure the world Wednesday that it would strive for peace in the future and would never forget the dark lessons of its Nazi past.

As most of the nation savored its first hours of unity and sovereignty after nightlong celebrations, leftist radicals protesting unification rampaged in Berlin. Police fired tear gas and water cannons in street battles, and about 50 people were arrested.

Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev, widely credited with making unification possible, will visit Germany next month, a government spokesman said Wednesday. In a message to governments worldwide, Chancellor Helmut Kohl pledged Germany would never again pose the territorial claims that marked Germany from its initial unification in 1871 to its defeat and division in World War II.

"In the future, only peace will emanate from German soil," Kohl said.

"At the same time, we stand by our moral and legal responsibilities that arise from German history," he added in a reference to the Nazi past and the Holocaust, which claimed the lives of 6 million Jews.

President Richard von Weizsaecker raised the same themes in his speech at the ceremony in Berlin's Philharmonic hall.

"The Nazi terror and the war it caused inflicted untold serious injustice and suffering on almost all of Europe and on us," he said. "We continuously recall the victims."

Among the several hundred invited guests was Heinz Galinski, an Auschwitz death camp survivor and now the leader of Germany's Jewish community.

"No one among us will forget that there never would have been a separation without the war started by Germany under Hitler," said von Weizsaecker, whose own father was convicted of two Nazi war crimes for his role as a Foreign Ministry official.

Von Weizsacker said, "For the first time, we Germans are not creating a point of contention on the European agenda."

Members of the renowned Berlin Philharmonic played works of famous German composers, including Johannes Brahms and Johann Sebastian Bach.

The rebirth of Germany as the greatest economic power in Europe has worried its neighbors, particularly Poland, one-third of whose territory once belonged to Germany. Kohl singled out Poland when saying that a future Germany will make no territorial claims against anyone.

Kohl, however, reiterated plans to amend Germany's constitution to

Ex-dean Isenhour to take pay cut

By Dan Scott
Collegian Reporter

Thomas Isenhour will receive a paycut of almost $25,000 next year after being reassigned from being dean of the College of Arts and Sciences to a professor of chemistry, said Provost James Coffman.

Isenhour was reassigned to the faculty of the chemistry department for undisclosed reasons on September 24.

Isenhour

Isenhour's salary for this year is $93,696, according to the K-State annual budget.

"He'll go to a nine-month appointment instead of a 12-month appointment," Coffman said. "The nine-month appointment represents the working year for a full-time professor."

Coffman said a general formula is used to establish the new base salary when a move is made from a full-time administrator to a full-time professor.

"He'd be paid 10 percent less than nine-elevenths of his present salary," Coffman said.

The nine-elevenths reduction is derived from having a nine-month working year rather than 12-month working year, he said. The 10-percent reduction represents the reduced responsibility Isenhour will have as a professor.

"It's a general rule of thumb, but it is by no means an absolute," Coffman said.

Using the formula, Isenhour's salary would be about $68,994. This is well above the average salary for a full professor in the College of Arts and Sciences, said Don Hoyt, director of planning and evaluation services.

Hoyt said the average salary in the 1989-90 school year was $45,368.

"This year, the salaries should be up about 3 percent," Hoyt said.

Isenhour had served three years of the intended five.

Hussein makes Kuwait visit

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — President Saddam Hussein of Iraq visited Kuwait on Wednesday, meeting with military commanders and officials appointed by Baghdad to govern the occupied emirate, the Iraqi News Agency said.

It was the Iraqi leader's first reported visit since the Aug. 2 invasion to what Baghdad now calls Iraq's 19th province. Saddam also met with Iraqi troops "and talked to the fighters who confirmed their ever-readiness to sacrifice for Iraq and the Arab nation and defeat all evil attempts to desecrate our sacred land," INA reported.

Man loses house during move

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Jermund Skogstad took a break from moving into his new apartment, went out for a bite to eat and forgot to take his new address with him.

That was a month ago.

"This is embarrassing ... but I can't find the way back to my new home," the 50-year-old man told the Aftenposten newspaper. "I've searched and searched."

Skogstad went to the newspaper in hopes his landlady would read of his plight and call him. The story and his photograph ran Tuesday, but there had been no call by Wednesday afternoon.

Skogstad moved to the capital from the countyside and lost his way in a maze of streets while walking to a cafe. His wallet, with the address, was in the apartment.

His search has been expensive: he paid a month's rent for the 30 minutes he spent in his apartment and also had to rent a hotel room.

U.S., Soviets reach arms deal

NEW YORK (AP) — The United States and the Soviet Union announced agreement in principle Wednesday on a comprehensive treaty to set ceilings on deployment of non-nuclear weapons in Europe.

The agreement came at the end of more than five hours of talks between Secretary of State James Baker III and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze.

Both ministers cautioned that final approval must await consultation with their allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the Warsaw Pact.

Bill to aid area meal program

WASHINGTON (AP) — An amendment providing $1 million to relocate a meal program for the poor in Kansas City, Kan., was part of a VA-HUD appropriations bill on which the Senate finished action Wednesday, Republican Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas said.

The money is designated for St. Mary's Food Kitchen, now at St. Mary's Catholic Church. The kitchen is a non-denominational organization that provides about 400 hot lunches a day to low-income people.

Plans call for moving the program to an abandoned truck stop, and the federal money would be used to buy the site and renovate the building. The expanded operation would offer employment and education assistance, health care, counseling for battered women, substance abuse counseling, housing location assistance and legal services as well as a food pantry.

Mother convicted of murder

GARDEN CITY (AP) — A sobbing mother was convicted Wednesday of killing her 4-year-old son.

Diana Lumbrera, 32, who was convicted of first-degree murder in Finney County District Court, now faces possible extradition to Texas where she is charged with murdering three of her daughters and another girl. She is also under investigation for the deaths of two of her sons.

Lumbrera was accused of smothering her son, Jose Antonio Lumbrera, May 1 at their home in Garden City, where she moved in 1985.

GOP legislators to tour state

TOPEKA (AP) — Sixteen Republican women legislators will tour the state this month hoping to convince Kansans to vote against the first woman nominated for governor by a major political party, Democratic State Treasurer Joan Finney.

The legislators, who called themselves the Iron Sunflowers, announced Wednesday their plans to campaign for GOP Gov. Mike Hayden, who is seeking his second four-year term in the Nov. 6 general election.

The group includes Rep. Rochelle Chronister of Neodesha, the GOP state chairwoman.

The legislators said they are concerned about Finney's ability to make policy decisions and her stance on tax and education issues. They also said her recent remarks about abortion scare them.

"Mrs. Finney says she's supportive of women," Rep. Elizabeth Baker, R-Derby, said. "We know that's not true. We're here to say how much we support the leadership of Mike Hayden."

Republican senators involved are Sheila Frahm, Colby; Audrey Langworthy, Prairie Village; Lana Oleen, Manhattan; and Alicia Salisbury, Topeka.

Osage City sees reservists off

OSAGE CITY (AP) — Hundreds of residents lined the streets of Osage City Tuesday to bid farewell to 91 Army reservists.

About 800 people, nearly one-third of the town's population, attended the old-fashioned good-bye with a balloon sendoff and yellow-ribbon wishes that members of the Army Reserves 129th Transportation Company will return home soon.

The reservists could be stationed in Saudia Arabia or stateside. Initial orders call for 90 days of active duty.

Hayden appoints 7 to board

TOPEKA (AP) — Gov. Mike Hayden announced Wednesday he is appointing seven people to the newly formed Information Network of Kansas Board.

The board will advise state officials on how to make information that is kept by state agencies available to the public.

The board also will gather information about such things as electronic mail and public information access.

Named to the board are Margaret Gates, Manhattan, director of the Manhattan Public Library; Charlotte Shawver, Riley, Riley County register of deeds; Marvin Maydew, a Topeka certified public accountant; Don Morris, Paola, president of Morris and Associates Insurance;

William Bradley Jr., Wichita, of Martindell, Swearer, Cabbage, Ricksecker and Hertach; Dennis Taylor, Topeka, acting secretary of social and rehabilitation services; and Ed Rolfs, Topeka, secretary of revenue.

'Into Africa' promotes foreign culture, music

By Kimis Timotheadis
Staff Reporter

Manhattan residents can learn about African music, politics and culture with a twist of their radio dial.

Every Saturday morning at 10, KSDB-FM broadcasts "Into Africa." The program, which has been on the air since 1987, was the idea of the African Student Union.

"We want to promote Africa and try to bring news from Africa," said Robert Guei, graduate student in agronomy and former president of ASU. "We talk during the program about the politics, the culture and, of course, the music of Africa."

Guei was the disc jockey of the program before Kouassi Lazar Kouakou, a graduate student in grain science, took over in August 1988. Kouakou and Guei are natives of the Ivory Coast.

"I got busy with my Ph.D. studies, and so Kouassi now spends more time for the program," Guei said.

"Africa is a big continent, and we feel we should share what we have with the community around here," said Kouakou.

"It is something like a mission for us to let people know about Africa from Africans," he said. "People do not have the chance to hear about our continent from Africans very often. From Africans you can get to know more about Africa."

The program changed from a two- to a three-hour format in 1989. Kouakou said the additional hour resulted from listener demand.

"They called and asked if we could have one more hour," he said. "Since we have programs that run up to 12 hours, why shouldn't we have one more hour for "Into Africa"?

Kouakou said listeners ask for more hours, but he said he thinks three hours are enough.

"We are not professionals, and we need time to study because we are also students," he said.

He said 80 percent of the listeners are non-Africans.

"What we do here is for non-Africans," he said. "We don't do it for ourselves. We want people to get in touch with Africa."

Africans, Kouakou said, have something to share with people.

"We talk about typical African culture. We want to show people how united people are in Africa," he said. "That is also the reason we call it 'Into Africa' — to make people get into Africa."

A segment of the program is the three-part "The African File."

"We have local news which is about events the ASU organizes," Kouakou said. "Then we have 'Africa in Brief.' This is about news we get from satellite and the Associated Press, and we broadcast it.

"The last part is called 'Focus.' It is basically what the listeners want to hear," Kouakou said.

He said he encourages people to call the station during the program and to ask questions about Africa.

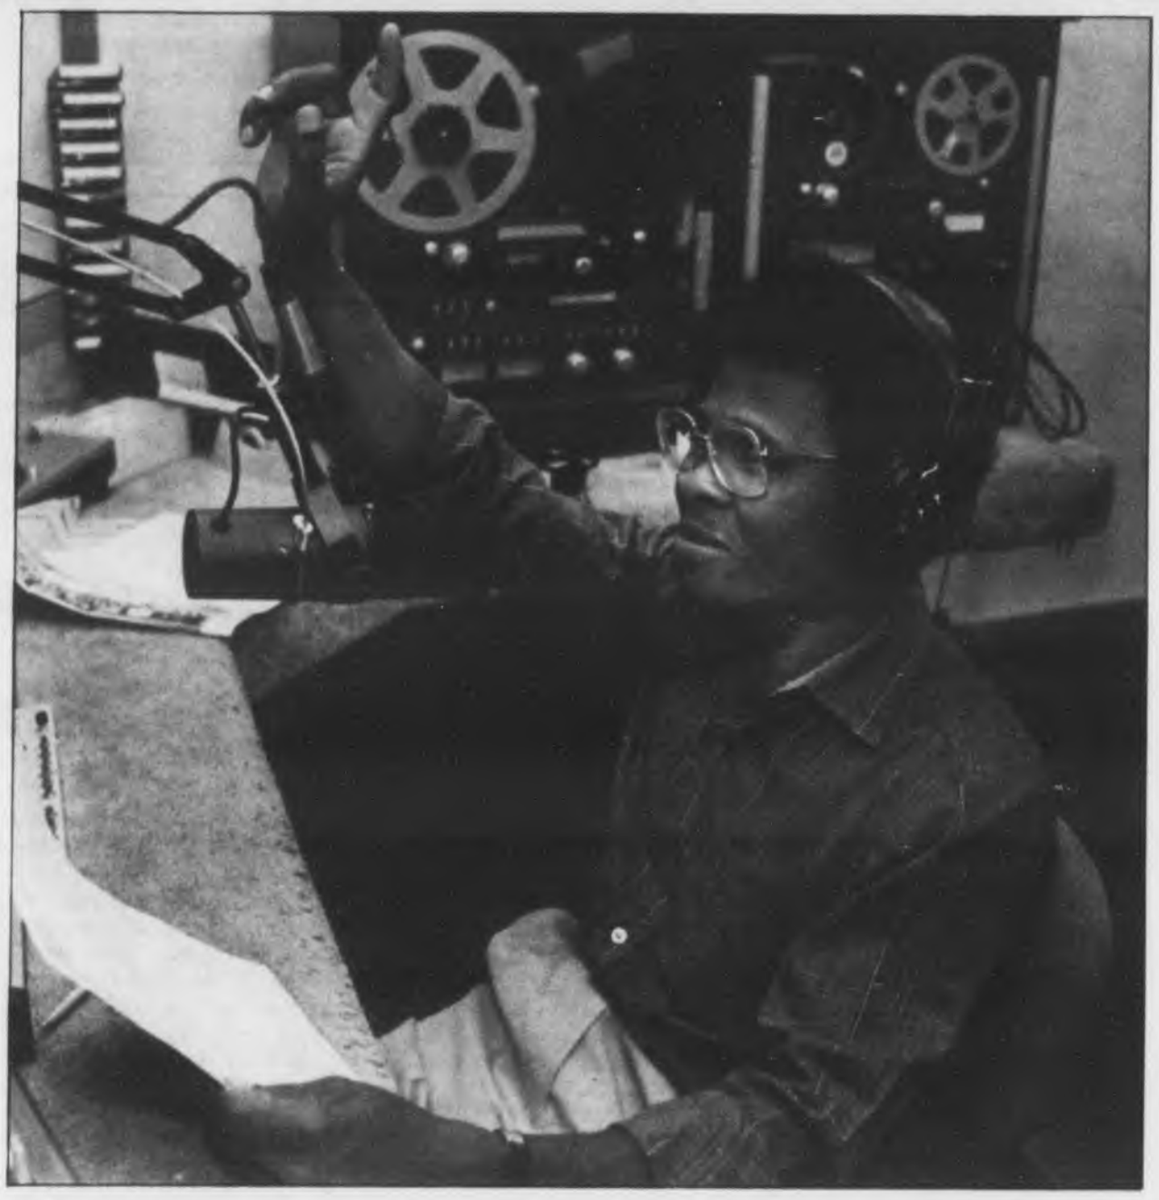
"This is useful when, for example, you want to write a paper about marriage in Africa," he said. "You can call us, and in two weeks, we will broadcast the information you need."

Kouakou said that when there are no requests, the disc jockeys try to guess what people want to know.

"At the end of the program, we let listeners know what we will be talking next week," he said. "We record the program and keep the tapes for two weeks, and people can come and listen to them."

Guei said there are two difficulties with the program.

"The first difficulty is that we are not professionals," he said. "We are not in mass communications. We are from different majors."



The second difficulty is finances.

"Now we have a lot of music, but usually people give us this music," Guei said. "Ninety percent of the music is provided by students and our own money."

Kouakou said no one sponsors the program financially.

"We try to find businesses that can sponsor us financially," he said. "We need money to buy records. We want every community to have the opportunity to get to know Africa like the Manhattan community does," he said.

Guei said that despite the difficulties, he sees a bright future for the program.

Mike Welchhans/Staff

Neba Mike Tangie signals to start the next segment of his show, the African File, Saturday afternoon at the KSDB-FM studios in McCain Auditorium. The African File is the news portion of DB-92's "Into Africa" show.

Europe invites faculty to visit

By Charlie Gatschet
Collegian Reporter

The College of Architecture and Design will send a professional fact-finding team to Eastern Europe next month.

Four faculty members from the college are going to explore the professional opportunities existing there since political reform swept the area earlier this year.

Bernd Foerster, professor of architecture; John Keller, professor of regional and community planning; Carolyn Thompson, assistant professor of interior architecture; and Dennis Law, head of the Department of Landscape Architecture, will spend 27 days this November in Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia.

"This is a multi-purpose mission," said Lane Marshall, dean of the College of Architecture and Design. "The team will be looking at opportunities for design and planning practice in Europe and ways we can help our counterpart colleges with curriculum development, faculty exchanges and student exchanges."

Plans are underway for an international planning and design conference in Kansas City next year, and the team members will be especially interested in discovering what architectural issues interest the people of Eastern Europe.

The team has received invitations to visit 10 major universities and nearly two dozen private organizations. They have had to turn down some invitations because of time restraints.

Between university visits, members of the team will travel individually to rural areas to investigate the architectural priorities that exist for rebuilding Eastern Europe, an area without much architectural change since World War II, Marshall said.

He said that the architects in eastern Europe are technologically sound and that the team's goal is not to show up the Europeans.

"We are not going in as experts, but as colleagues," Marshall said.

Foerster, who visited the three countries in 1989, heads the team, which is made up of representatives from different departments within the college. He says several factors determined who would be on the team.

"Their own expertise in their field and the fact that they were able to make their life somewhat available while teaching made them eligible," Foerster said.

Each team member has arranged to have their classes taken care of with substitute teachers, guest lecturers or rescheduled classes. Marshall said the rest of the faculty has been supportive in picking up the extra work.

Outside sources are funding the trip and include a $20,000 donation from a business that Marshall said realizes the importance of the mission but wants to remain anonymous.

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., was instrumental in working out the bureaucratic details of sending the team to Europe.

"She immediately saw the value of it and assigned her administrative assistant to help us get appointments with key people," Marshall said.

Another trip is planned next year to invite Eastern European architects to the international conference.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL

Congress definitely needs a few changes

"Our great democracies still tend to think that a stupid man is more honest than a clever man, and our politicians take advantage of this prejudice by pretending to be even more stupid than nature has made them." —Bertrand Russell (1872-1970), British philosopher.

It was Crazy Joe. I could not believe it. I walked into this bar and there he was, Crazy Joe Clecoe, an old high school classmate and the ultimate in stentorious, long-hair, hippie-type political protest — faded jeans, headband, military fatigue shirt and knee-high moccasins.

Twenty years had gone by, and here was Crazy Joe, left somewhere in the forgotten, shallow backwaters of 1970.

But Crazy Joe was my kind of protester. When asked to do a term paper on the Vietnam "conflict," he placed the finished product on the teacher's desk and set fire to it.

He was the only kid ever kicked out of school for setting fire to a teacher's desk, that is, the only kid ever kicked out of school for setting fire to a teacher's desk with the teacher tied to it.

But that isn't what earned him the cognomen of "crazy."

Joe had the peculiar habit of saying "Crazy man, crazy," to signify agreement with something. The more he agreed, the more he said it, and the more he drew out the word "crazy," as in, "Craaaazy man, craaaazy."

I decided 20 years would surely give us something to talk about, so I sat down beside him to nurse a beer and catch up on history, a la Crazy Joe.

So, what's the latest Joe?

"I'm goin' to Washington, man."

As in D.C.? What is it this time, flag burning? The Gulf Crisis? Abortion? The savings and loan scandal? Big oil "companinnys?" I bet I know — you're going to the nation's capitol to protest the destruction of the habitat of the California beluga chipmunk. Ha! I knew it.

"No, man. I'm through protestin'. I'm totally bummed out on that scene, man. I've decided to give it up and join the Establishment like all the flower children who have fallen before me.

"I'm goin' to Washington to run for the U.S. Senate and then maybe the Presidency."

You can't be serious. You couldn't possibly.

"Hey man, they let Dan Quayle in, didn't they?"

Good point. But you can't reasonably expect to be elected looking like ... like Charlie Manson.

Brad Seabourn

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

"Man, in 24 hours you ain't even goin' to recognize me. Haircut, blue pinstripe business suit, leather briefcase, nylon socks so thin they let my leg hairs poke through. Why, if I let my nose hairs grow a little and wear glasses, I'll look like a young Jesse Helms."

A sure-fire strategy if I ever heard one. But, you must realize you still haven't a chance without some big bucks, a political platform, and the support of a political action group. How can you honestly expect to get elected?

"I won't need any money, man, because my political action group is spreading nationwide on its own. And my campaign promises won't need expensive advertising because people will pass them along by word-of-mouth. Man, it's a grassroots organization just startin' to catch fire. Kind of like napalm.

"It's called KAN, short for Kick Ass and take Names. And that's my platform. I'm goin' to Washington to get elected and help KAN a few congressmen.

"We saw the fruits of our hard work and righteous indignation last week in Oklahoma when we got our first major political victory. We got the state constitution changed by petition to limit congressmen to a 12-year term."

Now that you mention it, I believe I do recall hearing a lot of wailing and gnashing of teeth south of the border. Isn't there a similar petition making the rounds back east?

"Like, crazy man, crazy! But my platform doesn't just stop with limiting the term of office, man. I'm goin' to introduce legislation that will prohibit congressmen from setting their own salaries. I mean, man, that's like puttin' a coke-head in a room with 200 tons of cocaine!

"My most important plank is that we should demand that approval of congressional pay-raises be based upon performance."

You know, that's an excellent idea. I can see you gave up drugs just prior to serious brain damage.

"Hey man, I'm just gettin' started. I think all congressional pay-raises should be put to a national vote. And nobody gets a raise as long as this country is operating with a deficit and yearly budgets are late. I mean, man, like what are these guys gettin' paid for anyway?"

My Ouija board tells me it is not for the normal things like "hard work" and "productivity."

"And this savings and loan thing. I say, let's put all them crooks in a road gang like they did with Cool Hand Luke. Hackin' weeds, pitchin' sand and sayin' 'Yes, Boss' all day long does wonders for gettin' your mind right."

Said like one who's been there. I wholeheartedly concur.

"And man, why is it the poor and middle-class in this country always end up catchin' it in the shorts when these bums start talkin' taxes? You know, somethin' just ain't right here."

You said a mouthful there, Joe.

"So, my platform is to throw the bums out come November. Wipe the slate clean."

Right on!

"And then do it again in two years."

Far out!

You know, Joe, I don't think you need to worry about the haircut, or the blue pinstripe business suit, or the leather briefcase, or the thin nylon socks or even nose hairs. I predict you'll win by the largest landslide in U.S. history.

"Crazy man, craaaaazy!"

Demoting of Isenhour handled professionally

Much ado has surrounded the "reassignment" of ex-dean Thomas Isenhour.

Isenhour, who had been the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences since 1987, had been the center of controversy since rumors of his lack of job security began circulating at the start of the school year.

One fact the reassignment proceedings did unearth was that Isenhour would retain his dean's salary this year even though he assumes the duties of a full professor in chemistry. The fact that he was to keep his salary seemed to appall many.

The ruckus this development caused shows the lack of real world vision that college folk sometimes use.

Welcome to the real world, university brethren. People do lose their jobs, people do become reassigned, and people often get to keep their original salaries.

It's called a contract, and it is one of the oldest and most binding societal ties.

K-State, in hiring Isenhour, signed a contract. In it, the University agreed to pay him a certain amount for his duties, but it also agreed to back Isenhour in his endeavors.

In paying Isenhour his salary, the University is only living up to half of the agreement. But, unlike some prejudgmental others, the University has also lived up to the other half of its agreement by retaining Isenhour's services.

The University has not stooped to the back-stabbing and mud-slinging level that often accompanies such affairs, and they should be commended. As a matter of fact, many could learn from the professional example set by the administration in this situation.

Review stereotypical

Editor,

This is in response to Richard Jones' review of Warrant's new album. I realize we are all free to state our own opinions and tastes. It seems to me, however, that Jones went a bit too far.

First of all, his referral to the album as a "collection of sex-oriented stories set to erratic music" is off. Perhaps if he had sat down and read the lyrics (I read them. Warrant fans can read.) to all the songs, he would have realized that only three of the album's 12 songs contain lyrics pertaining to sex. "Blind Faith" and "I Saw Red" are about being in love and being betrayed, respectively. There are no references to sex in those songs. I challenge you to find any lyrics about sex in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" or in any of the remaining songs.

Secondly, the way the band refers to its assistants obviously doesn't bother those people who are directly involved, so why worry about it? If they thought it was that rude, something would have been done about it.

Then there's the fact that Jones doesn't seem to spend too much time on the music itself. He seems more interested in slamming the group by referring to them as "leather-clad rock rookies." What does that have to do with anything? It shouldn't make a difference if the band runs around in leather or just plain boxer shorts. I thought reviews were supposed to critique the music and not dissect and label its choice of clothing like a magazine ad in Vogue or G.Q.

Finally, Jones stepped out of line in the last paragraph. If Warrant wants to thank God for their success, then that's its business. It is lucky to be successful because many bands never get that chance. At least it isn't too high and mighty to admit it. As for Warrant's fans, perhaps Jones hadn't realized that they aren't all centrally located in California. That's an outright stereotype. I'm sorry he didn't pay more attention in geography class in high school. The United States has more than one state.

Perhaps next time he could state his valid reasons for not liking an album and refrain from stereotyping and slamming it through the floor.

Better luck next time, dude.

Eliminate campout

Editor,

Thank you for the editorial addressing the problem of the basketball campout. Unfortunately, I doubt it will do anything to change the procedure because it seems easier to live with the tradition, flaws and all, than to have to work to improve it. It makes me wonder, though, just when the students here are going to wise up and demand a system of ticket distribution that doesn't make getting a good ticket more important than going to class, getting decent sleep and staying healthy.

The present system seems to say that anyone who has an extra $70 lying around can buy a season ticket, but they'll have to wait in line behind those who have an extra $20 to "donate" to ICAT, those who had an additional $42 to buy a football ticket, those who have the time, energy, and stamina to brave the elements (maybe not sub-zero temperatures, but certainly a rainy night or two) in front of Ahearn, those who can afford to skip a few classes, and those who have enough friends (brothers, sisters, roommates) to get the whole thing organized and to keep someone camping at all times.

I love 'Cat basketball, and I don't want to knock the whole system because I'm sure there are a lot of good things about the campout like ... well ... umm ... it sure looks neat, and maybe we'll be in USA Today again. I know that if the campout was ever done away with there would be some people who would be upset because they like it. To those I say, hey, you can still sleep out on the ground in front of Ahearn for a week every October if you want to. Let's just not have it be a criterion for getting tickets.

Abortion main issue

Editor,

Once again the abortion battle is being fought. People on both sides of the issue are determining who they are going to support for governor. The pro-choicers and the anti-abortionists are rallying their support for the candidate that best serves their stance.

The people on each side of the abortion issue have their reasons why they support one side or the other. The biggest argument in this issue seems to be — where does life start? I look at this argument from a different point of view by starting with — where does life end? According to the dictionary, life ends in a permanent cessation of all vital functions. This means brain death. My argument is, what if life ends with brain wave activity? The direct opposite must be that life begins with brain waves. Then, when the fetus develops a brain wave pattern, life technically begins. Once life is established, it is protected by the Constitution so that abortion beyond that point is murder.

Last but not least, I am not happy with the Supreme Court. It went so far as to realize this argument but didn't use it. So it decided to let the states argue the issue. Some people weigh the candidates' views on abortion to decide for whom they will vote. I believe that it is wrong to decide who to vote for based on the abortion issue. It is the Supreme Court's fault for not handing down a decision that is technically correct.

Only the majority will rule based on what it believes to be right or wrong by electing the candidate that supports its side of the issue.

Arts fair benefits hospital auxiliary

By Charlie Gatschet
Collegian Reporter

The 17th annual Pumpkin Patch Arts and Crafts Fair starts Friday in CiCo Park's Pottorff Hall area.

More than 130 exhibitors from Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska and Oklahoma will be on hand to sell crafts ranging from dolls to glassware. The fair features only handmade items and is the largest such event in the area.

"There are no manufactured goods in the exhibits — everything is handmade," said Debi Hensley, president of the Memorial Hospital Auxiliary, which sponsors the event.

The fair runs from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. Friday, and from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday. A special one-hour shopping time for senior citizens will be from 9 a.m. to 10 a.m. on both days.

"The Pumpkin Patch is a quality fair that exhibits some of the nicer arts and crafts you'll find in this area," said Julie Davenport, Memorial Hospital public relations director. "Some of the exhibitors have been to all 16 fairs, and there is always a long waiting list just to get a booth."

Homemade pies, hamburgers, hot dogs, chili are among the food items available throughout the fair with a special dinner menu available Friday evening.

"All the food is prepared by auxiliary members," Davenport said. "The pies are homemade like grandma's. A lot of people come to the fair just to eat."

Hensley said that the Memorial Hospital Auxiliary is a non-profit organization that serves the hospital and that all proceeds from the fair are donated to the hospital. Last year more than $12,000 was raised from the fair and used to purchase furniture for a hospital renovation project.

"When all is said and done, the Pumpkin Patch solicits the services of almost 200 volunteers," Hensley said.

There is no admission charge to Pumpkin Patch, so the majority of the money comes from food sales and rent charged to exhibitors for booth slots.

Attendance at the event was about 10,000 last year, and Hensley expects more this year, even if the weather doesn't cooperate.

"We pray for no rain," Hensley said. "But we've had inclement weather in the past and it hasn't hurt our crowds. People are so geared up for it that they come out anyway."

All the food items will be in Pottorff Hall, while the arts and crafts booths will be in the covered buildings to the north of Pottorff.

Cantwell calls integrity issue

Candidate says Stephan's conduct in office sets poor example

CAMPAIGN 1990
Attorney General Race
Bert Cantwell

By Alan Wilds
Staff Reporter

Bert Cantwell, Democratic challenger for Kansas Attorney General, says he wants to bring integrity to the states' chief law office.

Cantwell made a brief campaign stop in Manhattan Wednesday to visit with supporters and the local Democratic Party.

During an interview, Cantwell outlined what he considers to be the biggest problems facing the state and accused incumbent Bob Stephan of misusing his position and not addressing certain issues.

Although Cantwell said his primary issue in the campaign is Stephan's misconduct in office, he showed concern for the state's rising violent crime rate, which is up to 16 percent.

"I see the attorney general as falling down on the law enforcement aspect of his job," Cantwell said, stressing the attorney general must wear two hats as a lawyer and a law enforcement officer. "The crime rate is rising faster here than any other Midwestern state."

Cantwell

Cantwell cited his experience as Wyandotte County sheriff, superintendant of highway patrol and U.S. Marshal as credentials for being able to crack down on violent crimes.

"I'm the only guy in the state who has been involved in law enforcement at all three levels," he said.

Cantwell said Stephan has been fairly consistent in consumer affairs; however, he said there are some changes he would like to see.

"Consumer protection has been a good area for a number of years," he said. "However, I would like to see them get a little more aggressive and become more sensitive to the needs of consumers."

Cantwell's said his biggest complaint against Stephan has been the on-going controversy surrounding a sexual harassment lawsuit filed by one of Stephan's former employees and the $64,000 in state money he claims Stephan spent on defense attorneys.

"He just has not been a good role model with all of his legal problems," he said. "His personal bankruptcy and the investigation by the FBI are examples of his behavior in office."

Cantwell described his own campaign as quiet due to his law practice commitments.

"One thing that has frustated me is the fact I had no opponent in the primary election and neither did Stephan," he said. "Therefore the press concentrated on the governer's race and was rather quiet about the attorney general's position."

Thomas Kirker, Riley County Democratic chairman, said he expects the race to remain low-key due to an increasing number of Kansans who are not familiar with the candidates.

Kirker said Cantwell must campaign as much as possible while continuing his job in order to make himself known.

"Maybe 50 percent of the people know about the attorney general's race," Kirker said. "Sometimes people tend not to look at the candidates that can really have an impact on their lives."

Cantwell said he has raised more money for his campaign than any other Democrat in the state other than John Carlin.

Brett wins third AL batting crown

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — George Brett sees no taint on the batting title that made him the first player ever to win one in each of three decades.

Brett finished the season at .329 to edge out Oakland's Rickey Henderson by four points and become the third-oldest player to win the batting title.

The Kansas City first baseman was criticized by fans and by the local paper in the final week as he chose to sit out of some games, particularly against tough lefthanders.

"We had no place to go. The Oakland A's had no place to go," Brett said at a news conference after the Royals team flight arrived from Cleveland. "Once the division championships are settled, then it's time to become an individual. Everybody took days off. It wasn't just me. I played all three games when the A's were here. Rickey didn't play against (Bret) Saberhagen. I wouldn't play against Saberhagen.

"It was like a long-distance chess match. We played our hand, and it turned out our hand was better."

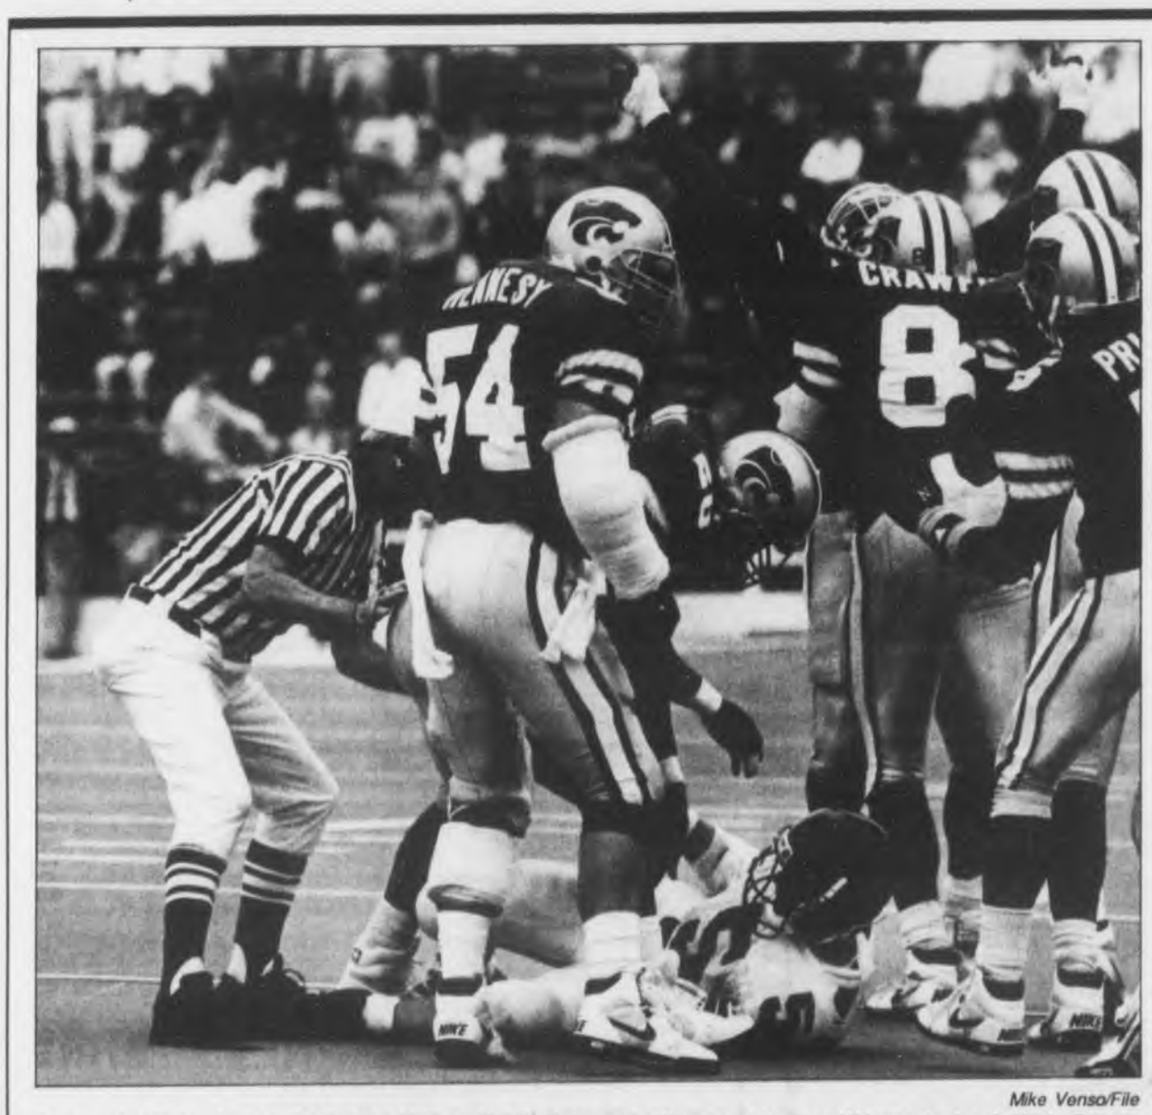
Brett said he consulted several people on whether he should play everyday or pick his spots.

"I talked to people I respect in the game," he said. "They said you've come too far to lose it. You've got to make them win it. John Wathan said it, John McNamara said it, Bob Boone said it. It meant a lot to them. It meant a lot to me. It meant a lot to my family."

The title capped a season that Brett started in the worst slump of his career. His batting average had dipped below .200 at one point in the early going and the whispers began that he was washed up at age 37 after 15 years in the majors.

"It's crazy to be so bad for so long and to be written off and then to turn it around and win a batting title," said Brett, who says he suddenly found his swing hitting a foul ball in Boston just after the All-Star break.

"I had so much doubt in myself early on in the season. I really doubted my ability."



Brett went on to hit near or above .400 for most of the second half, suddenly beginning again to hit his characteristic line drives to all parts of the field.

In a season in which he began climbing all sorts of all-time career lists, Brett became the oldest player to win the title since Ted Williams won at 40 in 1958 and Honus Wagner did it in 1911.

Brett seemed more intent on winning this year because of some of the aura around his other two. In 1976, Brett had to bat .333 and get three hits on the final day of the season to edge teammate Hal McRae.

In 1980, Brett spent much the second half flirting with .400, finishing at .390 as Kansas City went to its first World Series.

"This is the sweetest," Brett said. "You people had me buried in town. Then you come back and win a batting title. I guess it's a case of he who laughs last laughs best. It is just a tremendous feeling."

Former K-State standout Maurice Henry, shown here standing over former KU quarterback Kelly Donohoe, was drafted by the NFL's Detroit Lions and is now with the Philadelphia Eagles.

Former Wildcat Henry now Philadelphia Eagle

By Russ Ewy
Sports Reporter

The next time you're watching a Philadelphia Eagles game, pay some attention to the special teams.

After catching the eyes of pro scouts with his performances in the Blue-Gray Game and during NFL camp, former K-State defensive end Maurice Henry has seen his hard work move him into the big time.

"I just never really thought about going to the pros," Henry said. "They were telling me that in the off season I need to work hard, do this and do that and you may have a legitimate chance of making the pros. I never really took it seriously, but I kept up with (my training), and my last year (at K-State) came around, and I did fairly good. I was invited to some bowl games and to camp and impressed some people there.

"It's not all the glamour everybody thinks it is (in the NFL). It's really a lot of hard work, a lot of hours, and there's a lot of things you have to go through. They demand a lot of your time, and you have to grow real fast. It's like living on the edge, but that's the way I like to live — you have to take chances. I'm having fun and making the best of it as long as I can."

Henry was drafted last spring as a running back by the Detroit Lions. It was the same position he played during his first two years for the 'Cats before moving to the defense.

"I got down to Detroit, they drafted me as a running back, and I was down there about six or seven weeks," Henry said. "I was a little surprised (that they drafted me as a running back). When they first told me about it, I thought it was cool, no big deal.

"The closer the draft came, I knew (the Lions) wanted me as a running back, and there were a couple of other teams that wanted me as a linebacker. I never thought I would be drafted as a back, but they were looking for a guy with pretty good size for blocking."

Henry's prospects of making the team at Detroit eventually fell apart.

"I got drafted and went down there, but it was one of those things — I was in a situation of being there at the wrong time," Henry said. "When it got down to the last couple of cuts, they released me. After they released me, my name went out through this (waiver) wire and all the teams had access, for 24 hours, to pick me up.

"There were a couple of teams that called. I really wasn't expecting those teams to call that early. After (the Lions) released me, I stayed in Detroit for a while, then I came home and talked to my agent. He told me that there were a couple of teams that called for me and wanted me to call them and see what was up. I called, and Philadelphia had me fly out the next day."

Henry has been worked into the Philadelphia lineup via the kickoff-coverage, kickoff-return, punt and punt-block special teams while getting adjusted to the Eagles' defensive scheme.

"I'm playing outside linebacker, and the defense that we run is fairly complicated. It's going to take some time to learn it, so while I'm learning it, I'm helping out on special teams and starting on almost all the special teams," Henry said. "I'm having fun doing that and have learned a lot. I'm in no big hurry and I've got patience, so I'll wait."

While at Salina Central, the former Wildcat captain never expected to play football even at the college level.

"Frankly, I never thought I'd be playing college football," Henry said. "I was a track man myself — I loved to run track and did pretty well at it. I had a lot of offers from KU and K-State, and some others, to run track. Since I only played

Reds, Bucs set to meet

NL Championship Series, on paper, appears to be even

By The Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Forget about home-field advantage for the National League playoffs and throw out post-season experience. The Cincinnati Reds and Pittsburgh Pirates have little of that.

Head-to-head results? Dead even.

It's hard to find an advantage for either team as the NL playoffs begin Thursday at Riverfront Stadium, and they kind of like it that way.

"It's not going to be a thing about matchups or this strength against that weakness," Pittsburgh's Bobby Bonilla said. "It's just going to be two teams going after each other. It's going to be a lot of fun."

They split their season series 6-6 against each other. The Pirates came to Cincinnati in mid-August and put together their first-ever four-game series sweep at Riverfront. The next weekend, the Reds took three of four in Pittsburgh.

They proved something to each other: neither team can feel dominant in its home park.

"Those were three big games against Pittsburgh," Reds manager Lou Piniella said. "When they beat us five in a row, people were starting to wonder."

Part of the reason could be the ballparks. The two cities are only about an hour's flight away, their weather is similar, and their fields are nearly identical — Riverfront Stadium and Three Rivers Stadium are a close match.

Neither team has been in the playoffs since 1979, when the Pirates swept the Reds in three games and went on to win the World Series. Neither team can claim an advantage in post-season experience.

"Pittsburgh's winning something for the first time, like us," reliever Rob Dibble said. "I think it will be a much more even series."

The Reds had a .266 team batting average, best in the league and seven points higher than Pittsburgh. But the Pirates have scored more runs and hit more homers.

The Pirates led the league in team earned run average with 3.38, but the Reds were right behind at 3.40.

The Pirates have the "Killer B's" — Bonilla and Bobby Bonds, the heart of the order and the main concern for first-game starter Jose Rijo. Bonds hit just .190 against the Reds this season, but Bonilla hit .390 with six homers — three of them during the sweep — and 13 RBIs.

The Reds have Eric Davis supported by an interchangeable cast of players who can hit for average, steal and occasionally hit for power.

"Outside of Eric Davis, you don't have a spectacular player who can kill you by himself," Pirates pitching coach Ray Miller said. "But all the way up and down the lineup, they have good athletes with speed."

Bosox win East

BOSTON — The Boston Red Sox won the American League East championship for the third time in five years Wednesday night, defeating the Chicago White Sox 3-1 on the final night of the regular season behind the pitching of Mike Boddicker and Jeff Reardon.

Fielder knocks 50th HR

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Cecil Fielder became the first American Leaguer to hit 50 home runs since Roger Maris and Mickey Mantle did it 29 years ago, connecting Wednesday night in the fourth inning and later adding No. 51 in the final game of the season.

"It was a lot of pressure," Fielder said. "I wouldn't wish that on anyone in baseball."

The Detroit first baseman is the 11th player to hit 50 homers and the first since George Foster of the Cincinnati Reds in 1977. The feat has been accomplished 18 times.

Fielder, who walked and lined out in his first two at-bats, sent a 2-1 pitch from New York Yankees rookie Steve Adkins into the first row of the upper-deck in left field in the fourth. He took four steps out of the batter's box, watched to see if the ball would hook foul, and when it didn't, he began jumping up and down and pumping both fists in the air.

"It was a relief," he said. "I got so excited, I jumped for joy."

Fielder had gone 2-for-21 since his last home run. His longest drought of the year without a homer was 45 at-bats.

Fielder went 0-for-4 in each of the first two games of the season-ending series at Yankee Stadium. He struck out five times, increasing his major league-leading total to 181, popped out twice and grounded to the mound.

Freshman setter adjusting to role

By Russ Ewy
Sports Reporter

Alison Murphy has moved right in at setter for the K-State volleyball squad, ranking third in the conference in assists behind seniors Val Novak of Nebraska and Jennifer Sherlock of Colorado.

After gaining metro player of the year honors from the Minneapolis Star and Tribune, the all-stater chose not to follow most of her Chaska High teammates to the University of Minnesota.

"I wanted to go to school out of state," Murphy said. "I picked K-State as one of my five schools for recruiting visits, and I liked the location, the coaches, and I got along with the girls."

The spikers had no returning setters from last season with the graduation of Leslie Kull and Kristin Martin, but Coach Scott Nelson has been grooming Murphy to fill the void.

"I think right now as a freshman, we're in a position as a team where she's not having to take on a great deal of outright leadership," Nelson said. "She is leading more by example, by what she's doing out on the court. In looking at our overall placement of sets, our percentage breakdown is excellent, so she's doing a nice job of delivering the ball to different positions along the net to keep us from being too predictable offensively.

"Things we want her to continue to improve on beyond her technical abilities of delivering the ball are the maturity and understanding of our team's strengths and weaknesses, as well as our opponent's weaknesses. That takes a little time, so right now our feeling is we're real pleased with what she's doing with our team in balancing our attack. She needs to develop technically so we can get past just the delivery of the sets and get more into the strategy of which sets to run at the right time."

Murphy says the transition from high school to K-State was made easier by the similarities of the two teams.

"This team is a lot like my high school team. We weren't very tall, but were quick and played good defense," Murphy said. "So I've really felt comfortable playing so far."

With the performance Murphy has shown so far, Nelson plans to keep her concentrating on running the 'Cats' offense.

"We've tried to set up our defense so that she doesn't have primary defensive responsibility. Eventually, one option is to increase her defensive responsibilities and keep her back on the court which would aid our team defense," Nelson said. "But at this point, we feel that its more important for her to try to stay focused offensively, more so than giving her the double responsibility."

Baker blooms late, earns honors on track

K-State Athletic
Hall of Fame
Thane Baker

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

The story of former K-State star Thane Baker provides hope for every athlete who does not believe he possesses greatness.

Baker, who was a track star from 1951-53, will be one of the first eight inductees into the K-State Athletic Hall of Fame Friday at Bramlage Coliseum.

Baker's story is one of rags to riches.

It began with his high school career in the small town of Elkhart, where he played football and ran track. He qualified for the state track meet only one time, placing sixth in both the 110- and 220-yard dash.

Upon his high school graduation, he was recruited by Dodge City Junior College to play football.

Baker, who now resides in Dallas, bypassed the junior college scene to become a Wildcat. His freshman year, Baker decided to challenge an ad he saw in the Collegian that invited anyone to try out for the track team. By the time he was a senior, he had become a 10-time Big Eight champion and the NCAA champion in the 220-yard dash.

"I told the coach about myself and he wasn't too impressed, but he said that he would give me a chance," Baker said. "Back then, freshmen were ineligible, and I had to wear hand-me-down shoes and uniforms. I never saw a new pair of shoes until my sophomore year when I ran in a meet."

Baker attributes K-State as one of the sole that he had success in running. Of all of his accomplishments and medals, his most memorable record was set while he was a Wildcat.

At an indoor meet at Colorado, Baker ran a 6.1 60-yard dash to tie the world record and set his first.

"It was my first world record. As a kid growing up, I always thought, 'wouldn't it be neat to set a world record,'" Baker said. "Once I did it, it really hit me hard."

Baker's accomplishments did not stop at the college level. He succeeded at another dream that many athletes can only fantasize about.

In 1952, he stepped onto the international scene by qualifying for the Olympics and brought home a silver medal in the 200-meter dash. In 1956, he again qualified for the Olympics to return with a gold, silver and bronze medal in the 400-meter relay, 100-meter dash and the 200-meter dash, respectively.

"The buildup to the Olympics is the biggest thing. In most people's situation there is only one chance. You are training four years for one meet and that is the tryouts," Baker said. "Once you are there, you are rubbing shoulders with some of the greatest athletes. It was a strain just being in that elite group."

While Baker participated as an athlete at K-State he was under the coaching of Ward Haylett, who will also be inducted on Friday's ceremony. Baker contributes most of his success to Haylett and the fact that he was an excellent coach with no assistants.

"Ward Haylett was a great gentleman and a motivator in my particular situation," Baker said. "There was a chemistry between us that made it my most significant aspect in athletics."

Becoming an inductee to a hall of fame is not a new feat for Baker. He is a member of the National Track and Field, Kansas Sports and the Kansas High School Activities Association Hall of Fames, but he said the K-State induction will carry a special meaning.

"Needless to say, it is the closest to my heart. K-State is where everything started," Baker said. "If it wouldn't have been for K-State, I would have never gotten anywhere. Nothing else would have followed."

Budget proposal results in battle

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — "Blame me," President Bush invites nervous Republicans as he searches for votes to pass an unpopular package of tax increases and spending cuts.

The budget deal may be painful now, but the alternative probably is a deep recession that could doom Bush's re-election hopes in 1992.

Bush has put his popularity squarely on the line for an agreement that has sent election-minded congressmen diving into foxholes. The deal will hurt everyone, with higher taxes on gasoline, cigarettes, liquor and wine and increased health care costs for the elderly on Medicare.

"It's like drinking a gallon of castor oil," said Sen. John Warner, R-Va., "but we're going to do it."

Maybe so, but Republican lawmakers have deserted their president in droves. They are particularly angry over Bush's reversal on his no-new-taxes pledge, robbing Republicans of the same popular campaign cry that propelled Bush into the White House.

To win back the dissidents, Bush made a televised speech to the nation asking Americans to take some bitter medicine to restore the health of America's economy. If the agreement does not pass, he warned the economy will falter, markets may tumble and recession will follow.

Presidential warnings of a dire economic future are only part of a strategy that also includes arm-twisting sessions with Republicans at the White House and private appeals in telephone calls.

"Say the president encouraged you to do it," Bush said. "Blame me, because I know what's best for our country. But I don't suspect it's politically popular."

With his high popularity ratings, Bush can afford to take a hit. His ratings have been as high as 80 percent, buoyed by approval of his handling of the Persian Gulf crisis.

"It's, I guess, about as complicated as a period as we've had since I've been president," Bush said, referring to the twin problems of the budget and the gulf. "But I'm not looking at it in terms of re-election. ... The American people are entitled to something a little bit more broader-gauged than that."

Both sides in the budget battle are playing the underdog. For the White House, that would make a victory seem to be an even bigger triumph. From Bush's opponents, it is a message that Bush doesn't need every GOP vote.

Curiously, Bush is not demanding complete Republican loyalty on what he says is a vote to avoid economic catastrophe. There is no threat of White House punishment.

Pentagon to reorder basic goods; gulf demand reduces inventories

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The value of the food, clothing and medical goods needed to resupply U.S. troops in the Middle East has already passed a half-billion dollars, draining inventories at Pentagon supply depots and spawning lucrative new contracts — $100 million worth in the last week alone.

The deployment of some 170,000 American troops more than 7,000 miles from home has forced the Pentagon to scrap plans to cut purchases of the modern-day C-ration, Meals Ready to Eat, and to ask manufacturers to quickly supply uniforms and other gear designed for use in the desert.

Food and clothing are by far the most needed items being ordered from the Pentagon's nationwide supply operation. Officials at the major depots say most orders now are being filled from existing stocks but that inventories are being drained as the deployment nears the two-month mark.

As of Tuesday, the Pentagon depot that handles orders for food, clothing and medical supplies said it had received 47,208 requisitions for $563 million worth of goods directly related to Operation Desert Shield. The orders were for $55.8 million in medical supplies, $293 million in food and $214 million in clothing and textiles.

Included in those orders were requests for nearly 40 million meals — 30 million MREs and 7.8 million servings of hot meals packaged in ready-to-heat trays.

On Monday, the Pentagon awarded two new contracts for MREs worth more than $52 million. The contracts going to Southern Packing Co. of South Carolina and Cincinnati Packaging of Ohio were for nearly 33 million MREs, the 3,000-calories meals served to troops when they have no access to hot meals.

Those companies assemble and box the meals, which on average cost the government $3.70 apiece. Some of the components are supplied by the government, depending on its supplies; others are purchased by the packing firms from subcontractors.

In the new fiscal year, which began Monday, the Department of Defense had planned to drop its MRE order to 2.2 million cases — 26.4 million meals — but has hiked its order to 3.4 million cases, or nearly 41 million meals, because of the Middle East deployment.

The new MRE orders were made three days after the Pentagon awarded Wornick Family Foods of San Carlos, Tex., a $7.6 million contract to supply the Army, by February, with 400,000 canned rations of dehydrated beef, pork and shrimp.

Last Friday the Pentagon exercised an option it had with Isratex Inc. of West Virginia to provide 294,550 chemical suits, to be made with desert camouflage fabric. Isratex has supplied the suits to the Pentagon in the past but in traditional dark green camouflage.

Accreditation given after review

Professional interior design recognized by national organization

By Rob Batchman
Collegian Reporter

K-State's professional interior design program has received accreditation for the next six years.

The program was given full accreditation this month by the Foundation for Interior Design Education Research, a national accrediting agency.

"Accreditation looks at the components within the curriculum and at the productivity of the students coming out of that curriculum," said Mary Peterson, department head of interior design.

"To receive accreditation means that we have met the standards and guidelines that are set forth by the accrediting agency," she said.

Ludwig Villasi, coordinator of the interior design program, said the accreditation sets the standards and criteria for all programs.

"The accreditation provides quality and standards for any program, but also is a control mechanism. The teams set guidelines and criteria so that all programs in a specific area are measured against the same set of standards and guidelines," he said.

Peterson said the accrediting team conducted an extensive review of the department.

"They look at your facilities, your space, your equipment, the library resources and your support services. They also interview supporting faculty and administration," she said.

"They spend a great deal of time looking at student work. They review course outlines, syllabuses, assignments and pay much attention to the quality of work the students do in the various classes within the program," Peterson said.

The department submits an extensive self-study six weeks prior to the visit that addresses areas such as student work and program facilities. This allows the team to have a better understanding of the program's structure before coming to campus.

"They spend two and a half days on campus," Villasi said. "They have a chance to see and hear what they want."

The interior design program has grown to 234 students this fall, making it one of the largest programs in the College of Human Ecology.

Peterson said she attributes the growth to the quality of past graduates.

"Our graduates represent us well, which reflects positively on the program and our program's growth," she said.

The department is the only accredited four-year interior design program in Kansas. This is an elite honor, Villasi said.

"Many programs desire it but are unable to accomplish it," he said. "Accreditation opens doors to professional organizations which become very important in careers. It's also good publicity. In the long range, it's the student who benefits."

New album breaks down barriers

David Torn sings, writes record lyrics

By Stacy Lentz

COLLEGIAN Report Card
"DOOR X"
A

David Torn describes the emblem for our time as windows, doors, barriers and borders — things that make us feel like we're blocked from being part of the universe we live in.

This sentiment sets the stage for what Torn accomplishes with his latest album, "Door X." The work rips down another wall and removes another barrier.

"Door X" is an album of change and transition, a mission of search and destroy, Torn's standard procedure.

Torn's style is best described as experimental jazz or new age. His reputation as one of the most individualistic electric guitar stylists of the day puts him on the cutting edge of modern music.

The album combines guitar sonorities with jazz melodies, creating an atmosphere built around an original system of electronic signal processing: sound loops and delays refract Torn's guitar into funhouse mirrors of overlapping sound.

This array of electronic processing is not an afterthought to Torn's guitar playing, but rather an intregral part of it. In "Door X," he sculpts sound in simultaneous directions and yet builds into each composition a feeling of beginning, climax and ending.

On previous efforts, Torn had been solely an instrumentalist. With "Door X," Torn takes the roles of singer and lyricist. Six of the album's ten cuts contain vocals that lyrically reflect Torn's literary tastes — Russell Hoban, Tom McGuane and Doris Lessing. The other four compositions are instrumentals.

"Door X" opens with "Time Bomb," a song that I feel sums up the album with a chorus that impinges on one's brain: "It's about magic/It's about love/Every mind has got to be defused."

Torn sings lyrics of irony, alienation and visible/invisible barriers in a fragile voice pushed to the edge. This is especially evident on "Time Bomb" and "Diamond Mansions."

Torn also pays tribute on his album to Jimi Hendrix with an Indian blues rendition of "Voodoo Chile." Hendrix influences in many of Torn's pieces.

Each song features Torn's odd sense of structure and knack for inserting sonic shifts that achieve startling effects. Torn's guitar will capture you in world of sound where there are no barriers, borders or limits.

Stadium may lose fields to planning

Gary Lytle/Staff

The Men's Soccer Club practices at Memorial Stadium, the proposed site for new campus buildings, Wednesday afternoon. Although no plans have been formally approved, the Memorial Stadium area is the tentative site for construction of a new art museum, enrollment center and campus entrance.

By Lajean Rau
Collegian Reporter

Athletic activities and entertainment in the Memorial Stadium fields may be a thing of the past.

Though the scheduling for the stadium's main and south fields has been busy this year, both areas are proposed sites for new campus development.

A new art museum, an enrollment center and an upgrading of the entrance to campus from 17th Street are among the additions proposed by the K-State Facilities Planning Office long-range development plan.

"Nothing has been approved by the administration yet," said Larry Garvin, director of facilities planning. "It is all very tentative and still in the planning stages, but the area proposed is the Memorial Stadium area."

The time frame for these developments depends on many things, including fund raising for the proposed art museum through the Essential Edge Campaign, Garvin said.

Essential Edge is a $100-million private fund-raising endeavor currently underway through the KSU Foundation.

Funds will go to scholarships, securing top faculty members, improving the library, improving intercollegiate athletics, boosting research and building a new art museum.

Of the developments in the works for the stadium area, only the proposed art museum is part of the Essential Edge program.

Many people have voiced concern regarding the loss of the stadium and the south activity field.

Loleta Sump, special services manager with the Division of University Physical Facilities, is in charge of scheduling activities on these two fields.

"Things have run fairly smoothly this year, but it has been pretty full," Sump said. "Because of all the conflicts, this year we did some things differently. We met in August with the athletic clubs who have traditionally used the fields to try to work with them and meet their needs ahead of time."

Campus organizations also hold activities in the fields. Most are philanthropies such as Ironman, sponsored by Campus Crusade for Christ and the Sigma Nu/Chi Omega Pledge Olympic Games benefitting the American Red Cross.

"In regard to the rumors about the proposed art museum, we have addressed the issue," Sump said. "We sent a memo to facilities planning voicing our concerns about eliminating these playing areas. They are the only areas of their kind besides the fields at the Rec Complex, which are usually very busy with intramurals," she said.

Charles Hedgecoth, faculty adviser for the women's soccer club, said that when the fields are booked and the club needs to schedule a game or tournament they are forced to resort to using Parks and Recreation fields which cost the club about $20 each time.

"I feel very strongly about this," he said. "The use of the fields has increased quite dramatically. There is obviously a need for human-activities areas like these, and they are the only ones we have," Hedgecoth said.

There are many factors and many people to consider in a decision like this, said Helen Cooper, space analyst for facilities management.

"We are looking at a very long-term plan. The plan addresses the needs of the University and how to go about solving them," she said.

"You have to make decisions as to what sites are available for development and look at what the campus wants to accomplish and look like in the future," Cooper said.

Interest in hospitality industries contributes to growth of programs

By Rob Batchman
Collegian Reporter

The Department of Hotel, Restaurant and Institution Management and Dietetics in the College of Human Ecology is one of the fastest-growing programs on campus.

Enrollment in the program has increased tremendously, said Patrick Pesci, head of the department.

"We've grown more than 400 percent in the last three years," Pesci said. "We now have more than 250 students enrolled in the department."

Pesci said growth in the hospitality industry has caused the increase of students.

"We parallel with the trends of the industry, and the hospitality industry is one of the fastest-growing industries in the country," he said. "There are tremendous opportunities out there."

Arleta Clark, senior in hotel and restaurant management, agreed.

"There's a lot more interest in hospitality and in tourism. People are traveling more and eating out more, and therefore our industry is growing," she said.

Clark said most of her friends in hotel and restaurant management have had little difficulty finding jobs after graduation.

"A lot of them have been able to find jobs in the industry without too much trouble," she said. "There's enough jobs available, and I believe there will be in the future."

Pesci said the hotel and restaurant industry now offers more jobs than there are graduates of four-year programs, and the demand for management is increasing.

"Just about every one of our graduates finds a job where they want to work, doing what they want to do," Pesci said. "For every one of our graduates in this program, there are seven jobs out there waiting for them. The ones who don't find jobs, it's usually their choice — they get married, go back to school or get into another field."

All students in hotel and restaurant management are required to do an internship before graduation. The internship counts for three hours of college credit, and students must complete at least 400 hours on the job. Most students do the internship over the summer, working for a restaurant or hotel chain.

"We've had students in Colorado, Kansas City, the Ozarks and Dallas," Pesci said. "Our students go to exotic places and have fun, but they work their tails off and come back with a very rewarding experience.

"It's a two-way street. The student gets a first-hand understanding of the hospitality industry, but also the hotel and restaurant people get a first-hand look at the student," he said. "We've had a number of students do an internship and be offered a job at the end of it."

Clark said an internship is one of the best ways to prepare for a first job.

Program provides hands-on training

Lab research offers credit to students

By Danette King
Collegian Reporter

Juniors and seniors now have the opportunity to receive hands-on science research experience through a program offered by the U.S. Department of Energy.

A Science and Engineering Research Semester program is offered at six federal labs across the nation, including the Oak Ridge National Laboratory in Tennessee. It is designed for students interested in engineering, computer science, physics, mathematics, chemistry and environmental and life sciences.

"The purpose of the program is to enhance and supplement scientific education," said Helen Payne, project administrator of college and university programs for ORNL.

Participants use advanced technology and equipment as they become involved in intensive research projects. They also attend seminars and symposiums sponsored by the lab where they are working.

Ernestine Friedman, program director of Oak Ridge's Science and Engineering Research Semester, said the program involves a wide range of research opportunities.

"Every student is under the immediate supervision (of a research adviser) that they will work closely with," Friedman said.

She said a majority of the students receive credit from their home institution in addition to taking classes from nearby colleges.

"We try to encourage students to take classes that will not interfere with their laboratory experiences during the day," Friedman said.

About half of the students take one class at colleges in the labs' general area to stay on track for graduation, Friedman said.

In addition to the experience the program offers, student costs are kept to a minimum.

"We try to structure the program so it doesn't cost the student anything," Friedman said.

Each student receives a weekly stipend of $200, free housing and travel reimbursement for relocation.

The federal program started in 1987 with 10 students and has increased this past spring to 38 students.

To apply, students must be 18 years old, have completed their sophomore year at a U.S. accredited college or university and be a U.S. citizen.

Friedman said a 3.0 GPA is encouraged.

All applications are sent directly to Washington, D.C., where they are reviewed and then sent to the student's first and second location choices. Once each laboratory receives the applications, individual senior staff scientists who would like to supervise a student independently choose their student.

Payne said the evaluations at the end of each term show that the program is a excellent learning tool.

"Students feel it is a valuable experience," Payne said. "Often the students indicate they want to go on in scientific research."

Annual concert competitive

K-State, Nebraska clubs to perform

By Rob Batchman
Collegian Reporter

There will be a different kind of competition at a joint concert of the K-State and University of Nebraska men's glee clubs at 8 p.m. Friday in All Faiths Chapel.

The concert, an annual event for more than 25 years, is scheduled for the evening prior to the K-State-Nebraska football game.

Gerald Polich, professor of music and conductor of the K-State Men's Glee Club, said a rivalry exists between the two singing groups.

"The concert occurs the night before the K-State and Nebraska football game, which is already a rivalry," he said. "They have about an equal-sized group, so the competition's really great."

"It's kind of a duel between the two schools," said club member John E. Foust, senior in hotel and restaurant management. "We both sing around six or seven songs, and each one tries to outdo the other.

"I think we're sounding the best we've sounded in two years," Foust said.

"There's not very many glee clubs in this part of the country, so it's always nice to hear another group sing and to compare yourself with them. I think only four of the Big Eight schools have glee clubs," Polich said.

The men will be singing a variety of music, including sacred selections, upbeat music and a medley of fight songs from the Big Eight Conference.

Polich said the group has about 74 singers and is doing well this year.

"The Glee Club is very strong," he said. "It's equally balanced among all four parts. They have a good sound, and I think it will be a very enjoyable program."

"The students are from all over the campus. Probably every college is represented in the club."

"It's just a bunch of guys who in their spare time like to get together and sing," he said. "They take an hour out of each day, four days a week, and get together and practice."

Tickets for the concert are $3 at the door.

2Live Crew member convicted in obscenity case

By The Associated Press

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — Jurors deliberated less than three hours before convicting 2Live Crew's Charles Freeman on a misdemeanor obscenity charge.

He was arrested by undercover Broward County sheriff's deputies June 8 for selling the Miami rap group's album "As Nasty As They Wanna Be" in his E-C Records store.

The case went to a jury of five women and one man after final arguments this morning. Freeman could get a year in jail and a $1,000 fine.

Sentencing was set for Nov. 2.

"It doesn't represent my community where E-C Records is!" Freeman shouted as he left the courthouse. "It's unfair. The jury was all white. They don't know where E-C Records is. They don't know a ... thing about the ghetto."

Prosecutors contended the album exceeds the limits of community standards and free speech with explicit, and sometimes violent, references to sex. Freeman was arrested two days after U.S. District Judge Jose Gonzalez ruled the lyrics were obscene.

But in his closing argument, defense attorney Bruce Rogow told the jury one person's vulgarity is another person's art and argued that the jury could not convict Freeman if they found any artistic merit in the group's album.

Assistant State Attorney Leslie Robson argued that the right to free speech is not absolute, saying: "The First Amendment does not give you the right to say what you want, when you want and where you want. With rights and freedom come responsibility."

As the jurors began deliberating, alternate juror Sheryl Salomon, who sat through the trial but was not needed on the final panel, said she would have voted for acquittal.

"I was very offended by it, especially the lyrics, but I have to question whether there is not artistic value," she said. "It's music, it's still music."

In the final day of testimony Tuesday, a psychologist testified that the group's music may be degrading or humorous, but it's not sexually stimulating.

Merry Haber, a clinical psychologist in Miami who has been in practice for 25 years, testified she saw no evidence rap music aroused prurient interest, an essential part of the U.S. Supreme Court definition of obscenity.

She said she gave the album to about 15 of her patients to get their opinions. The women found it degrading, and both sexes said it was somewhat humorous. All deemed it boring rather than sexually stimulating, she testified.

Broward County Judge Paul Backman has told jurors they should find the album obscene if it appeals to morbid, shameful interest in sex and violates the standards of average residents of Broward County.

two years of football in high school, I just figured I was a so-so player.

"I guess one thing led to another, and my high school coach at Salina Central must have seen something in me that made him think I could go farther."

And so he did, but he found the first two years in Division I difficult.

"As far as K-State goes, things were pretty shaky during my first couple of years," Henry said. "There were people saying you can't do this and you can't do that. By the time I got around to my junior year, I started making more of a game out of it — started having more fun. When (Stan) Parrish and (Bill) Snyder got there, those two kind of showed me the light and helped me find and develop the talent that I did have."

After gaining second-team all-conference honors in 1988 and honorable mention all-conference in 1989, Henry saw K-State finish 1-10 in his senior season, but he isn't too surprised that the 'Cats have turned over a new leaf.

"I've been talking to a few people back (in Manhattan). I'm glad (K-State is) winning," Henry said. "I think it took some time for the guys to buy what (Snyder) was selling. It was hard to do that last year in the middle of the season after you lost all those games. Now those guys have a fresh start and have (those wins under their belts). (Snyder) is doing a good job there, and I hope he continues to do what needs to be done."

send German troops to the Persian Gulf. He said a united and sovereign Germany was willing to help U.N. efforts in protecting and restoring peace.

Although Germany has committed $2 billion to the U.S.-led multinational effort to isolate Iraq after Iraqi troops invaded Kuwait, Washington has urged the Germans to do more.

Germans say their constitution prevents them from sending troops outside NATO territory, but Kohl reaffirmed in his message that he will seek an amendment that will make such a move possible.

His message came after Germany held a nightlong, nationwide celebration with fireworks and music.

The nation united at the stroke of midnight when a giant German flag was raised in front of the battle-scarred Reichstag building in Berlin. Kohl, von Weizsaecker and other leaders joined in singing the national anthem.

Random violence marred the unification celebrations overnight in nearly a dozen cities, including Hamburg, Goettingen and Leipzig, the cradle of East Germany's peaceful revolution against the old Communist government.

In Berlin, about 20,000 protesters, most of them young leftists, rallied Wednesday in the working class district of Kreuzberg. As the march moved toward central Alexanderplatz square, a group of protesters wearing masks broke store windows, set cars afire and scuffled with passers-by.

Police battled the protesters with nightsticks and fired water cannons and tear gas.

In 1989, Slattery accepted $1,000 in campaign contributions from two officers of the bank. He has discounted any connection between the donation and his prior assistance to the bank.

The default of federally insured student loans made by the Horton bank leaves taxpayers with a potential bill of $66.8 million. Slattery said that the impact of the defaults has been exaggerated and that he believes the government will eventually be able to collect repayments.

"It not only gives you contact with potential employers, it gives you a really good idea of what your job is going to be like," she said.

Pesci said one common misconception about the hotel and restaurant management program is that it is simple.

"Our graduates have to take chemistry, Accounting I and II, business finance and managerial accounting. We want them to have a good background in the business area. We have a great interest in our students being able to communicate."

Pesci said he would like the department to seek more grants in the future.

"The grants that we are trying to acquire will give our students an added advantage with the hospitality industry. They will enable us to work more cooperatively with this industry and develop a one-in-one relationship with some of the bigger companies," he said.

Nebraska looking for improved play in conference tilts

By David Svoboda
Sports Editor

At 4-0 in non-conference play, you wouldn't think there would be too many dissatisfied people involved with the football program at Nebraska.

Think again.

When dominance — total, complete, utter — is the norm, anything less is unacceptable.

So after Nebraska closed out the first four games on its schedule last Saturday with a 31-7 win over an Oregon State team that Kansas had defeated 38-12, there were a few long faces in the 'Husker locker room.

And at halftime of the game, with Nebraska trailing 7-3, the players got a tongue-lashing from Coach Tom Osborne.

"I told them that they were on the verge of maybe the biggest embarrassment this school had ever had, and maybe the upset of the year if they didn't get with it," said Osborne, the veteran of 18 seasons as Nebraska's head coach.

The team got with it, but not before allowing a Beaver touchdown. Yep, the 'Huskers allowed a touchdown and got upset about it.

"We'll learn from this," senior linebacker Pat Tyrance said. "After the Minnesota game (a 56-0 'Husker win), we got to thinking we were really good, and maybe unstoppable. Then to have Oregon State drive the ball on us and score seven, well ... there were some guys on 'D' whose eyes got real big. This just proves you have to play week in and week out."

Get the idea that these guys play with a different set of standards than most teams?

The 'Huskers, ranked eighth in this week's Associated Press poll, allow 2.85 yards per play defensively and have given up 21 points through four games. They lead the nation in total defense and rank second in pass-efficiency defense.

The unit has been led as of late by senior defensive tackle Kenny Walker who, despite being deaf, is turning in some impressive numbers.

Against Oregon State, he had seven tackles, including five behind the line of scrimmage for 33 yards lost, and four sacks for 29 yards lost, to go with two pass breakups and four hurries.

His play has led to comparisons with Nebraska's best defenders ever.

"He's just a great player," Osborne said. "Neil Smith (a former Nebraska All-American and current starter with the Kansas City Chiefs) prior to Kenny was maybe the best pass rusher we've ever had here. But I'm not sure Kenny isn't as good as or better than Neil. He's got great strength and speed and athletic ability."

The Nebraska offense has impressive numbers as well, despite the use of two players at quarterback.

Junior Mike Grant entered fall drills as the starter, but an early-season injury left fellow junior Mickey Joseph at the controls. Grant is healthy again, however, and Nebraska is as deep at the position as it ever has been.

Nebraska's depth is particularly impressive in the offensive backfield, where the 'Huskers have already seen six backs — in-

Tigers in 100th year of football

Quarterback Kiefer, Manhattan natives on defense lead Mizzou into Big 8 play

By David Svoboda
Sports Editor

Welcome to the 100th year of Missouri football.

More than 2,500 spectators gathered at Sportsman's Park in St. Louis on Nov. 27, 1890, for the meeting between Missouri and Washington that would be the first intercollegiate game at old Mizzou.

And now, in 1990, after a somewhat nondescript start highlighted by last Saturday's 30-9 thrashing of then-21st-ranked Arizona State, the Tigers, 2-2, enter Big Eight play this weekend against Colorado.

The win over Arizona State was the first by Missouri over a ranked team since an upset of 11th-ranked Oklahoma in 1983. And it came on the heels of perhaps the worst game Missouri has played in two years, a 58-7 rout at the hands of Indiana.

"We played up to our capabilities for four quarters," said Coach Bob Stull, a K-State graduate. "That's something we haven't been able to do. This win helps us, but we've got to settle down and get to work.

"It makes the players feel good. It was a significant win. ... We played a good team, but it's still early in the season."

The win had special significance for the Tiger field leader, senior quarterback Kent Kiefer, who came to Missouri from Arizona State.

Kiefer has passed for more than 200 yards in all four games this season and has nine 200-yard passing days in his career.

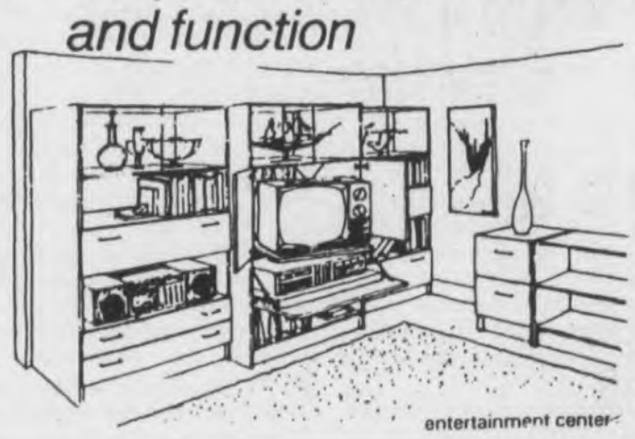
In addition, he ranks fourth at Missouri in career passing with 3,375 yards.

Experience has been a good teacher, Kiefer said.

"The longer you play something, the better you get," he said. "I was pretty much thrown at it last year in my first year of major college football, and the next thing I know I'm playing Miami, Colorado and Nebraska and teams like that. That's pretty tough, but I feel like I'm getting better each week."

A pair of Manhattanites lead the Tiger defense and special teams.

Linebacker Mike Ringgenberg leads the Tigers in tackles through four games with 41. The sophomore has started all 15 games he's played at Missouri.



Right cornerback Maurice Benson has broken up a team-leading five passes, intercepted a team-high three passes and has a 32-yard punt return and a 75-yard interception return to his credit.

Missouri starts three redshirt freshmen on the line, with offensive guard Mike Bedosky, defensive tackle George Hunt and defensive end Rick Lyle leading a young unit.

This is Stull's second season as coach. Stull's record through 15 games — 4-11 — is the same mark compiled by K-State's Bill Snyder.

Jones sees O-State experience highs, lows of rebuilding

By Russ Ewy
Sports Reporter

Oklahoma State football coach Pat Jones is trying to put the pieces together and rebuild in order to elevate his team's slumping Big Eight status.

After leading the Cowboys to back-to-back 10-2 seasons in 1987 and 1988, Jones has seen the departure of Heisman Trophy winner Barry Sanders, first-team all-decade wide receiver Hart Lee Dykes, and the Big Eight's all-time leading passer and total offense leader Mike Gundy.

Last year, the Cowboys slid to 4-7 and have had to fill several holes for the 1990 season, leaving Jones unsure about this season.

"It's hard to really tell (how this team will turn out)," Jones said. "You just have to take what you've got and do the best you can with it. We're under no false illusions about (the state of our team).

"It will take us some time to dig out a little bit. We're always at the mercy, just like any other football team, of injuries and that sort of thing."

Injuries have made things tough for Jones, forcing several inexperienced players into action.

"Of course, we're pretty banged up right now," Jones said. "We lost one of the only real veteran offensive linemen, Scott Webb, who hurt a knee against Northern Iowa. We might have him back — we might not. We're playing two second-year freshmen side-by-side in the offensive line, so we're pretty raw in a lot of areas.

"When you get down in numbers a little bit, like you've seen (at K-State), it tends to glare at you a little bit more. Basically, you just have to hammer it out."

One of the brightest spots so far this season can be found in Oklahoma State's backfield. Senior tailback Gerald Hudson has been holding his own at a school known for its running backs. Hudson is leads the Big Eight Conference and ranks sixth in the nation in rushing, averaging 128 yards a game.

"(Hudson's) a better-than-average college back. I think the thing he needs to get done is to (continue to perform) over an 11-game season," Jones said. "He's done well in flashes over his career, and done it pretty impressively at times, yet I think the kicker is doing it up and down the schedule."

At no other position did graduation hit harder last year than with Mike Gundy's departure at quarterback.

Replacing starting quarterback Chris Smith in the Northern Iowa game, sophomore Earl Wheeler has battled his way into running the Cowboy offense.

"We did not have Earl in the spring (because he played baseball), and he was late getting in here to two-a-days because he was wrapping up some academic stuff," Jones said.

"We think Wheeler's capable of throwing the ball if we can keep people off his back. He's developing and showing some ability, but from an experience standpoint he's still a long way off."

One of the few standout players returning from last season, place kicker Cary Blanchard — a pre-season all-America pick — is looking to top the Big Eight again.

"Blanchard's having a pretty good year. He's been a little bit up and down," Jones said. "Traditionally, he's gotten into the flow a little bit better mid-season, but his back's been bothering him."

The OSU defense looks just as young, with juniors Stacey Satterwhite and Mike Filson and senior Ruben Oliver providing the experience in the front line.

"We have a little bit more quickness (on defense) than we've had since perhaps 1985," Jones said. "We played really well against Tulsa, and we've had our moments since then, but nothing real consistent. We're starting three second-year freshmen, and now two true freshmen. So we're getting pretty raw over there on defense in certain areas, too."

Jayhawks survive tough schedule

By Todd Fertig
Sports Reporter

Kansas football coach Glen Mason faces a tougher challenge than he's equipped to handle. His mission: to help a young, marginally-talented football team salvage some dignity while playing one of the most difficult schedules in the nation.

As if playing conference powers Colorado, Nebraska and Oklahoma year-in and year-out weren't enough to keep Mason's hands full, this season Kansas scheduled national-championship contending Miami and Top 10-rated Virginia. Four teams who played in bowl games last season are on the Jayhawks' schedule, rated the 22nd most difficult in the nation by the NCAA News.

"When you're in the Big Eight and play teams that are consistently considered some of the best in the country, it's bad enough," Mason said. "But when you go outside of your conference and play a Top 10 team like Virginia and a team fighting for a national championship like Miami and are unfortunate enough to catch a team like Louisville that's on an upswing right now, it makes things pretty tough."

To make matters even worse for the Jayhawks, they are in the middle of a string of four consecutive away games. After capping off its road trip in Miami, Mason's squad will finally return to friendly territory to find the not-so-friendly Colorado Buffaloes waiting.

"We're still in the early stages of this tough stretch," Mason said. "When you go five weeks without a home game, it seems like you'll never play at home again."

The Jayhawks opened their conference schedule against Oklahoma last weekend, playing well but losing 31-17. Their record stands at 1-3, their lone victory coming against Oregon State 38-12 in the second week of the season.

For two programs facing basically the same uphill climb, the scheduling approach taken by K-State and Kansas are in direct contrast to each other. While the Jayhawks took on three teams of national prowess in their four non-conference games, the Wildcats scheduled teams that some argued shouldn't be playing a Division I school.

Wildcat coach Bill Snyder criticized Kansas' scheduling early in the season, calling the Jayhawks' season-opening 59-10 loss to Virginia "a game that should never have taken place."

"That kind of game defeats the purpose," Snyder said. "It doesn't do your team any good to go out and just get run over by a team you have no business playing."

"I understand Bill Snyder's approach, but I think he has had more of an active role in getting his schedule set that way, which is a luxury I haven't had," Mason said. "It was just poor planning, making a schedule having five weeks when you never play at home and then putting Miami in the middle of your Big Eight schedule. It just doesn't make sense."

Preparing for a game with a team like Colorado or Miami is no different than for any other, Mason said. He emphasized that preparing for a game differently because of the reputation of the opponent is preparing to fail.

"You prepare your team for any game just like you had a chance to win," Mason said. "You work to instill the confidence in your team that if they execute like they're supposed to, you'll win."

With only five seniors seeing extensive action this season, the Jayhawks have been playing as many as 30 freshmen and sophomores. Mason applauded the effort of his squad against Oklahoma, saying that the his young players finally realized they could compete. Kansas outrushed Oklahoma in the game and finished with 396 yards total offense to the Sooners' 261.

The Jayhawks are led on offense by junior running back Tony Sands. Sands ran for 217 yards against the Wildcats last season. Touted in the preseason as a candidate for the Doak Walker Award given annually to the nation's top running back, he rushed for 1,109 yards last season and could move into third place on the all-time Jayhawk rushing list this season.

Quarterbacking the Jayhawks is sophomore Chip Hilleary, who completed 15 of 23 for 153 yards in the Oklahoma contest and added 76 on the ground. Mason is pleased with Hilleary's performance and said the young quarterback has handled the pressure of playing against major football powers commendably.

"I think there's a lot of pressure on Chip to perform, and I think he's done a great job so far," Mason

Sooners in 1990 looking to forget horror of past year

By Scott Paske
Sports Reporter

The "just like old times" feeling is back at Oklahoma, and the 1990 Big Eight Conference title chase should be better as a result.

The Sooners, 4-0 overall and 1-0 in conference play, have turned many heads that were focused on a Nebraska-Colorado duel for the league crown. Oklahoma is ranked seventh in this week's Associated Press Top 25 poll following early-season routs of ranked foes UCLA and Pittsburgh.

"There's so much uncertainty when you're put in the Top 25 early in the season," Oklahoma coach Gary Gibbs said. "Nobody anticipated us scoring 52 against Pitt or 34 against UCLA, but offensively, we've played well."

The surprising results on the field may be a product of what Gibbs and his staff have done away the field. Last year's 7-4 record, a sub-par season by Sooner standards, was overshadowed by a string of criminal allegations against Oklahoma players prior to the 1989 campaign.

Quarterback Charles Thompson was arrested for selling cocaine. Two others were charged with raping an Oklahoma City, Okla., woman, and another player was shot in a dormitory incident.

The troubles forced Coach Barry Switzer to resign under pressure after 16 seasons at the school.

"We were fed up with everything that happened last year," sophomore fullback Kenyon Rasheed said. "People who were here a few years ago wouldn't believe the changes."

The changes have ranged from team policies to the team playbook. Gibbs ditched the wishbone offense that was synonymous with the Switzer era in favor of an I-formation, option attack.

"Our offensive scheme has helped us a great deal," Gibbs said. "We're not asking our linemen to pound people off the line of scrimmage as much as we used to.

"And we're certainly not making the changes because we think the line is suspect. We're just giving people different looks with three backs, three receivers and other formations. We're trying to avoid being predictable."

The cosmetic changes haven't altered Oklahoma's annual position in national offensive statistics. The Sooners were fourth in rushing at 310 yards per game and fourth in scoring at 42.3 points after Saturday's 31-17 win over Kansas.

The continuing tradition of backfield speedsters may contribute to the recognition, and this year's crop is a young one. Rasheed, a Kansas City, Mo., native, is sixth in the conference in rushing at 84 yards per game with six touchdowns.

At tailback, sophomore Dewell Brewer and junior Ike Lewis have split playing time. Both gained more than 100 yards in the 52-10 win over Pitt.

The Sooner defense has also played a key role in OU's early success. Through four games, Oklahoma has yielded 51 points.

Gibbs said the unit's ability to create big plays has been its biggest contribution.

Colorado now target in conference

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

Being one of the nation's top teams is not always easy because everyone wants revenge.

The Colorado Buffaloes can vouch for this and may have something to prove as the Big Eight season opens.

Colorado, ranked as high as No. 1 in the nation in the preseason by the Football News and expected by numerous polls to reign over the Big Eight again, has been showered with preconference disappointment in their first five games of the 1990 season.

A large contribution to this disappointment their schedule, one of the toughest in college football, which began with an season-opening 31-31 deadlock with Tennessee on Aug. 26.

The 'Buffs followed that by beating Stanford, a win Coach Bill McCartney called lucky, before meeting their match as Illinois handed them their first loss with a fourth-quarter field goal.

"We have played some hard teams in Tennessee, Stanford and Illinois, and played hard against them," McCartney said. "When you play really good teams like that, you can expect them to go right down to the wire."

The Buffaloes rebounded from the loss to Illinois to post wins against Washington and Texas to improve to 3-1-1 before rolling into Big Eight play, which McCartney believes will be tough.

"We had to work real hard to beat Washington and Texas, and I feel real good about those two victories," McCartney said. "We are not as good as a team as we were last year at this time, but we can be. The conference looks improved, based on non-conference records."

McCartney feels, however, that Colorado is showing continuous improvement and that with the talent the team possesses it can jump back from their rocky start.

Colorado boasted 10 preseason Sporting News all-Big Eight picks and the Big Eight preseason offensive and defensive player of the year in Darian Hagan and Alfred Williams, respectively. They return 13 starters from the Orange Bowl team of 1989, including Hagan, who was fifth in the Heisman Trophy voting last year.

But McCartney has said the Buffaloes are not moving the ball as they did last year when they averaged 371.8 yards rushing per game. This season, Colorado has broke the 350-yard barrier once.

"We are starting to gear up for the Big Eight season and take inventory. We know that our offense has to be more consistent," McCartney said. "Last year, our offense was very prolific. We need to have more of those 300-yard ground games."

The defense, on the other hand, is playing as well as last year's squad, according to McCartney. The defense is led by the outside linebacker tandem of Williams, the 1989 Big Eight defensive player of the year, and Kanavis McGhee.

Nebraska leads the nation in rushing offense at 383.5 yards a game, and it is seventh in total offense and eighth in scoring offense.

The special teams are solid, with senior place kicker Gregg Barrios leading the way. Barrios has scored 148 points in his career to rank 15th on the all-time scoring list.

said. "We don't have a situation like they have at Notre Dame where such a big deal is made of starting a sophomore quarterback, but we have a tough position for a quarterback to be in because we're not that good and need for Chip to play well for us to compete."

While the Jayhawk defense has surrendered a lot of points this season, it recorded 12 quarterback sacks in its first three games, including five by 305-pound sophomore tackle Dana Stubblefield.

The defense is led by linebackers Curtis Moore and Pat Rogan. Rogan was selected the Big Eight Defensive Newcomer of the Year last year. Injuries have taken their toll on the defensive backfield, claiming both starting safeties, Jason Priest and Doug Terry.

Handling both the punting and kicking duties for the squad is freshman Dan Eichloff, who was perfect on all extra-point and field-goal attempts going into Big Eight play. Eichloff has connected on three attempts from outside of 40 yards and has a 39.6 yard punting average.

Iowa State to open play

By The Collegian Staff

Iowa State opens Big Eight play Saturday in Ames, Iowa, with a contest against Kansas.

The Cyclones enter league play at 2-2 and are coached by Jim Walden. Walden is in his fourth year as the Cyclone coach and has a 16-22 mark since his arrival.

Walden said he patterns himself after former Nebraska coach Bob Devaney, whom he played for at Wyoming and coached under at Nebraska.

"I liked the way he handled kids," Walden said. "I liked his attitude toward everything in general, and the way he coached. I liked the way he dealt with people and his players."

"I tried to be like him as a fierce competitor, and at the same time he taught me a lot about human nature," he said. "He taught me not to take everything so serious."

Iowa State has two serious performers on offense, in quarterback Chris Pedersen and tailback Blaise Bryant.

Pedersen has missed the last two games, but had thrown for 446 yards in the two games prior to his injury. Bryant has run for 329 yards in three games.

Defensively, Iowa State is led by Travis Block and Dan Milner. Block, a defensive tackle, had eight tackles last week against Western Michigan. Milner, the middle linebacker, had nine tackles against Western Michigan and has 37 on the year.

Hayden outlines his major issues

Governor says education top priority

CAMPAIGN 1990
Gubernatorial Race
Mike Hayden

By Gregory A. Branson
Government/City Editor

Property tax relief and education are the most important issues of Gov. Mike Hayden's re-election campaign.

In an interview Thursday, Hayden explained his proposal for relieving the current property tax problem.

Hayden said he wants to impose a 1 percent sales tax increase on items that are currently taxed. This increase would raise about $217 million.

The money raised would be funnelled to local school districts. This, Hayden said, would allow schools to cut back the property tax mill levy. Cutting back on the school mill levy would reduce the amount of money home and small-business owners pay in taxes.

Hayden said this plan has advantages over Democratic challenger Joan Finney's tax plan because of where the money is focused.

Finney proposes to place a sales tax on some of the 54 items now exempt from sales tax in Kansas. She has not yet designated which specific exemptions she will cut, but some items that could be taxed include farm equipment and supplies, out-of-state telephone calls and gasoline.

An estimated $460 million would be raised by Finney's tax plan. She plans to distribute $210 million directly to school districts, and the remainder will go to other units of local government such as city and county governments.

Hayden said the $460 million is a misleading figure.

The failing of the Finney tax program, Hayden said, is that the money going directly to the city and county units might not be used for property tax relief.

The state has no control over the spending lids of local governments, he said, so this money could be used for other projects.

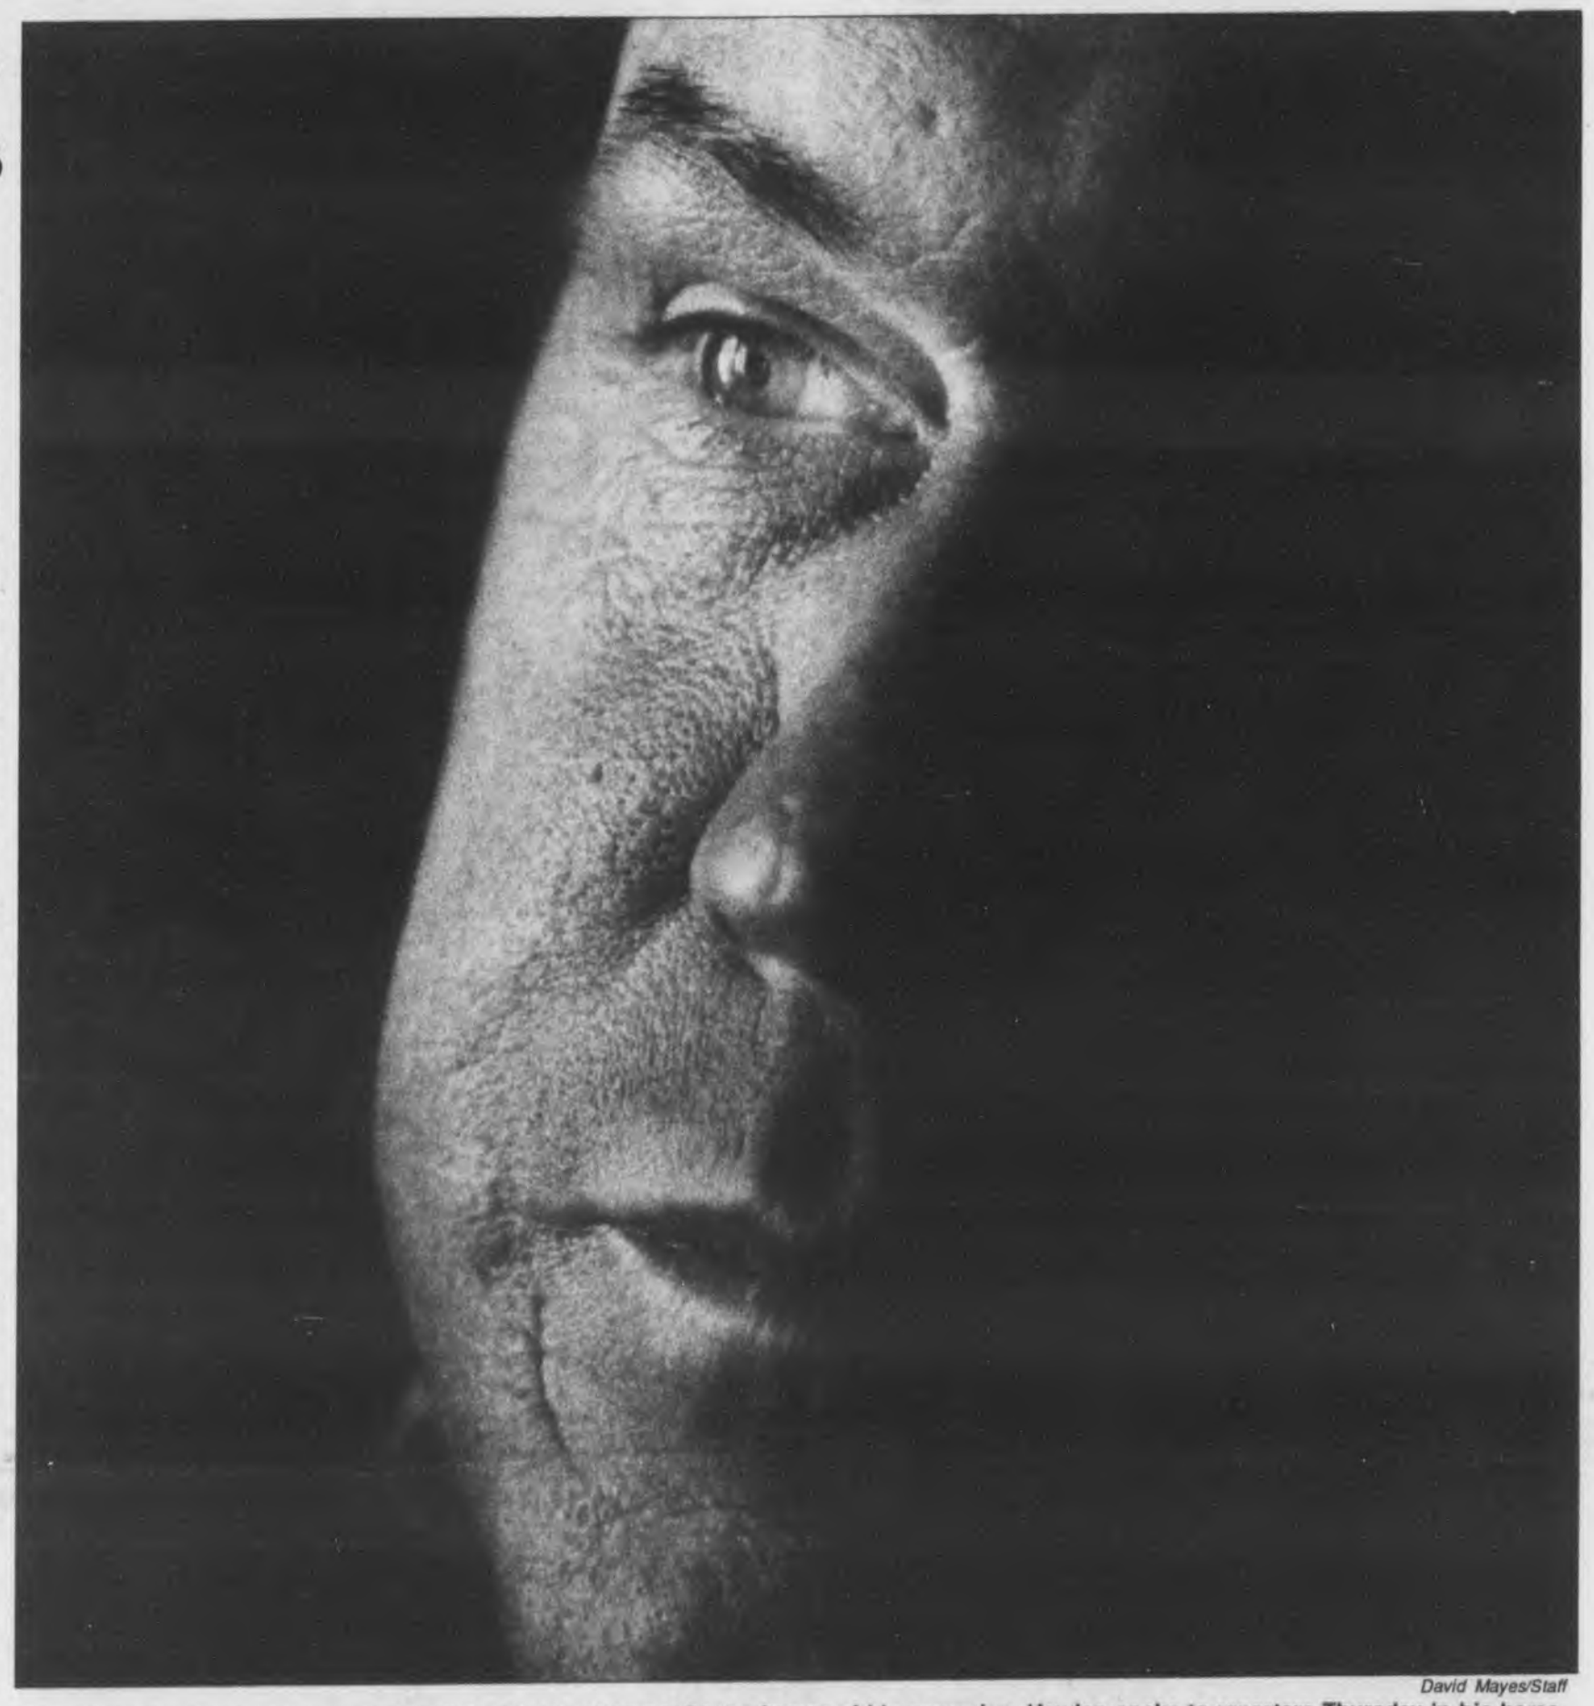
"You can guarantee the money will be used for tax relief when you send the it back to the schools because the state has control of their budget limitations," he said. "And you can predict very accurately how much property tax relief will be realized."

Hayden has also said he worries that if Finney takes exemptions off of some items, industry and farmers in Kansas would be severly hurt.

Finney has said Hayden's plan would not be as effective as her plan because it would take too long to initiate.

Property tax is overshawdowing what Hayden said would usually be the most important issue, education.

"Education is the state's No. 1 priority as far as the budget is concerned," he said. "Over 62 percent of the state's budget goes to education."



Hayden stressed the importance of a good primary and secondary education because it is the foundation for everyone.

"Not only is it the foundation for those who go on to higher education," he said, "but it is also the foundation for the 30 percent who don't go onto higher education."

Hayden's plan for funding the third year of the Margin of Excellence may be in jeopardy.

Hayden wants to tax cigarettes 10 cents per pack to raise the funds, but the new federal budget proposal also plans to tax cigarettes.

"At this time the federal government hasn't approved anything," he said. "We will continue to focus on the cigarette tax as the major cornerstone."

Gov. Mike Hayden sees property tax relief and education as the top issues of his campaign. Hayden spoke to reporters Thursday in his home.

Faculty 'frustrated'

Administration's reorganization secrecy causing uneasiness

SHAPING THE FUTURE

By Jan Puls
Staff Reporter

The faculty of the College of Arts and Sciences expressed their frustration with reorganization at the college faculty meeting Thursday.

"It was fairly grueling," said Kenneth Klabunde, president-elect of Faculty Senate. "Some faculty disagree with the reorganization process, and some are upset with the reassignment of the college dean."

Klabunde answered questions concerning reorganization after giving a report of the Arts and Sciences faculty caucus. Many of the questions centered around faculty representation in drafting the reorganization plan.

"Do I understand correctly that until November we're not going to know what's going on?" asked Ronald West, professor of geology. "I hear you saying you are reacting to proposals, but you're not saying what the proposals are. By taking an oath of secrecy, you became one of them."

Klabunde said the past, present and future Faculty Senate presidents were called on by Provost James Coffman to react to reorganization proposals. President Jon Wefald and Coffman asked Senate presidents to keep matters confidential until the final draft is presented to the public in November.

"Are we on the administration's side? No," Klabunde said. "When the faculty senate president, president-elect and past president agreed to do this, they didn't anticipate it would put us in the other camp so soon. I thought we agreed to do it because it was a way to gain faculty representation."

Senate rejects funding limits for community-based groups

STUDENT SENATE

By Charlie Gatschet
Collegian Reporter

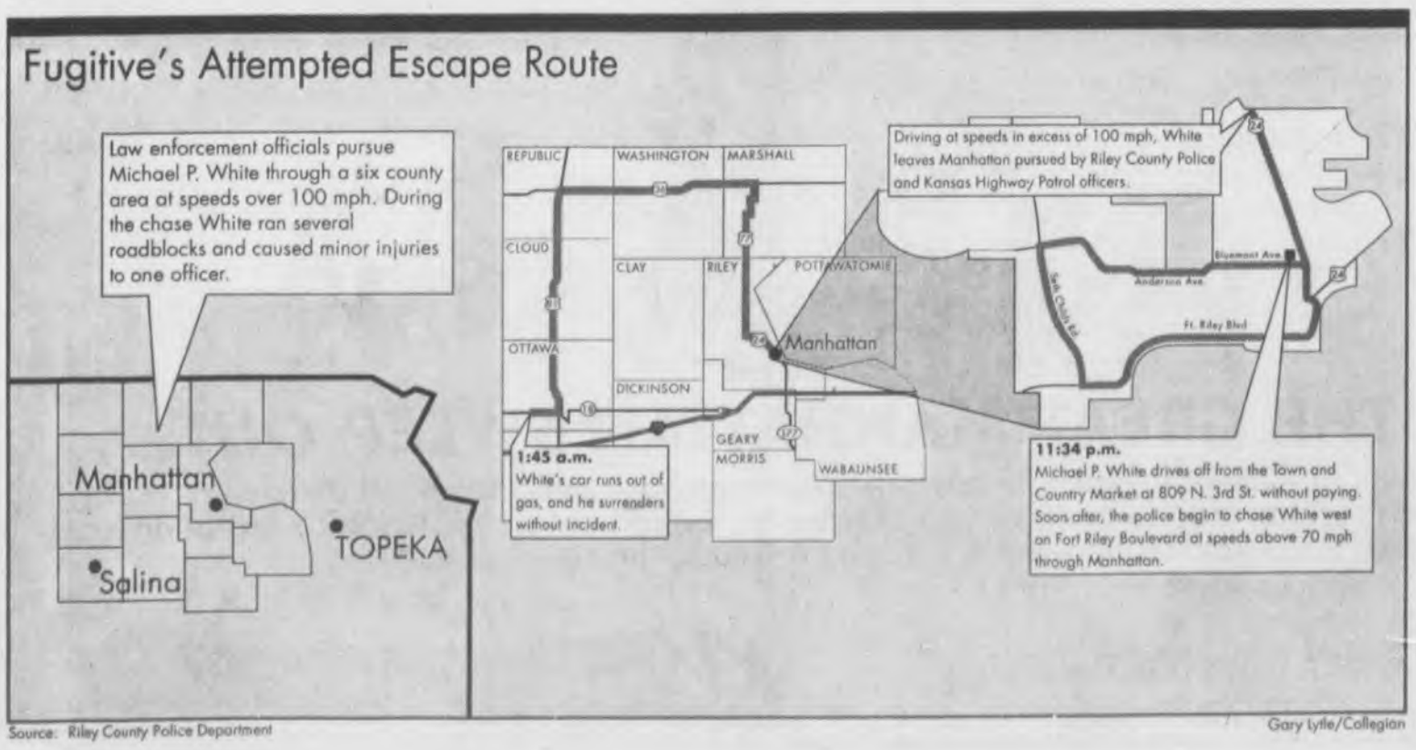
A bill was rejected Thursday by Student Senate that would have put a cap on funding for community-based organizations.

The bill would have set aside a special account for community-based groups that seek Senate funding. The account would use nearly 7 percent of the annual student activity fee, which would amount to over $13,000 according to current enrollment figures.

A community-based group is one that has either less than 80 percent student membership or provides less than 80 percent of its services to students.

Barry Beck, business senator and supporter of the bill, said the bill was designed to limit the amount of money going to community-based organizations. This problem has plagued Senate since last spring, when UFM nearly lost over $10,000 in funding from Senate.

"I don't want other groups coming in and taking money from student groups," Beck said. "I want student groups receiving the great majority of the student activity fee."



Although Beck said he considers UFM a community based group, not everyone agrees.

"I personally don't consider UFM a community-based group," said Laura Better, sophomore in philosophy and UFM employee. "Student participation is strong. More than 100 students are involved with UFM."

Many senators expressed concern that groups may fluctuate from year to year between community-based and student organizations and that defining a community-based group could be

Police chase man through 6 counties

Source: Riley County Police Department

Gary Lytle/Collegian

By Elvyn Jones
Staff Reporter

A car chase that started with an 80 mph drive down Anderson Avenue ended early Thursday morning when the fugitive's vehicle stalled after a six-county chase.

Lt. Scott Campbell of the Riley County Police Department said officers started the chase of Michael P. White, an escapee from the Joliet (Ill.) Correctional Institute, at 11:34 p.m. Wednesday, after the department received a report of a gasoline drive-off.

Sue Meyer, manager of the Town and Country Market at 809 N. 3rd St., said a clerk called in the description of the vehicle White was driving after he left without paying for $13.50 worth of gas.

Campbell said three RCPD vehicles were involved in the chase that started on Anderson Avenue and continued north on U.S. 77 until White entered Marshall County.

Kansas Highway Patrol Lt. Robert Leahew said after the suspect left Riley County, the Highway Patrol and county law enforcement officiers continued the chase through Marshall, Washington, Republic, Cloud and Ottawa counties.

Leahew said a total of five Highway Patrol cars took part in the pursuit of the stolen 1979 Buick at speeds up to 116 m.p.h.

Officer Raymond Raney said he became involved in the chase when the fugitive entered Republic County on U.S. 36.

Raney said he and an officer in another car were traveling side by side in front of White in an attempt to slow him down when he was rear-ended.

"I turned sideways, and he came in beside me," Raney said. "He had more pizzaz than I did and got in front of me."

Raney said he followed the car into Belleville where he was involved in an accident with White on a ramp at the intersection of U.S. 36 and U.S. 81.

"He lost control in front of me, and I ran into him," Raney said.

Raney said he had five stitches in his head from the accident, and the car he was driving has $6,000 worth of damage to its front end.

However, White was able to continue south on U.S. 81 though his vehicle was leaking oil and antifreeze, Raney said.

The fugitive ran through another roadblock in Ottawa County, Ottawa County Sheriff Ken White said, and the long chase ended

Rebels move closer to Kigali

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Rebels seeking to overthrow the government of Rwanda were reported today to have moved closer to the central African nation's capital, using hit-and-run tactics and sometimes moving in disguise.

The rebels, whose numbers are estimated from several hundred to more than 1,000, invaded Rwanda from its northern neighbor Uganda on Sunday. Many are deserters from Uganda's army.

There were no reliable reports of casualties. Diplomats in the capital, Kigali, said the government was trying to move civilians out of the combat zone as the rebels approached.

Uganda has denounced the invaders and closed its border with Rwanda, cutting off any possibility of retreat or resupply by the rebels.

A diplomatic source in Uganda said the invasion appeared well-organized and must have been in the planning for quite some time.

House approves abortion bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House subcommittee approved a bill Thursday that would put into federal law a woman's right to an abortion as ruled in the Supreme Court decision Roe vs. Wade.

"The language of the bill is drawn directly from Roe," said Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., chairman of the House Judiciary subcommittee on civil and constitutional rights.

He said the Freedom of Choice Act was necessary to preserve the reproductive options women have had since the Supreme Court decision was issued.

"It is clear from recent Supreme Court decisions that Roe is in jeopardy," Edwards said. "American women can no longer rely on the courts to protect their right to choose. Nor can we leave this vital issue up to a patchwork of state laws."

The subcommittee vote came after two days of hearings. A similar version is pending in the Senate.

Edwards said he would press the House leadership for speedy consideration of the measure. However, time is running out on the session and the prospects of the bill making it through Congress this year are dim.

Shuttle encounters problems

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Success is sorely needed in shuttle Discovery's mission with the disputed, nuclear-powered probe Ulysses, said NASA, which encountered yet another problem today.

A 70-pound metal beam, measuring 8-feet-11-inches long, was found inside another shuttle's engine compartment, where workers mistakenly had left it.

NASA workers heard the beam bang around Atlantis' engine compartment as the orbiter was being raised into a vertical position inside the assembly building on Wednesday, NASA spokesman Bruce Buckingham said today.

They were unable to open the engine compartment until today, after the solid rocket boosters and external tank were attached to the orbiter.

Officials were assessing the damage, and an investigative team was being formed. It was not known whether the accident would affect Atlantis' secret military flight in early November, Buckingham said.

The mission already is four months late because of Atlantis' hydrogen leaks.

New Star Wars plan prepared

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration is preparing a blueprint for a smaller, less costly Star Wars shield that could not protect the United States against an all-out Soviet ballistic missile attack, the program's director said Thursday.

The new system, not yet officially announced, would defend against "tens or hundreds" of missiles fired accidentally by the Soviets or deliberately by a Third World renegade leader, rather than the thousands of missiles that would be expected to fill the skies in a full-scale attack by Moscow.

Henry F. Cooper, the Pentagon official in charge of the Strategic Defense Initiative, said in an interview that the revised anti-missile system could be deployed more quickly than the system currently envisioned.

He said he could not give a target date for deployment or a precise estimate of the cost.

"I would say it's still somewhat uncertain but obviously less than" the Pentagon's estimate of $55 billion for the initial phase of the current Star Wars plan.

Students protest ROTC at KU

LAWRENCE (AP) — University of Kansas administrators met Wednesday to review complaints aired by members of about 12 student organizations who took part in a protest outside Watson Library Tuesday.

The protest stemmed from a recent University Senate vote to continue granting credit for Reserve Officers Training Corps classes. Critics have complained that the Defense Department's policy against allowing homosexuals in the military conflicts with the university's anti-discrimination policies.

Del Shankel, the university's executive vice-chancellor, said the administration will work with students about discrimination and intolerance. Many protesters, in addition to calling for a response to the defense department policy, voiced concerns about improved campus lighting and about minority issues.

Shankel said the administration is listening, and will continue to meet with student leaders.

Toddler has amazing abilities

HUTCHINSON (AP) — It's been a whirlwind of activity for Troy and Trina Kinast and their son Seth in the wake of publicity about the 3-year-old boy's unusual abilities.

Since the story broke last week, Seth is making headlines in the United States and Europe, and he's much sought-after for network talk shows. Appearances are already set with David Letterman and Sally Jesse Raphael.

Seth is in demand because of his amazing abilities to read and memorize. He can count in three languages, recite the English alphabet forwards and backwards and read at an upper second-grade level. His parents say he has already mastered the Greek alphabet.

"We are just overwhelmed," Trina Kinast said of the numerous telephone calls requesting interviews with her son.

"I feel like I am in a fog," said Troy Kinast, just back from being chauffeured throughout New York on Tuesday and Wednesday. "I don't think I have awakened yet."

The family will return to New York Thursday for a taping.

He said Seth stared, mouth agape, at New York's skyline and played in the large back seat of the limousine that took them to the airport.

"It was crowded," Seth said Wednesday after arriving home from New York. He described the limo as the longest and the ride in the airplane as feeling like a car driving.

U.S. poverty scale no longer effective

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The government's official scale for measuring the poor is badly out of date and understates poverty and hunger.

Congressional and private witnesses told a House panel Thursday the official estimate that 31 million people live in families with incomes below the poverty line excludes millions of people.

"Nearly 13 million people who have incomes just above the official poverty line are not counted as poor by the government, but are considered to be poor by their neighbors," said William P. O'Hare, director of policy studies for the Population Reference Bureau, a liberal advocacy group.

The Census Bureau last week released its poverty statistics for 1989, showing an overall poverty rate of 12.8 percent, about what it was for 1988.

Rep. Tony Hall, D-Ohio, chairman of the House Select Committee on Hunger, said those figures excluded the 13 million hidden poor.

"These rates, as shameful as they are, mask the real depth of the problem," Hall said at his panel's hearing on the poverty measurement. "With these additional poor, we're talking about one out of every five Americans living in poverty."

The official poverty line is based on government measurements established in 1963. There have been annual adjustments since then to account for inflation, but O'Hare and others told the panel those adjustments haven't been adequate.

"That measure represented a reasonable estimate of minimum family needs in 1963, but it has never been updated to reflect changes in consumption patterns and standards of living since the early 1960s," said Patricia Ruggles, an economist with the congressional Joint Economic Committee.

"In fact, that measure is based on consumption data from the mid-1950s," she said.

The poverty scale was based on estimates of minimum adequate food budgets and then tripled, on the assumption that food represents about one-third of total expenditures, Ruggles said.

Pianists to play

By Rob Batchman
Collegian Reporter

Two K-State alumni will give a duo piano concert at 8 p.m. Monday in All Faiths Chapel.

Charlotte Kroeker, chair of the division of fine arts at Phillips University in Enid, Okla., and Barbara Fast, a doctoral student at the University of Michigan, will be perform a program featuring the works of Brahms, Bach, Rachmaninoff and Beethoven.

"It's an exciting time for both of us," Kroeker said. "It will be the first time we've been back since we graduated."

> "Playing duo piano is one of the most exciting ensemble experiences for a pianist.

> —Charlotte Kroeker

Kroeker said the music for the performance is selected to achieve the greatest blend between the pianos.

"We purposely chose literature that has equal parts balanced between the two players," she said. "There is a development of the music for both pianos."

Kroeker said the duo piano repertoire is satisfying to perform.

"Playing duo piano is one of the most exciting ensemble experiences for a pianist," she said. "Each pianist has full access to the keyboard, so it expands the already rich harmony recourses of the piano to include twice as much sound.

"This results in thicker harmonies, more-varied textures and a wider dynamic range," Kroeker said.

Robert Edwards, professor of music, said pianists must have a certain sensitivity to play as part of a duo.

"You have to be acutely aware of the balance between the instruments and your role at any given point in the piece," he said. "You have to have a meeting of minds as to how you perceive the piece to be stylistically. There has to be a common understanding between the pianists."

Kroeker and Fast began playing together in 1983 when both were teaching in small colleges in central Kansas.

"We found that making music together was a very easy and rewarding experience. She inspires me and gives me ideas, and I do the same for her," Kroeker said.

Although the two presently live in different parts of the country, they meet at intervals to practice.

"We developed quite a bit of a repertoire in Kansas, so that's the basis for our playing. Practicing is pretty concentrated when we get together, though," she said.

TELENET breaks campus limits

Distance-learning allows students to study abroad

By Ryan Finney
Collegian Reporter

Through the Division of Continuing Education, K-State offers credit courses to students throughout the United States and the world by way of delivery methods different than on-campus classes.

Students are now able to learn and study while being geographically separated from their class or instructor.

Distance learning courses are offered through a combination of the following media delivery systems: printed course materials, audiotapes, videotapes, television and teleconferences (audio, audiographic, video or computer).

"With the advent of technology and information dissemination capabilities, we are able to meet the needs of the population in Kansas and over North America if we wish to," said LaVerne Lindsey, director of Continuing Education.

"Kansas is a very rural state and our Outreach mission at K-State is to respond to the population's need for higher education," Lindsey said. "Often citizens who live in this state are 100 miles or more from the nearest institution of higher education.

"Hardly anybody who doesn't have a college education is going to be successful in the 21st century," she said.

The types of technology the University uses to present courses for credit are TELENET, TELEbridge, video and audio.

TELENET is an interactive audio teleconferencing network that connects 37 permanent classroom sites across Kansas. Each classroom has a speaker system and microphones so students can ask questions.

TELEbridge uses the same teleconferencing technology as TELENET, but its locations are not fixed and can vary from course to course.

Video and audio courses are taped lectures students can watch or listen to anywhere or anytime.

Most of the video courses are routed to the students. Each videotape has two or three lectures on them depending on the length of the lectures. Each route normally has three students.

The first tape is sent to the first student on the route. The student then has one week to view the film and send it to the next student. This process is repeated until all students have viewed the tape, and the last student returns the tape to the office.

Most of courses offered are from the College of Agriculture. However, the colleges of Arts and Sciences, Business Administration, Education and Human Ecology have courses available through the non-traditional types of media.

The colleges of Arts and Sciences, Human Ecology and Agriculture have collaborated to provide a video certificate program for food inspectors working with the United States Department of Agriculture.

Other courses are from the departments of agronomy, animal sciences and industry, grain science and industry, horticulture, chemistry, history, physics, speech, statistics, management, foods and nutrition, human development and family studies, curriculum, instruction and education policy and educational administration.

Lindsey said the cost of the Distance Learning Programs is comparable to that of regular fees for on-campus credit hours.

Lindsey also said the quality of an educational experience is not dependent upon what happens between the faculty member and the instructional environments or delivery system, as much as it is the level of commitment by the student.

"Kansas State University only has one faculty, one set of curriculums and one set of quality standards," she said. "Every course that's offered through the Division of Continuing of Education is the same course that would be offered on campus, simply in a different format."

All expectations 'met, even exceeded' as pledging ends for newest sorority

By Ryan Finney
Collegian Reporter

Pledging, which is similar to signing a letter of intent in college athletics, has recently concluded for Sigma Kappa, K-State's newest sorority.

Sigma Kappa signed 158 pledges, which is the largest pledge colonization in Sigma Kappa history, said Barb Robel, adviser for Greek Affairs.

"All expectations have been met and even exceeded," said Michele Anderson, chapter consultant for Sigma Kappa. "The girls are very excited to be in the colony, and I couldn't be more pleased with them."

Alpha Gamma Delta, which began its colonization at K-State in 1985, lasted four years before it closed. That sorority received its charter Jan. 25, 1986. At that time there were 83 members. The chapter closed in 1989 with only 32 members.

Robel was reluctant to make comparisons between the two colonies. She said she believed the Sigma Kappa sorority would succeed because of several determining factors.

First, Sigma Kappa was more organized and did a better job of colonizing. Second, they had an excellent media campaign, she said. Also Sigma Kappa signed a written contract to build a house.

The AGD colony closed after being caught in a Catch-22 situation. Its national chapter wanted the K-State colony to get the number of members up before they would buy a house, and the chapter couldn't compete with other sororities because they didn't have a house, Robel said.

"They (Sigma Kappa) did a great job of (getting students interested) in their sorority," Robel said. "We couldn't have asked for anything more PR-wise. The whole campus knew that Sigma Kappa was coming.

"Sigma Kappa was able to colonize with nearly 160 women, which is almost double of what Alpha Gamma Delta did," she said. "They have a better support base and a better nucleus to build on."

Plans have already been made for the Sigmas' new home. Officials of Sigma Kappa have already met with builders and architects. The house will be on Denison Avenue, south of the Sigma Sigma Sigma sorority house.

"We intend to buy the land by the end of the academic year, and within three years there will be comparable housing available," Anderson said.

Anderson said the funding for the property and construction of the house will be done through alumnae donations, support from the national chapter and local fund raising.

On Saturday, the Sigmas placed second in the Third Annual Pledge Olympics and won the spirit competition.

Their social calendar already contains a function this Saturday with Sigma Phi Epsilon, a date dash, and a function planned with Sigma Nu at a later date. The Sigmas scheduled a formal at the end of the semester and have been teamed with Kappa Delta, Acacia and FarmHouse for Homecoming activities.

"Sigma Kappa and I would like to personally thank the K-State campus and the Panhellenic Council for their support during the colonization week," Anderson said. "I think this greek system has been exemplary.

Students need to pay back student loans

If the financial fiasco of the savings and loan crisis is not enough of a burden for the taxpayers to shoulder, a new problem is on the horizon.

The Student Financial Aid Crisis of the 1990s is on its way.

Thanks to the thousands of college students across the country who defaulted on their student loans, the future of the financial aid program is unclear.

Students who receive Stafford Student Loans, formally called Guaranteed Student Loans, must repay the money borrowed as well as the interest, which is less than 10 percent. The payment period begins after students have completed their education at the college or university they attend.

Too many students across the country, at the rate of 50-60 percent at some schools, have said, "Ohhh, I have to pay that back. I didn't know that, so I'm not giving anyone any money."

Therefore, the banks, like the troubled Bank of Horton, that issued some of the loans, sell them to guarantors, such as the Higher Education Assistance Fund in Overland Park, Kan., which are stuck holding an unpaid loan. HEAF had so many of these it was forced to close last week, bought out by another troubled guarantor.

Because the entire student financial aid program is backed by the federal government, it will eventually have to swallow the debt.

The early estimates are around $12 billion of debt, but who knows where that may end up.

The savings and loan crisis started out costing the government about $50 billion, and is now estimated at more than $500 billion.

In the academic year 1989-90 the Office of Student Financial Assistance at K-State processed $16,198,280 worth of Stafford Student Loans to 5,978 students, for an average of about $2,700 per student.

If that money dries up, what will one-third of the University's student population do?

The K-State student loan default rate is 4.6 percent, which is extremely low, thanks to the efforts of the financial aid office in passing the necessary information about the loans to students through entrance interviews before they could pick up a loan.

Students who receive loans need to have the respect for their fellow students and uphold their responsibility to pay back the loan.

Students who plan to use the student loan program may be leery of doing so because of the risk involved of the loan falling through or there being big penalties in the future.

No one wants to be the one stuck with paying for everybody else's mistakes, but once again the taxpayers will be stuck with a little more than they bargained for.

Stronger penalties needed for KC police

It wasn't "America's Funniest Home Videos," and no one was laughing.

A TV cameraman videotaped Kansas City police officers hitting and kicking James Sevart Jr., 30, after they chased him at low speeds through three counties Sept. 27. The video aired Sept. 28 on KMBC-TV, Channel 9.

In the video, officers were shown pulling Sevart from the van's window and holding him down and kicking him, while one officer beat him with a slapper — a small bar of lead encased in leather.

The police department deemed it "possible use of excessive force," and banned police use of the slapper.

Kansas City Police Chief Steven Bishop said most officers don't carry the slappers anymore because there have been problems with officers being suspended for "ripping someone's head open," which seems a little excessive.

The only thing that doesn't seem excessive is the punishment of the officers involved. One was temporarily assigned desk duty, and two others resigned.

"The heat of battle may dictate that some officers will depart from policy," said Hugh Mills, executive director of the National Law Enforcement Training Center in Kansas City.

Police officers are supposed to be professionals who do not deviate from policies. They are required to uphold the law, but they sometimes use it to brutalize. The saying "beat you over the head with it" is not to be taken literally.

If chasing a burglary suspect is enough "heat of battle" to provoke an officer to violence, maybe he shouldn't be one.

And if this kind of violence can happen in the presence of a TV cameraman, what happens when the camera isn't around?

TV season disappointing

Dwayne Lively

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

"(Lucky Chances) A movie so sensual it will make your underwear squirm." Overheard on some New York radio station.

"Folks, we are very, VERY close to the end of civilization." David Letterman.

Lately I have been making a terrible mistake. Instead of doing my homework and studying for my only test, I have been doing a careful survey of the new television season. After three weeks of this, I have a feeling David Letterman may be right. The end is near.

This television season will perhaps go down as the season of the innovative program ... perhaps. Many new shows are beginning to experiment with visual styles and music, and offering characters a bit off the mainstream. It's a valiant attempt by network television to reinvigorate its drab fare.

Unfortunately, the people doing the innovation are the same people who've been serving up the drab fare for the past 10 or so years.

The result is such ground-breaking shows as "Fresh Prince of Bel-Air," which, if you've ever seen even one episode of "Different Strokes," you never need to watch. Other new shows include "Ferris Bueller," the funniest moment of which occurred in the opening of the first episode when a wood placard of Matthew Broderick was chainsawed by the new Ferris. "Parker Lewis Can't Lose," is one show you don't need to watch if you've ever seen "Ferris Bueller."

This season is also plagued with a scary new phenomenon: the New Kids on the Block have their own Saturday cartoon (whatever happened to "School House Rock"?), and the musical is back on television in a bad way.

At least two new shows are experimenting with incorporating heavily choreographed music and dance numbers into their storylines. The first show is "Hull High," your typical high school series with shy kids, bullies, a beautiful teacher everyone loves, a principal everyone hates and a good natured secretary. The show also features "rousing" dance numbers and songs about love and the evils of drug abuse that even Donnie Wahlberg would be proud of. It's got the right stuff, baby. (This, incidentally, is an example of the type of humor common in "Fresh Prince of Bel-Air.")

The other musical show gives us the obvious combination of prime time police/adventure series and the broadway musical. The show is Stephen Bochco's "Cop Rock." Bochco is the creator of "Hill Street Blues" and if you've ever seen that show you can easily imagine "Cop Rock" because it is essentially "Hill Street Blues: the Musical." To me this is as scary an idea as "A Clockwork Orange: the Musical," which does exist by the way, under the name "A Clockwork Orange 2000" and is currently on stage in London.

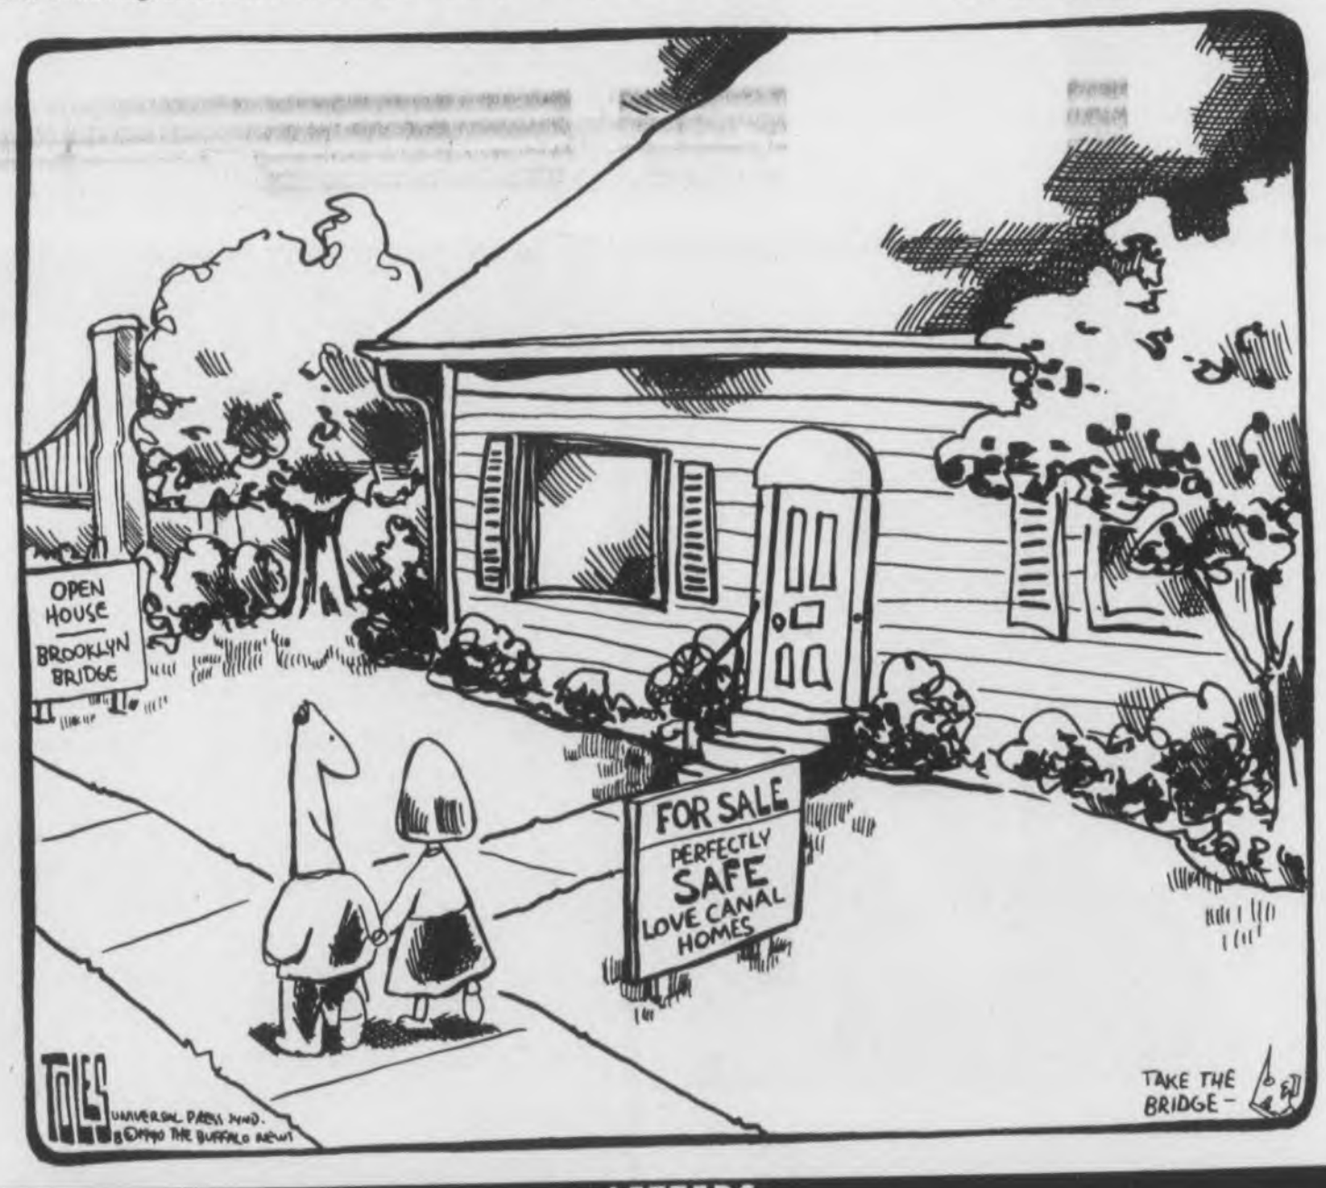
Back home though, "Cop Rock" treats us to such wonderful moments as a large gang of drug dealers rapping while it is being busted, a crooked judge with a lousy makeup job singing about greed and money and one actually funny moment when a jury starts singing its verdict and then turns into a gospel choir. Again, if you've ever seen "Hill Street Blues," you probably don't need to go out of your way to see "Cop Rock." Instead, just sit back and listen to a tape of the worst musical sound tracks of the last 30 years while remembering your favorite "Hill Street" episodes. This will give you approximately the same effect as actually watching "Cop Rock."

Still though, there are at least two bright spots to the new season. "Star Trek: the Next Generation" is on for its fourth season, which is one season longer than the original series ran, and there's David Lynch's "Twin Peaks," which is a terrific example of a triumph of style over substance.

Deep down, "Twin Peaks" is just your basic soap opera set in a small logging town close to the Washington-Canadian border. It has the typical stories of intrigue: so and so is dead, so and so is in a coma (although "Twin Peaks" currently has three different people in a coma), so and so is sleeping with so and so, who is attempting to steal away so and so's lumber mill.

"Twin Peaks," however, is populated with many, many strange characters, who all love coffee and drink gallons of it — perhaps explaining away the very eccentricities of the town — and who all are connected with each other in some way. They also love cherry pie.

The town also appears to have a supernatural suburb. Ghosts and apparitions are always appearing to various townspeople. This, once again, is perhaps best explained by the coffee.



"Twin Peaks" is a great deal of fun and is most noble as an attempt to do something out of the ordinary in prime time television without doing something absolutely stupid. Don't you want to know who came up with the idea of the cop show/musical? Is this a person you really want to hang out with? Is the person just related to someone high up in network television?

"Twin Peaks," for all its fun, does have some problems. The resolution of the "who killed Laura Palmer" mystery was a serious cop-out and a big disappointment, and you wonder how long the show can survive without that mystery, anyway. Although at least part of this season looks as if it's destined to be the search for the killer, we'll see if it can hold everyone's attention.

Still, despite these flashes of interest, I can't help but wonder if the end isn't near. Even "MacGyver" has had it too easy. He keeps getting locked in places that have too much equipment for him to build something with. I remember the good old days when he could put a man in space with just two rubber balls, one ounce of Play-Doh, an empty soup can with the top still attached and some speaker wire.

Of course, if this musical trend continues maybe the future holds "MacGyver: the Musical" or "MacGyver Rock."

This will be the end of civilization.

Campus not safe

Editor,

I am afraid to be on this campus at night.

I heard a rumor that a student was attacked/raped this past summer in front of Anderson Hall. The attacker was hiding behind some landscaping.

Now there was a beating on campus last Saturday evening. The victim, Ed Skoog, is 6 feet 6 inches tall and weighs 280 pounds. He was quoted as saying, "I have to question how safe the campus is if this can happen to me in a well-lighted area." Justin Hall is not a well-lighted area in my opinion. Are we headed for gang violence out of the shadows?

Without better patrolling at night and more lighting in dim areas, I see more attacks occurring. It seems as though K-State police are everywhere during the day. A student was stopped and questioned for rollerskating on campus Wednesday evening.

There are many of us who work late or have classes in the evening. More adequate lighting in the Union parking lot is needed. There is a single light hanging from a fire escape on Calvin Hall, which is only one of several buildings close to the dimly lit Union parking lot.

Yes, I know lights were installed this summer in certain areas of campus. That is a good start in deterring crime. K-State is a well-groomed campus. I think having a lovely campus is fine, but I personally see more value in having a safe, well-lighted and better patrolled campus.

Bring back Calvin

Editor,

Let's look to the future a little bit. What do I see in my engineering physics and calculus classes? Or should I say who? I see a young man who can answer everything there is to know about inertia, gravity and friction from his childhood daydreams. But he cannot do derivatives or integrals because he cannot put it into dollars and cents. However, he still has his faithful stuffed tiger that tackles him as he walks through the door and will stand by him through anything.

Now let's come back to the present. I fear we will never see this student in our K-State scene. Why? Because Calvin is missing and so is his friend Hobbes. They've been missing all week, and no one can tell me where they are. I thought about filing a missing persons report, but his picture on milk cartons might scare all the little kids. If you see him, please direct him back to our newspaper.

Two groups of K-State students associated with the Community Structure Assistance Volunteer Effort, journeyed to neighboring communites recently for a one-day community fix-up project.

Seven student volunteers for SAVE traveled to Wamego to help community members begin work on the restoration of the Columbian Theatre.

Above the furniture store on Main Street, the old theater, full of dust and cob webs, opened for the first time since 1950 for clean-up efforts.

Dalene Wieland, junior in psychology and criminal justice, said the theater looked like a huge empty room about the size of a large lecture hall.

She said it had normal curtains and lighting, but it also had beautiful moldings on the ceiling and brocade antique screens on the walls.

The SAVE group cleaned underneath the stage after removing its front panels in order to get underneath it. The group removed large columns, backdrops, and 9 by 13 foot pictures dating back to the 1886 World Expo Trade Center.

Dutton and others in the group agreed it was nice to get out of Manhattan for the day and work on a service project with some real history behind it.

The Columbian Theatre was bought by a non-profit organization that plans to use the building for cultural and community activities after restoration is complete.

While one group was cleaning up the theater in Wamego, another group of eight students went to Greenleaf, joining efforts with that community to repair, repaint and build stuctures at Greenleaf City Park.

Their jobs included painting a swimming pool building, outdoor men and women facilities, a picnic shelter and benches surrounding the area.

The community supplied paint and other materials and matched efforts with about 10 SAVE members.

Rob George, senior in construction science, worked with another student and community members on a baseball diamond press box.

They completed the elevated frame, but were not able to finish the roof because of a lack of time, George said.

He said he enjoys helping small communities because it reminds him of the area where he lives, and gives him practical experience by helping others. He has been participating in SAVE projects since 1988.

Denise Haffner, a student coordinator of SAVE and junior in psychology, said transportation for both groups was supplied by the K-State Community Service Program, and the food was provided by various town members.

To recruit students, Haffner and other leaders from SAVE gave presentations to classes and organizations, posted flyers throughout the campus and called students that had done projects in the past.

During the summer, Haffner sent letters to rural communities in Kansas explaining about the SAVE program. The towns decide if they want to participate in the program.

Five communities in Kansas responded to SAVE: Wamego, Greenleaf, Alden, Centralia and Winchester.

SAVE plans to go to Alden Oct. 20 to do general beautification projects.

On Oct. 27, SAVE will go to Centralia to build a wall and boundary at the city ball diamond parking lot.

The final project is planned for Nov. 10 in Winchester to clear brush, clean up the town and paint.

SAVE is one of eight programs offered through the Community Service Program, a rural based program linking K-State students and staff with Kansas communities.

Opportunities offered through the Community Service Program include Summer Teams, mini-grants, Volunteer Clearinghouse, YES Tutoring, Elderserve Community Teams, Home Serve, and Link-AGE Homesharing.

Undefeated 'Huskers up next for 'Cats

By Dan Wicker

February would be the best time for K-State to play Nebraska, said K-State football coach Bill Snyder.

A February matchup, however, is impossible for the two conference foes, and their time for battle has arrived. K-State will be pitted against the Big Red at 1:10 p.m. Saturday in KSU Stadium.

In the matchup at Lincoln last season, Nebraska emerged with a 58-7 victory. Three different Nebraska quarterbacks threw touchdown passes, and K-State was held to 16 yards rushing offense.

"I don't know if we could be any worse against Nebraska than we were a year ago," Snyder said. "But by the same token, Nebraska can make a lot of people look bad. We cannot compete with a Nebraska football team week in and week out. But anything can happen on any given Saturday."

The "anything" has happened only 10 times in the 75 meetings between the two Big Eight rivals, and Nebraska holds a 21-game winning streak that dates back to 1968.

"We have to play perfect football. Nebraska has to make their share of mistakes," Snyder said. "The Lord has to be in purple on that day. There are just a lot of things that have to take place for us to have a chance in that game.

"That doesn't mean that our kids won't play hard, it doesn't meant that they won't improve, and it doesn't meant that they don't have chance," he said. "I'm saying that we are playing one of the finest football teams in the nation."

Backup quarterback Paul Watson will get his first start of the season against Nebraska, after he replaced Carl Straw in the second quarter of the New Mexico win. The change of quarterbacks, however, will not bring about a change in strategy.

"If (Carl Straw) can play, then in all likelihood we will play him, but Paul will be our starter," Snyder said. "Whatever we do with one, we do with the other. There may be a few exceptions, but it is mostly the same."

One of the areas most improved for the Wildcats is turnover effectiveness, where K-State leads the nation in the first four games. Snyder said he believes any chance of capturing a fourth-straight home win will be directly related to the turnover margin.

"It is the most prominent statistical figure that leads to success," Snyder said. "Our defense has done a great job turning the ball over, and for the most part our offense has done a good job not turning it over."

Nebraska tops the NCAA charts in both scoring defense and total defense and is second in pass efficiency defense. The 'Huskers have jumped off to their best defensive start since 1939, allowing only 21 points in their first four starts.

"We threw more incomplete passes against Nebraska last year than we have in all four games this year," Snyder said. "You are looking at a team that is the No. 1 defense against the rush in the nation, the No. 1 defense against scoring in the nation and the No. 1 rushing offense in the nation, and somebody ranks them only fifth in the country."

On the offensive side, Nebraska is averaging 383.5 yards per game, and it is putting an average of 40 points on the scoreboard. The team's No. 1 rushing offense is led by Leodis Flowers, who is averaging 6.6 yards a carry, and a tandem of five backs who have each rushed for over 140 yards on the season.

"I hate to even think about it (Nebraska's offense). They have a scheme of things that they have been doing for a long time, and they do it exceptionally well," Snyder said. "Secondly, even though they have had great running backs, they have always been an exceptionally fine and well-coached offensive line. Very seldom are you going to find a situation where the offensive line leaves someone unblocked.

"It is a football team that says 'we are going to run the football at you,' and they do. It is a football team that says 'we are going to play sound defense and not give up big plays,' and they don't," he said. "Those are two very basic things, and I think they have built their foundation on that kind of firm ground."

Game Time: 1:10 p.m.
Place: KSU Stadium (42,000).
Radio: Wildcat Radio Network (WIBW 580 AM, flagship); Mitch Holthus, Stan Weber, Ben Boyle.
Season Records: K-State 3-1; Nebraska 4-0.
Series Record: Nebraska leads, 62-10-2.
Notes: In last year's 58-7 Nebraska win, Wildcat tailback Pat Jackson became the first K-Stater to cross the 'Husker goal in five years ... Nebraska won the most recent meeting between the two schools in Manhattan (1988), 48-3 ... Nebraska has a three-deep depth chart, and is four-deep at four different positions, including quarterback ... Coach Bill Snyder's Wildcats come into the game with the best record a K-State team has had entering a contest against Nebraska since they were 2-0 in 1961 under then-coach Doug Weaver.

One man's guide to MLB postseason honor winners

Scott Paske
SPORTS REPORTER

Remember Sam Horn, the Baltimore Oriole slugger who taught Kansas City pitchers the meaning of a three-run homer by blasting a pair of them on opening day? The performance made him the front-runner for the American League's most valuable player award at the time.

Five months later, reality has set in, and Horn's .250 batting average has knocked him back into the category of everyday role players. When the smoke cleared on the 1990 regular season Wednesday, Detroit's Cecil Fielder and Oakland's Rickey Henderson stood atop the MVP perch.

Sorry Rickey, I'm afraid you lose this battle to the new home-run king.

It's difficult to call Henderson a runner-up, because the man is extraordinarily talented. His stronghold on the title of baseball's best leadoff man was solidified this season with No. 1 finishes in AL on-base percentage and stolen bases. He was second in the AL batting race to Kansas City's George Brett at .325.

Then, there's Fielder.

The upper deck of Tiger Stadium has few more dents in it, thanks to left-handed pitchers who put fast balls in front of Cecil's robust waistline. Fielder, who came to the Tigers after playing in Japan last season, finished the year with 51 home runs and 132 RBIs, including two round-trippers against New York in Wednesday's finale.

The number marked the 18th time in major league history a player has amassed 50 or more homers in a season. The last to do it was George Foster in 1977.

Not a bad way to announce a return to the United States, huh?

The argument could go on and on as to who deserves the award. Henderson played on a division champion. Fielder didn't. Could Oakland, with Jose Canseco, Mark McGwire, Bob Welch and Dave Stewart on its roster, have survived without Henderson? Possibly. I don't think Detroit would have finished third in the AL East without Fielder.

Those are some of the standards the Baseball Writers of America must consider as postseason accolades are given in upcoming weeks. My vote for Fielder won't affect the actual outcome, but if John Madden can have his group of football elites, I can do it in baseball.

Match your picks for the following awards against these:

■ National League MVP — Pittsburgh's Barry Bonds. Had the New York Mets caught the Pirates in the final days of the NL East race, you'd be reading Darryl Strawberry's name in this spot. Instead, Bonds led the Bucs to the playoffs with the second 30-50 (33 home runs, 52 stolen bases) in ML history, and also drove in 114 runs. Having teammates Andy Van Slyke and Bobby Bonilla bat in front of him helped Bonds compile the big numbers.

■ AL Cy Young Award — Oakland's Bob Welch. Followers of Roger Clemens and Dave Stewart will have a tough time swallowing this pick, but Welch won 27 games, a feat unmatched since the early-1970s. Although his earned run average (3.06) wasn't in the neighborhood of the Rocket (1.93) and Stew (2.56), it wasn't bad enough to take the award away.

■ NL Cy Young Award — Pittsburgh's Doug Drabek. While the Mets still have the best pitching staff in the majors, Drabek turned in numbers that held off the likes of Dwight Gooden, Frank Viola and David Cone. The righty's 22-6 record included a 2.76 ERA, a shutout in the division-clinching win over St. Louis and a one-hitter against the Phillies.

■ AL Rookie of the Year — Cleveland's Sandy Alomar. While most of the awards have a few legitimate winners, this category has few legitimate contenders. Alomar had a solid year at the plate for a catcher (9 HR, 66 RBI), but the Indian wins the award for his defense. A player that throws out baserunners from his knees gets the nod over Royal pitcher Kevin Appier, whose 12 wins and

Netters to host home tourney

By Todd Fertig
Sports Reporter

The tennis team will continue its emphasis on self-improvement and gaining experience on its home courts this weekend — an unexpected pleasure.

With the cancellation the the Missouri Valley Intercollegiate Tournament, scheduled for this weekend in Springfield, Mo., the team was able to add an unexpected home meet.

Kansas, Wichita State, and Tulsa will come to the L.P. Washburn Recreational Area this weekend for what becomes K-State's only home meet of the fall season. Play will begin at 9 a.m. Saturday and Sunday.

A similar home meet was being planned for next season, and Coach Steve Bietau said this meet was organized when the teams that planned to attend the Missouri Valley tournament wanted to fill the void left by the cancellation.

"We needed the experience that we were going to get at Springfield, and that left a bunch of us up in the air when it was canceled," Bietau said. "My big concern was just getting some matches."

Bietau said he continues to stress fundamentals and improvement in match play, looking at every day as a learning experience that will prepare the team for future success.

"We're looking at doing a better job mentally and really evaluating how we play each point, rather than looking at the outcome of each match," Bietau said. "It's different for each player, but we want to be able to see the skills we need to improve to increase our chances of playing well."

Bietau admitted such an outlook in competition can be frustrating for athletes who don't come out on the winning end of their matches.

"Of course we all want to win, and these individuals have had the background of competition that makes them successful," he said. "But if they can focus on that improvement, I think that's going to serve them well in the end."

The team received its first chance at competition last weekend at Nebraska. Bietau said it was a successful meet in which the records of some of the players didn't tell the whole story. He said this weekend is just one more opportunity to gain experience and emphasize progress.

The meet will place the top four players of each squad in one tournament bracket and the next four from each team in another. The doubles competition will pit the top two teams of every school in a similar bracket, with the third and fourth teams from each squad in the lower bracket.

The team will probably be without Angie Gover, the No. 4 singles champion at the Nebraska meet, who will be resting a shoulder injury. Bietau said Gover's condition is improving, but doubted she would be ready for Saturday.

"It's frustrating for Angie because she played so well last weekend, but if we handle her condition properly, she will be better off by resting," Bietau said. "Angie's history is to try to come back too fast, and for that reason she never quite gets 100 percent

Spikers to make trip to Iowa for matches

By Russ Ewy
Sports Reporter

During its Iowa road show, the K-State volleyball squad will try to even out its 0-1 Big Eight record tonight against Iowa State in Ames, before traveling to Des Moines for a Saturday afternoon match with Drake.

After losing to Oklahoma a week ago, the 'Cats, 4-6 on the season, will face the Cyclones, 1-1 in the conference and 9-6 overall, to try to get on track in the Big Eight.

"Ames is one of the tougher places to play, and they have a fairly experienced team, or nucleus, returning," K-State coach Scott Nelson said. "Iowa State has been in the Big Eight championship the last couple of years, so I think they understand what it takes to get there. They also understand the importance of each individual Big Eight match."

Despite the difference in veteran players, Nelson said the two teams are similar in many respects so far this season.

"(Statistically) both teams are almost mirrors of each other," he said. "We're both hitting about the same, (as well as) setting, serving and digging, whereas Oklahoma was a much larger team.

"Probably the main difference is that they have a little more experience out on the court," Nelson said. "But we're also gaining a lot of experience, so hopefully that will start making a difference."

K-State will then travel to Des Moines to face Drake Saturday at 1 p.m. The 'Cats beat the Bulldogs over the Labor Day weekend, 3-1, in Manhattan.

"Being that we played earlier in the season, both teams are in a little bit different positions now," Nelson said. "I suspect Drake is viewing the match (at K-State) as one where they let us off the hook. The Drake match is one that I think we'll face a real competitive team and a much improved team. In fairness to ourselves, I think we're an improved team, also."

Nelson has seen his team face several challenges. It will face several more this weekend as it tries to halt a four-match skid and improve its seventh-place ranking in the Big Eight.

"I think it's difficult to play two matches so close together. So that will be a challenge for us to continue on after Friday's match, to be focused and be prepared to play early Saturday afternoon," Nelson said. "Obviously, for our Big Eight Conference standing, there's more significance on our initial match against Iowa State."

Golf teams to tourneys

The K-State men's golf team will travel to Colorado Springs, Colo., this weekend to participate in the Air Force Academy's 22nd Annual Falcon Invitational Golf Championship.

The 54-hole event will be contested Saturday through Monday, with 18 holes played each day. The defending tournament champion, California, will participate, along with K-State and 16 other teams.

Representing K-State will be Richard Laing, Brett Vuillemin, Will Siebert, Chad Judd and Bill Graham.

The women's team will also see tournament action, participating in the Huskie Classic in DeKalb, Ill., Sunday and Monday, with 18 holes each day.

The 36-hole event includes 11 teams, with host Northern Illinois the favorite. Notre Dame is also in the tourney field.

Making the trip for K-State are Chris Adams, Adena Hagedorn, Valerie Hahn, Theresa Coyle and Denise Pottle.

Pirates rally, win Game 1

CINCINNATI (AP) — Eric Davis and the Cincinnati Reds let Game 1 of the National League playoffs get away on Thursday night.

Davis' botched play on Andy Van Slyke's fly ball to left field gave the Pittsburgh Pirates a 4-3 victory in a game that hardly started in their favor.

The Reds, with 14-game winner Jose Rijo on the mound, took a 3-0 lead in the first inning and then gave it all back.

Pinch-hitter Gary Redus singled off loser Norm Charlton with one out in the eighth and stole second. After Jay Bell walked with two outs, Van Slyke hit a slicing drive that got over Davis' head and bounced over the left-field fence for a ground-rule double that scored Redus. Davis, moved from center to left because of his sore knees, made only two errors in 127 games.

Stan Belinda relieved winner Bob Walk in the seventh and pitched two perfect innings before the Reds threw one last scare into the Pirates.

Bob Patterson started the ninth inning and pinch-hitter Todd Benzinger singled before Davis walked. Pinch-hitter Ron Oester then attempted a sacrifice, but Patterson forced Benzinger at third in a close play.

Former Red Ted Power came on and with the count 0-1 to Chris Sabo, pinch-runner Billy Bates was thrown out at second on the back end of a double steal. Power struck Sabo out on the next pitch to end the game.

Dining center in Van Zile Hall offers restaurant atmosphere

By Stacey Harbison
Collegian Reporter

The new dining center in Van Zile Hall has been serving meals for almost a full month.

Students in the Strong Complex — residents of Boyd, Putnam and Van Zile halls — finally got a chance to see the dining area that has been hidden from view since the beginning of school.

Students said not being able to see into the center because the windows were papered over created a feeling of anticipation, but it was an inconvenience eating at the Derby Food Center.

Students said they liked the Strong Complex food service better than Derby.

"I like it better because you have more selections and everything's right there," said Susan Merz, freshman in business. "It's a lot more convenient."

"The food's better than Derby," said Joni Leep, sophomore undecided.

One added touch in the new food center is music that is played during meal times, and students can submit their selections to Strong Complex Director Diana Robertson.

"They put in a whole new stereo system, and we play our own tapes," said Katey Schmidt, sophomore undecided and student server at the dining center.

The Van Zile dining area was built around the original design of the building. The former outside wall of the building can be seen in the dining area.

"One of the growing trends in dining is the food court concept," said John Pence, associate director of housing.

Hamburgers and hot dogs are available at the grill area, soft and hard shell tacos are at the Mexican area, and sandwiches and potato chips are at a deli area.

Items held until claimed at campus lost and founds

By Christy Gritton
Collegian Reporter

Keys, purses, sweat shirts, diamond rings, wallets, student ID cards and books are just some of the many items turned into lost and found departments on campus each day.

Lost and found departments on campus are located at the circulation desk in Farrell Library, the front desks of residence halls, the main desk at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and on the ground floor of the K-State Union.

"People come in every day looking for things," said Kathleen Wisneski, circulation office supervisor at Farrell.

If the owner of the item can be identified, the owner is contacted. If the owner's identity cannot be determined by examining the item, it is stored in one of the lost and found departments.

"We'll keep things for about two weeks and then we turn them over to the campus police for their lost and found department," Wisneski said.

The K-State Police Department keeps items for at least six months, said Detective Richard Herrman. Books remaining after six months are sold in the Farrell book sale. Prescription glasses are given to the Lion's Club, and the remaining items are either donated to charity or sold in the campus police auction.

Lori Rheaume, clerk at the Union Information Counter, said the Union lost and found department stores items for one school year. In the spring, the unclaimed items are sold at an auction.

Chris Parker, sophomore in civil engineering and Marlatt Hall front desk attendant, said items turned in at residence halls are kept at the front desk for a few days before being sent to the Union lost and found department.

The Rec Complex organizes its lost and found items on four shelves, said Joyce Halverson, assistant director of recreational services. Each week, the top shelf is cleared and items are moved down one shelf. When items reach the fourth shelf, they are sent to the administrative office. Items of value are locked in a safe.

"The majority of our items are quickly claimed," Halverson said.

Every two to three months the useable unclaimed items are donated to charity, she said. Sweatshirts, sweat pants, and other articles of clothing are laundered and taken to the Manhattan Emergency Shelter.

"It's our effort at recycling in a lot of ways. It's nice that other groups can benefit," Halverson said. "But obviously, our first hope is that someone will claim them."

Nurses Day lets students learn about possibilities

Future of field appears bright

By Angie Schrock
Collegian Reporter

Representatives from Kansas nursing schools gave K-State pre-nursing students the opportunity to learn more about the educational and career opportunities available to them.

The K-State Nurses Day brought representatives from eight Kansas schools to K-State Thursday to offer information to pre-nursing students and answer their questions. The representatives also participated in an informal panel discussion.

"We're giving the students the opportunity to look at the positions available upon graduation and the different options for baccalaureate programs in nursing," said Treva Lichti, nursing counselor at Wichita State University.

K-State offers a two year pre-nursing program that includes the non-nursing, basic requirement classes. Once these courses are completed the student has to transfer to a bachelor's degree program at another school.

"We offer good pre-health care programs here at K-State, and it is a good place to prepare for the health care profession," said Phoebe Samelson, K-State's pre-nursing adviser. "But we don't have any clinical facilities.

"Talking to the representatives from these schools also helps our students answer questions about why they want to go into nursing and what the future of nursing is," Samelson said.

The future of nursing is optimistic right now because there is a shortage of nurses in most areas.

"We will have a waiting list of students who want into our program after enrollment for spring semester," Lichti said. "We're not like a class that can just move to a larger room, because the Kansas Board of Nursing requires one instructor to every 10 students."

Nurses Day is a opportunity for students to learn about areas they weren't previously aware of.

"This really opened my eyes to different fields I didn't know about, and I realized there are a lot of different areas in those fields," said Desiree Kershner, freshman in pre-nursing.

The informal panel discussion also allowed the students to ask questions about the various programs represented and about nursing in general.

"I think Nurses Day is a real resource to K-State and its students interested in nursing — whether or not they are in the pre-nursing program," Samelson said.

Graduate fair features colleges

Students attend, get information about schools

By Stacey Harbison
Collegian Reporter

More than 30 graduate schools from throughout the United States participated in K-State's first Graduate and Professional School Fair Thursday.

The fair, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Union Ballroom, featured 34 graduate schools and 28 K-State departments or colleges.

Representatives from graduate programs and schools of medicine, business, law, dentistry, optometry, veterinary medicine, osteopathic medicine and physical therapy presented information about their institutions.

"The representatives are very helpful and friendly," said David Long, senior in finance and accounting. "It gives you good background so you get a feel for what you're looking into."

Long said the information available was great, and it was nice having everything set out so people could take their time and browse.

"I'm interested in going to law school, so this gives me a chance to see statistics on what they have to offer," said Julie Lonergan, junior in pre-law.

Jennifer Pope, senior in pre-optometry, said she has already sent her applications for optometry school, but she wanted to find out more about the schools she applied to.

"This graduate fair is good for me, because it's getting me ready for next year," Pope said.

She said the representatives gave her information about what certain programs are like, what the classes are like and also what the town and student life is like.

"The people I've talked to really want to know what it's like, and I was able to help with that," said Bill Whitesell, alumni representative for Northeastern State University.

Jim Higgins, department head of statistics, said the fair gives them a chance to contact those students they might otherwise have missed.

"We don't really depend on the Graduate and Professional School Fair to get our students, but we like to spread the word about who we are and what we are," said Martha Cordell, assistant dean of students for the University of Tulsa.

Cordell said many students are concerned about entrance requirements, the curriculum, cost of tuition and size of their law school.

Ronna Robertson, associate director of graduate programs for the Universty of Kansas, said many students aren't aware they don't need a business degree for their business school, and the fair helps to get that information out.

"Our MBA program is designed for people with a liberal arts, engineering or life sciences background," Robertson said.

"I think the attendance of the fair has been excellent for this being a first-time fair," said Anneta Silvius, assistant to the dean of admissions at Creighton University.

The fair gives undergraduates an idea of what to do as far as their future is concerned, and it gives graduates an opportunity to compare different programs offered at a variety of schools, Silvius said.

"I think they should do things like this more often so people can find out about more schools without having to contact them yourself," said Kathie Armstrong, fifth-year senior in psychology.

About 600 students participated in the fair.

'Persuasive' quartet to perform

Award-winning string group to play at McCain this weekend

By Charlie Gatschet
Collegian Reporter

The University of Toronto's quartet in residence, the Orford String Quartet, will perform works by Beethoven and Mozart at 3 p.m. Sunday in McCain Auditorium.

The group will perform "String Quartet in F, Opus 135" and "Allegretto" by Beethoven as well as Schaffer's "String Quartet No. 5 Rosalind" and Mozart's "Andante."

"They are powerful and persuasive players," McCain Director Richard Martin said. "They are a very much involved group, and that will come across in their performance."

During its 25 years together, the group has won Canadian Grammy awards, has been named Canadian ensemble of the year and has recorded for major record companies. The quartet, featuring Andrew Dawes, violist; Kenneth Perkins, violist; Sophie Renshaw, violist; and Desmond Hoebig, cellist, is on its last tour.

Founding members Dawes and Perkins have performed as concert masters or soloists in Canada, the United States and Europe. Perkins went on his first concert tour at the age of 15. Renshaw began playing at the age of six.

Hoebig left the Cincinnati Orchestra to join the Orford Quartet. He is a former member of the Montreal Symphony Orchestra and the National Arts Centre Orchestra. and the National Arts Centre Orchestra.

One distinguishing characteristic of the quartet is its use of violins made in the 1700s.

Martin said that 18th-century instruments sound better than instruments made at any other time because of a special varnish used during that era.

"That is the preferred time for violins," Martin said. "The wood can be duplicated, but the varnish has not been duplicated."

Martin said some instruments from the 1700s can bring hundreds of thousands of dollars on the market, and that a man in Texas is attempting to develop a duplicate varnish.

The concert is the second in this year's McCain Performance Series. Tickets are $6 for students, $12 for the general public and $10 for senior citizens.

Martin called the tickets a bargain.

"It's like going to a rock concert before someone is big, and you don't have to pay $30 or $40 to get in," he said.

Milling science receives donation

By Dana Thomson
Collegian Reporter

Milling science and management professors will have a chance to receive an annual salary supplement within a few years.

The Ross Foundation of Wichita has made a $250,000 donation for a professorship in the milling science and management degree. The donation was made in conjunction with the KSU Foundation's Essential Edge Campaign.

The program will not be started until the money deposited has earned enough interest, said Charles Deyoe, head of the grain science and industry department.

"Interest earned will be the only money spent," said Hal Ross, a Ross Foundation trustee. "The principle will not be utilized. We are looking for professors making notable efforts in teaching or research, or a combination of both."

Selecting the professor will involve several steps from K-State faculty.

An evaluation of faculty members will be followed by a recommendation from the department. The nominee's name will then go to the dean of the College of Agriculture for approval, Deyoe said.

Several charities, universities and other organizations have been supported by the Ross Foundation.

"Ross was concerned with Kansas wheat and improvement of wheat," said Norman Jeter, a Ross quietly when the escaped fugitive's car stalled on K-18 just west of Tescott. The car stalled either because it was out of gas or from the effects of the collisions.

"He shut the car down, stepped out and offered no resistance," he said.

Ken White said Michael P. White walked away from a work-release program of the Joliet penitentiary, where he was serving a sentence for auto theft.

"He stole a car there and went to Kansas City, where he got on Interstate 70," Ken White said.

Ken White said Michael P. White will be arraigned today on various charges in Ottawa County.

Campbell said Riley County and all the other counties involved in the chase are interested in bringing charges against the suspect.

recovered. We've got to try to do what's in the long term best interest for her."

Playing in the top bracket will be Michelle Riniker, who placed fourth in No. 1 singles at the Nebraska meet, and Neili Wilcox, who took third in No. 5 singles. The final two Wildcat players in the top bracket will be Thresa Burcham and Suzanne Sim. Tracy Parker and Claudia Patron will compete in the lower bracket.

With a small roster and Gover out, only six players will take the court for the Wildcats this weekend, though the brackets allow for eight. Bietau said the lack of personnel is letting his players receive added experience.

Klabunde also said he agreed with the confidentiality rule at this point because it would limit rumors from spreading as proposals change.

There has to be an element of faith, he said. If Coffman and Wefald say there will be a chance for input in November, the faculty has to believe there will be.

"I started out believing, but there's been a whole sequence of events that happened to cause my disbelief," West said. "Damn it! They owe us an explanation."

The Provost opened the meeting reassuring faculty members the College of Arts and Sciences would be the chief beneficiary of the reorganization process.

Coffman said when plans for reorganization were first introduced, he may have given the impression that a large number of temporary faculty positions would be cut from the college over the next four years.

He said this not what he intended. There will not be a large cut in graduate programs or graduate teaching assistant positions.

Cia Verschelden, assistant professor of social anthropolgy and social work, asked for signatures on a resolution allowing for more faculty input on drafting a plan for reorganization.

The resolution called for the current process of planning for University reorganization to be changed to one that is open, democratic and participatory with regard to faculty and to other elements of the University community.

Student Body President Todd Johnson said groups should have to justify their funding every year rather than have specific amounts already set aside for them. He also expressed concern about the possibility of running out of funds should groups other than UFM seek funding.

trustee and member of the Kansas Board of Regents. "So, it was very appropriate for this money to be set aside for the milling school at K-State."

The foundation was set up by G.M. Ross. The Ross family owned several mills throughout Kansas. The money from this foundation is given to different charities and organizations each year.

"We have donated to several charities and other projects," Ross said.

One project consisted of moving an old grain elevator from Bentley to the Cowtown in Wichita. There, it was set up as an exhibit, Ross said.

Other projects include providing computer equipment to the Wichita Guidance Center and donating money to the Chaplin Nature Center, located near Arkansas City, to buy furniture and equipment. They also published a book on Wichita history for the Wichita Historical Museum. All procedes went to benefit the museum, Ross said.

REBUTTAL

These articles are written in a rebuttal to the September 17 article condemning and discrediting the Greek system. These articles were submitted to the editors of the Collegian but were ignored for obvious reasons. These articles will hopefully shed some light on what the Greek system is REALLY like.

ENJOY!!!

To the Editors:

I am writing this in response to the editorial about diversity in Greek-letter organizations. Your editorial addressed an important issue of concern to Greek organizations, but you use this issue in order to take another cheap shot at fraternities and sororities. While some points are valid and well-taken, the majority of it is sloppy journalism with no research to back the many claims. I have taken the time to research the facts and present them to the student body.

There is no denying that fraternities and sororities consist of mainly white men and women, but members who are minorities and friends are a part. In my own chapter, we have several blacks, Filipino and Hispanic members. I also know that several other chapters have members who are minorities as well. The door is always open for minorities, in fact it is encouraged. The problem is that some minorities aren't interested or feel intimidated by the Greek system—both of which we are trying to change.

Diversity is a major priority for my chapter as well as the entire Greek system at Kansas State University. Barb Robel, Advisor for Greek Affairs, mentioned to me that getting more members who are minorities to join Greek houses is one of the top issues on her agenda.

The editors of the Collegian would like everyone to believe that all members of a Greek house are simply clones of each other. Obviously they have not looked in the yearbook to see the diversity of interests among various houses. Obviously an art major cannot have everything in common with an accounting major. Every chapter is made up of diverse backgrounds, interests and majors. That is what makes meeting people so interesting and fun.

After addressing the issue of diversity, the editors go off on a tangent about the "awful" things Greek houses do. Tell me, what does this have to do with the issue at hand? If I was a minority, I would feel "used" by this editorial. It seems like the editorial staff wishes to use the minority issue as a way to start slinging mud at Greek houses. Through the muck, the minority issue is lost and the editorial has lost all it had going for it.

Since the editorial addressed various issues, I will address them also. First, the issue of pledgeship. In the past decade, pledgeship has turned from a negative program in to a positive one. Every chapter has rules and regulations passed down from its national organization. If we break those rules, we face having our charter pulled from the University. The unfortunate aspect of hazing is that it is often the irresponsible actions of a few that cause punishment for the whole. In the hazing incidents mentioned by the Collegian, it was actions of a few that caused punishment for those two houses. It is highly unlikely that you will ever see those houses, or any other house for that matter, haze in the future again.

Perhaps the most misinformed and totally inaccurate portion of the editorial states that Greek organizations are parallel to country clubs and are "for profit" organizations. First, Greek houses are by law not allowed to discriminate on the basis of race, color, creed or ethnic origin, unlike country clubs who can and do under the law. Second, Greek houses are totally and completely NOT FOR PROFIT. If you don't believe it, ask to see the checkbook of any treasurer, and I'm sure they will tell you how hard of a time he or she has in paying the bills, because they budget on a "break-even" every year. If Greek organizations were for profit, I can guarantee that there would be a lot more of them out there than there are now!

Perhaps the part of the editorial that hit the lowest was the part of "buying" friendships. $2400 is for room and board, not for friendship. How can you judge something that you are not even a part of? To me it sounds like a group of editors who are very bitter and jealous and who would like to participate in a better way of life. Why is it that people outside the Greek system persist in criticizing it with misinformation? I think in a way that this is reverse discrimination. I have never had negative feelings towards those who live independently. In fact, I have many friends who live in apartments and dormitories. I don't libel them, call them names, and lash out in anger at them. Greek is a way of life just as living independently is. So why the fuss?

Last but not least, I want to present the facts about Greek organizations and about the "professed higher standards" that the editors of the Collegian claim we are not living up to:

71% of Who's Who are Greeks

76% of the House of Representatives are Greeks

85% of the Supreme Court Justices since 1910 are Greeks

43 of 50 CEOs of major corporations are Greeks

85% of Fortune's 500 are headed by Greeks

Grade point averages of Greeks nationwide are higher than non-Greeks

10% higher graduation rate for Greeks than non-Greeks

$7,000,000 a year donated to charity

850,000 hours of community service

And here's an interesting fact: The majority of donations given to the University are from Greeks alumni. Hmmmmmmmmmmmmmm, maybe a Greek helped pay for the computers the editors use at the Collegian. Sounds like we are really contradicting our standards for excellence.

I just want to say in closing that Greek houses are for everyone whether you're black, white, yellow or purple. Everyone is welcome to join . . . yes even you guys at the Editorial staff.

Kansas State University is known for its diverse campus and abundance of different organizations. Among these groups are fraternities and sororities. Similar to the majority of college campuses around the United States, greek organizations are a thriving part of the whole university.

Just like Kansas State, sororities and fraternities seek to attract people of all different backgrounds. Becoming a member is not done by selecting who is "right" and who is "wrong." Rush parties are a time for those interested in pledging to see if they feel comfortable. Granted there are few minority or non-traditional members of greek organizations, but they do exist.

Nonconformity and diversity are what has kept the greek system alive over the years. There is constantly encouragement to be "you" and do your own thing. Without differences in personality, interests, grades, color, race, religion, etc. there would be no growth.

Being a member of a greek organization surpasses being a member of a country club. Truly, belonging to a country club does exert elitism, but being a member of a fraternity or sorority does not. Unlike country clubs, where only one idea has brought members together, members of greek houses share many ideas that keep the house going. For example, the belief all members should be involved, work to improve grades, and strive to better themselves by being organized and becoming leaders.

The so-called "probation period", correctly known as pledgeship, is strictly a time for pledges to adjust to life in their sorority or fraternity and to meet academic requirements. They also learn about the history of the house and its traditions. After all, they are going to be a large part of its growth and survival. In life I guess you could say there are many pledgeships: the first semester of college, the first three months of a job, or the first six months of driving a car.

It is agreed that being affiliated with a greek organization does guarantee "the opportunity for personal growth and achievement." (as quoted from Monday's editorial). Also, members do meet a plethora of people. It is not anyone's responsibility to judge the acceptability of another, nor to decide who is different and wouldn't belong. Greeks are not encouraged to do so either. One enjoyment out of making new friends is finding someone who has some of the same interests and common ideas. How do you think political parties were formed? Or organizations on this campus such as SGA or the soccer club?

Hazing is a very serious issue. However, having speakers come and talk to incoming pledge classes and active members will hopefully end hazing permanently. Fortunately, KSU greek organizations are accredited for their efforts to make known what hazing involves and how to take action against it.

If being in a sorority or fraternity required snobbery, irresponsibility, racism and sexism, then many houses on this campus would have fewer members. Generally, comments about snobbery, etc. are made by people who do not like the greek system, so they count it out saying it is bad altogether.

Yes, members do pay money to live in per year. However, approximately the same amount is spent to live in a dorm, another form of organized living. All my bills that I pay go to buying friendship? Funny, I thought they went to improving the house and paying for my food and "stuff." Agreed, it is easier to make friends on one's own based on mutual interests and shared experiences. That is exactly what happens whether you are a member of a fraternity or sorority or not. I couldn't have said it any better myself.

When I look back on my college years, I will proudly reflect on my affiliation with the greek system. I cannot think of a better way to have shown my involvement on campus and meet new people. We should all take pride in our decisions in life and be responsible for our actions. It cannot be stressed enough that we are all very different—it is called individualism. Granted that greek living may not be for everyone, but then again in life, what is?

To the Editors of the K-State Collegian:

In reference to your editorial of September 17 regarding the Greek system and how it is elitist.

I would invite your attention to Pages 174 and 177 of the 1990 Royal Purple, especially the pictures of the Collegian staff and Collegian Advertising staff.

Do I detect the "lack of color" in your organization. Where are the black and international students. Are none of them journalism majors? Or maybe the Collegian management fosters the same "country club" atmosphere that they accuse the Greek system of.

To paraphrase your editorial: Among the characteristics attributed to the present-day Collegian organization are snobbery, irresponsibility, racism and sexism. All but the last phrase are, in my opinion, true.

If people in glass houses throw stones, they should be prepared to get cut.

Clay Brethour
Senior in Finance

In response to The Collegian's article about the K-State Greek system, I was both surprised and disappointed. Not only did the editorial staff condemn a system that means a great deal to me but did so unjustly. The article claimed that our fraternities and sororities discourage diversity and minority participation when the contrary is actually true. Being involved in a Greek house offers a family for students and like any family it provides its members with the support to experience all that life has to offer. This support does not take the place of self-motivation but instead serves as a complement. Whenever I have needed that extra push to get involved in something new, someone has been there to encourage me.

The Greek system in no way discourages minorities from joining. Over the past few years, those who have decided to participate have contributed to their respective house a great deal of ideas and helped push the Greek system to a higher level of success.

In summary, the Greek system has a lot to offer to the community, to the campus, and to the individual. It is not a perfect system and it is not made for everyone but its positive influences cannot and should not be ignored by those who choose not to participate.

Amy Miller
Junior, Management and Marketing

I wanted to take time out to respond to The Collegian staff's editorial on the Greek system at KSU, specifically to the comment about buying and selling friendships.

Paying dues is a natural obligation that we all must do no matter if we live in a Greek house, residence hall or in an apartment. The consequences are the same for anyone that does not pay their bills. Actually, those that live in a Greek house are given more time to pay their bills if they are experiencing financial difficulties.

Paying bills and making and establishing friendships are two exclusive issues and should not be examined collectively.

The friends I have made through my sorority will last a lifetime and no price tag can be placed on their worth. Despite what many "unqualified" critics may say, Greek life is rewarding, fun, and a great way to develop many new friendships.

Bipartisan talks continue at Capitol

Democrats expect Tuesday budget agreement

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Democratic leaders on Sunday predicted a new budget agreement before the government shutdown takes full effect on Tuesday and said the pact would ease proposed Medicare cuts and excise tax increases.

During a rare Sunday session, bipartisan talks continued around the Capitol while, outside, leaders of both parties blamed each other for the shutdown that closed federal tourist attractions and other weekend programs nationwide.

House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., said President Bush's veto Saturday of a bill designed to keep the government operating during the negotiations was a bad mistake that had slowed the talks.

The president was "saying we ought to rebuild the fiscal house of this country and (then he) sets the house on fire for a while to get our attention," Foley said.

But Vice President Dan Quayle, appearing on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley" program, said Bush was not the problem, "The problem is Congress."

Quayle predicted that 90 percent of the budget deal Bush unsuccessfully lobbied for last week would remain, and with changes it would pass.

"We now know what the problems were with the old one," agreed Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., chairman of the Senate Budget Committee.

"The new budget agreement in my view will address the problem of the overly large Medicare cuts ... and also will address the revenue part of the package," said Sasser, also appearing on ABC.

It was unclear Sunday how many of those changes would be made explicitly in the revamped package. In an attempt to make the initial budget vote easier, congressional leaders Sunday circulated a fill-in-the-blanks version of the defeated budget that was devoid of specific spending levels or tax increases.

That would leave many of the explicit decisions on tax hikes and spending cuts for later.

"There's not a dime's worth of tax increases, not 10 cents worth of cuts in the budget resolution," Foley said of the new proposal. "It allows the committees to consider these issues."

Technically, the budget is an internal congressional document, and it does not require the president's signature. The actual bills raising taxes or cutting spending would follow on its instructions, if such instructions are included.

But while Bush does not sign the budget, he has leverage because the new fiscal year began Oct. 1 without enactment of any of the spending legislation that gives government agencies authority to operate. He said he won't approve a temporary spending bill, and keep the government shut down, until he sees a budget to his liking.

"The deadline that we're talking about is on Tuesday morning," Foley said, referring to the fact that the government returns from holiday then and hundreds of thousands of workers would be sent back home.

Bush spent Sunday at his mountaintop retreat at Camp David, Md., conferring by telephone with his chief of staff, John Sununu, and Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady, part of the administration team that negotiated the defeated budget pact.

Opposition from the public to the package seemed to concentrate on a list of provisions including an increase in Medicare premiums and fees, a 12-cent motor fuel boost and a 2-cent tax on home heating oil.

Bond failure may not affect education in school district

U.S.D. 383 buys mobile classrooms

By Alan Wilds
Staff Reporter

Despite last year's failure of a facilities bond, Manhattan U.S.D. 383 superintendant Jack Hobbs said the district will remain competitive and search for improvements.

The bond failure may have a long-range impact on the district because of its increasing enrollment, but Hobbs said it will not affect the quality of education.

"It will not affect our operational budget since the bond was for the purpose of facilities," he said. "It does affect our capital outlay budget and our support for the need of additional facilities."

The district has purchased five mobile unit classrooms to accommodate the extra student load. A district-wide evaluation is underway to determine where they are needed most.

In the meantime, Hobbs and other district administrators wait the results of a city-wide survey to determine why people voted the way they did on the bond issue.

The district is considering purchasing up to five more mobile units, but Hobbs said this would not be practical.

"What people don't realize is we can house students in mobile units and carry on a classroom, but, in schools today, we have other activities going on like computer labs, physical education and libraries that are overloaded," he said.

Some schools have made office space out of former teacher's lounges and teaching stations because of overloads. At Lee Elementary School, the computer lab is set up on the stage.

Connie Barricklow, principal at Lee, said she would prefer a classroom for a computer lab but is content for the moment.

"We are tickled to death to have a computer lab at all," she said. "It sure is better than what we had."

Lee is crowded with 409 students and is using two of the mobile units. Barricklow said the enrollment changes almost daily because of transporting students to other schools.

"We are working really hard to keep a good climate, and we try to keep a positive attitude," she said. "There are a lot of things we need, but we try to keep our focus on the kids."

No one school has a greater overcrowding problem than any other. Hobbs said that out of a district enrollment of about 6,000 students for the 1990-91 school year, there has been an increase of about 157 students, mostly in grades kindergarten through sixth.

"That is really what creates problems," he said. "About one-half of the district's population is now in the elementary schools."

Clark Reinke, principal at Amanda Arnold Elementary School, said he has seen an increase of about 80 students in one year. He attributes this to a growing population.

Amanda Arnold was forced to reassign 10 sixth graders to another school because of crowding problems.

"We are seeing a class-size increase, especially in the upper grades. Therefore, we are using every available space we have," he said. "What we need is a new school."

Reinke said Amanda Arnold has not been educationally affected although it is crowded.

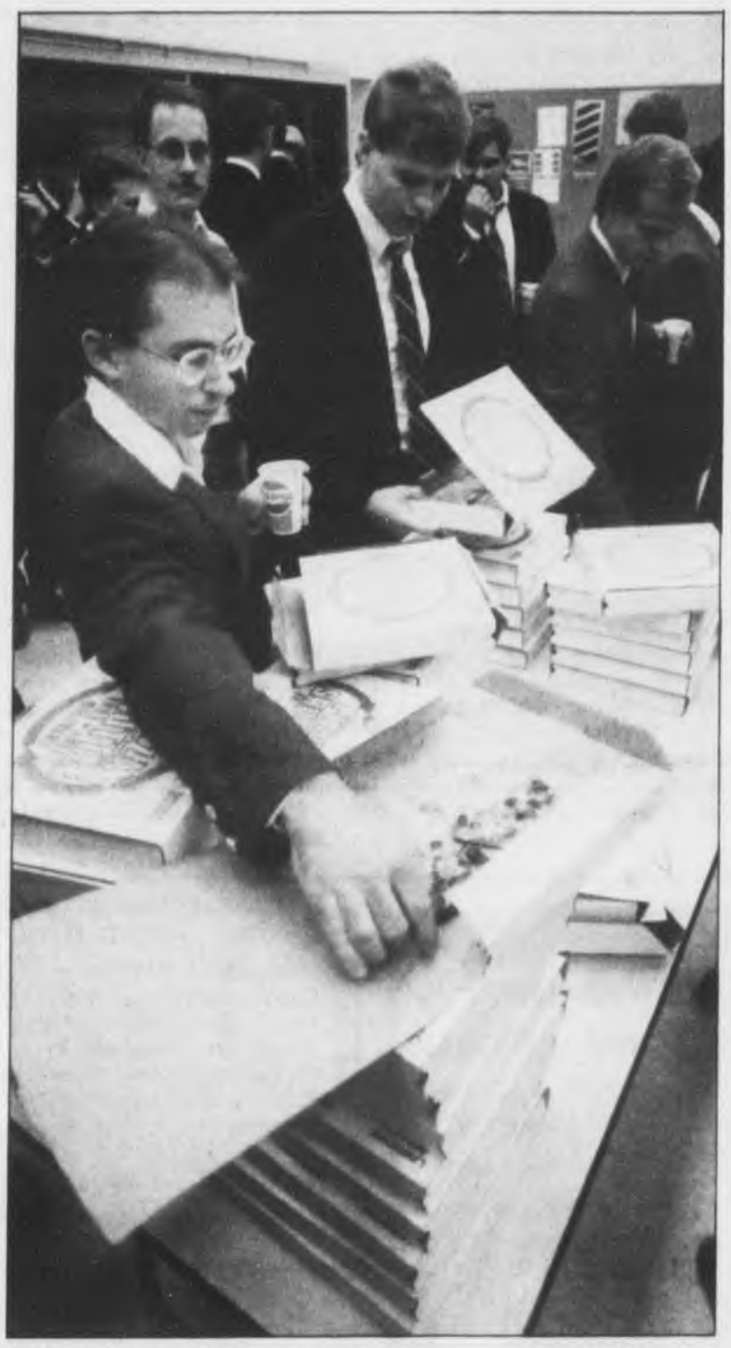
"Once we got over our initial placement problems, I think our attitudes were still very positive," he said.

The district's student/teacher ratio is set by the Board of Education at 20 students for every one teacher.

"There are numerous instances where that is being exceeded," he said. "This is one of the things that has resulted in transportation of students to other schools, which is an additional cost for us."

One thing Hobbs believes would help the district is a change in the state's school-finance formula. The formula calls for districts like Manhattan, called fourth-enrollment districts, to spend the least amount of money per student of when compared with other districts in the state with different enrollment classifications.

"Few people realize the impact this formula can have," Hobbs said. "There has to be a lot of attention called to it before anything will happen. Fortunately, I believe there are a lot of people in the state that are sensitive to it."



Some districts have filed lawsuits against the state concerning the finance formula. This began with the suit filed by the Turner School District in Kansas City, Mo.

Hobbs said U.S.D. 383 is currently deciding whether or not it has a basis to sue.

"We have to establish a district-wealth definition that will be acceptable statewide," he said. "It will no doubt be very difficult. If it wasn't, it would have been done before now."

Hobbs said that the district will make the best with what they have for now and that he will continue to assist the board whenever he can.

"I am confident we can carry on a good education," he said.

Group to assist diversity

Editor's note: This the first installment in a week-long series about diversity at K-State.

Since the fall of 1989, the Human Rights Educational Campaign Committee has been gathering and reviewing materials for the planning and implementation of K-State's "Design for Diversity."

This fall, the administration's "Design for Diversity" has begun the process of assisting the University community in its multicultural enhancement.

"The campaign places a strong focus upon relationships, the curriculum, research, recruitment and retention of a diverse student body and faculty," said Jane Rowlett, director of affirmative action and chair of the Human Rights Educational Campaign Committee. "The University has made a commitment to issues of human rights and equity."

According to the campaign literature, the goal is to influence "personal and professional behavior, perceptions of difference, and concepts of equity."

The "Design for Diversity" campaign is representative of a trend in higher education, addressing the problems, issues and perspectives of historically under-represented groups, according to the campaign literature.

"The administration is very serious about diversity," said Mordean Taylor-Archer, assistant provost of multicultural affairs and assistant dean of the graduate school. "And I have a real passion and commitment to issues of diversity and would like to channel energies to effect the necessary changes for K-State to become a model university."

Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week begins

RACIAL ETHNIC HARMONY WEEK

Cultural awareness stressed

By Cindy Jeffrey
Collegian Reporter

What began as one person's idea is on its way to becoming a K-State tradition.

Today, the second Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week begins with an opening address by the Anti-Defamation League, a presentation from the Native American Dancers, a sensitivity workshop presented by the League and a panel discussion following the movie "Casualties of War" tonight.

Barbara Baker, graduate assistant at the Women's Resource Center, had the original idea for the week. She said this year's activities are more diverse than last year.

"Last year, we put it together in three months. We didn't have the opportunity to make it as diverse as we wanted," Baker said.

"A lot of problems, like racism, we need to work on together. Separate groups can't solve them alone," she said. "I felt it was necessary to have a cultural-awareness activity — a week that brought all the various groups from all different ethnic backgrounds together to show how strong we can be together instead of separate."

Baker went to friends who felt the same way and formed a group. Once started, support came from many areas on and off campus, she said.

A program for the first Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week was put together and presented to the administration, Student Senate and other organizations.

"People are always skeptical when you introduce something new," Baker said.

"It was phenomenal that it got off last year," said Judy Davis, director of the Women's Resource Center and co-chairwoman of this year's committee. "They had so little lead time."

Andrew Cordero, director of the minority engineering program and committee co-chairman, said, "Having the pioneering work done really helps."

Cordero said that at last year's Harmony Walk everyone met at the starting point and walked in one large group.

"Individual groups can get lost in a crowd," Cordero said. This year, individual groups will be at different points along the route. "Each group's presence will be visible as they join in supporting racial/ethnic harmony," he said.

Recommendations for Diversity at K-State

From the Task Force on Minority Student Retention and from workshops and committees on diversity presented within each college.

- Implementation of a general education requirement for the study of cultural and ethnic diversity in America.
- Addition of a sensitivity component to the student evaluations of faculty to provide 1) faculty with student perceptions regarding this issue, and 2) students with the right to demand an inclusive environment.
- Requirement of Student Senate attendance at a multicultural workshop prior to allocating the activity fee.
- Creation of a faculty exchange program with primarily black universities.
- Establishment of minority post-doctorate positions.
- Establish an Affirmative Action hiring committee within each college.
- Appointment of college comittees on diversity to allow for the appropriate handling of problems and concerns unique to each college.

Definition of Hispanic causes debate

Characteristics are Spanish-based

Editor's note: This is the first installment in a week-long series focusing on hispanic students at K-State.

By Erika Parker
Staff Reporter

Hispanics make up 2.26 percent of the K-State student body this semester, said Gunile DeVault, assistant registrar. One-fourth of the hispanic students are foreign.

There are many definitions of the word hispanic.

Larry Thorpe, assistant foreign student adviser, said everyone whose heritage is from a Spanish-speaking country is hispanic. As there are several definitions of hispanic, Thorpe's definition will be the working definition for this series on hispanic students at K-State.

"Portugal is sometimes sort of lumped in there as a hispanic country, but strictly speaking, it's not a hispanic country," Thorpe said.

He said the correct term for people from Portuguese-speaking countries is Luso-Hispanic.

Not all people from Latin American countries, such as Brazil and Haiti, are hispanic because some countries are not Spanish-speaking, he said.

Uzziel Pecina, senior in Spanish and president of Hispanic American Leadership Organization, said he didn't know if Spaniards, Cubans, Dominicans and Portuguese are hispanic.

Webster's New World Dictionary defines hispanic as "Spanish or Spanish and Portuguese." Other dictionaries define it as "Latin American."

Some hispanic students give other definitions of the term hispanic.

"Hispanic for me means that I acknowledge the fact that my culture involves the customs of a Spanish-based culture. I disagree with people who attach certain other characteristics, which are not part of the definition," said Luis Montaner, fourth-year student in veterinary medicine. Montaner is from Puerto Rico.

Pecina said he prefers to be called Mexican-American.

"To be hispanic, to me, is someone who can trace his roots to any Latin American country and who's proud of his heritage," he said.

Pecina said other terms have been used to describe hispanics.

He said Chicano was a derogatory word used in the 1920s through the 1940s that became widely accepted during the ethnic movement in the 1960s. Latino, a term to which some Mexican-Americans have objected, has also been used to describe hispanics, Pecina said.

Others cited different reasons for the development of hispanic and its definition.

"While hispanic does not describe any one group of people, it's an umbrella term to refer to all of the Spanish-speaking origins," said Anita Cortez, HALO adviser.

Hispanic is a term of convenience, said Andrew Cordero,

Mandela, de Klerk meet today

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — President F.W. de Klerk and African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela have set a meeting for Monday to discuss recent black factional fighting, newspapers reported.

The ANC called last week for a meeting with de Klerk on the violence in black townships around Johannesburg, which has killed about 800 people since erupting Aug. 12.

The fighting has pitted Zulu followers of the conservative Inkatha movement against Xhosas and other blacks linked to the ANC, the nation's largest anti-apartheid group. It has strained relations between the white-led government and the ANC.

Mandela and other black leaders have accused security forces of instigating the street fighting in a bid to destabilize the country and derail peace talks with the government.

Desert sands damaging parts

SAUDI ARABIA (AP) — The sands of the Saudi desert are chewing through helicopter parts much faster than expected, causing problems for U.S. anti-tank Apaches and Cobras, Army officers say.

The helicopters belong to the 24th Mechanized Division's air brigade of Fort Stewart, Ga., which holds some of the most forward positions of the growing U.S. force in northeastern Saudi Arabia.

The helicopter crews have trained in California's Mojave Desert. But despite similarities in the terrain, the sands of the Mojave did not scour as the Saudi sand does, officers and maintenance personnel said.

Son saves mother from reptile

DARWIN, Australia (AP) — A 14-foot-long crocodile attacked a woman and started carrying her away in its jaws, but her son rescued her by jumping on the reptile's back and poking it in the eye, police said Sunday.

The woman, who was not identified, was attacked Saturday night while sleeping next to a creek in the Daly River Aboriginal Reserve, about 120 miles south of Darwin in the Northern Territory.

Ray Musgrave, Daly River police constable, said the woman's 30-year-old son jumped on top of the crocodile and poked it in the eye as it tried to retreat with his mother in its jaws. The crocodile then released the woman, police said.

Musgrave said the pair had been sleeping in a mesh tent with the woman's husband and five other children.

Officials said the woman was taken to a Darwin hospital, where she was in stable but critical condition.

Johnston defeats Klan leader

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — State Rep. David Duke, a former Ku Klux Klan leader running as a Republican, conceded defeat Sunday to incumbent U.S. Sen. J. Bennett Johnston.

Duke backed off his threat to file a lawsuit over absentee ballots cast — but not counted — for state Sen. Ben Bagert, the official Republican nominee. Bagert dropped out two days before Saturday's primary amid pressure from national GOP leaders who feared his presence in the race would help Duke force a November runoff.

"We'll help people who feel their right to vote has been abrogated," Duke said. "We'll help them pursue that if they so desire, but I'm trying to do as Bennett Johnston said, and kind of heal at this point."

Underwater volcanoes found

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — A 10-mile string of about 10 new volcanoes has been discovered on the ocean floor about 300 miles off the Oregon Coast, scientists said.

The volcanoes, some more than 100-feet high and a half-mile wide, were spotted by scientists studying maps and photographs of the sea floor along the Juan de Fuca Ridge, which runs north and south off the Washington and Oregon coasts.

They were formed within the past decade, said Robert Embley, a marine geologist with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's Pacific Marine Environmental Laboratory in Newport.

Area youth charms Letterman

HUTCHINSON (AP) — Three-year-old Seth Kinast charmed late-night television host David Letterman and his audience Friday night by reciting the Greek alphabet and the ABCs backwards.

Letterman described the youngster, the son of Troy and Trina Kinast of Hutchinson, as a 3-year-old genius who could do things typical of children three times his age. When Letterman asked Seth to recite the alphabet, Seth said, "Which alphabet should I do?" Letterman suggested the Greek alphabet.

The audience cheered after Seth named the Greek letters in their proper sequence. Seth motioned with his hands for the audience to stop applauding.

"You're a very good-looking fellow," Letterman told Seth. The youngster nodded his head in agreement.

The show ended with Seth sitting on Letterman's lap as they played with a robotic arm, a popular prop used during the show's viewer mail segment.

Child saved from planter

SALINA (AP) — A woman threw herself over her 2-year-old granddaughter just as a 1-ton wheat planter rolled over them, but both somehow survived the twisting blades.

"It was devastating," said the child's mother, Karrie Sullivan. "She just lay down on her. ... I don't think my daughter would be here today if she had not done that."

Joan Sullivan, 54, of Niles, was in a hospital Sunday recovering from broken bones and bruises. Young Sara escaped the accident Friday with just a few scrapes.

The planter had just been filled with seed and was as heavy as it gets.

Davenport gets 5-22 years

Ramon Davenport was sentenced to five to 22 years in prison on Oct. 3 for the rape of a Kansas State University student April 28.

Davenport had orginally pleaded not guilty, but changed his plea Aug. 28. He was sentenced by 21st Circuit Judge Harlan Graham.

"Davenport was sent to prison, and they then sent him to the Kansas Reception and Diagnostic Center in Topeka," said Bill Kennedy, prosecuting attorney. "They will review his case for further punishment and then he will probably be sent to the Hutchinson State Reformitory."

After four months of imprisonment, Davenport will be eligible for the 120 Day Callback, where his sentence will be reviewed by the judge to see if he is eligible for parole, Kennedy said. If he does not pass the review, he goes back to prison and then will go in front of the Parole Board later.

Davenport was a sophomore in criminal justice living in Moore Hall at K-State when the incident occurred.

Recital to raise funds

By Susan Boos
Collegian reporter

Talk about creative fund raising — music faculty members take the cake.

Faculty members will play garden hoses and accompany silent movies at the seventh annual Faculty Follies at 8 p.m. Tuesday in the All Faiths Chapel. Pi Kappa Lambda, a national honorary music society, is sponsoring the benefit concert to raise scholarship money.

"The program was designed to be humorous," said Jennifer Edwards, assistant music instructor.

The hour-long program will include Craig Parker, associate music professor, playing David Jex's "Hose and Horn Rondo" on an unusual instrument.

"I'll be playing on an instrument made of a garden hose with a Wal-Mart funnel on the end of it and a French horn mouthpiece," Parker said.

The program also includes P.D.Q. Bach's Sonata for viola "Four Hands," which will be played by Cora Cooper, music instructor, and David Littrell, assistant music professor. Jerry Langenkamp and Jean Sloop, music professors, and Edwards will play "The Musical Adventures of Jack and Jill" by Sigmund Spaeth.

Mary Ellen Sutton, music professor, will perform a piece on the organ for pedals only, and Frank Sidorfsky, associate music professor, will play Immer Kleiner's "Continually Smaller" on the clarinet.

At the end of the program, Robert Edwards, music professor, will accompany a silent movie, "The Broken Wing."

Faculty Follies was developed by Pi Kappa Lambda seven years ago.

"We wanted something different than the faculty recitals which we have all year long — people can go to those free," Parker said. "We needed a different angle to raise money."

The money is raised for one scholarship given to the outstanding music graduate chosen by the music faculty.

Tickets purchased in advance are $1 for students and senior citizens and $3 for adults. If purchased at the door, tickets are $2 for students and senior citizens and $4 for adults.

Associate dean answers questions in syndicated domestic pet column

By Danette King
Collegian Reporter

R.G. Elmore, new associate dean of academic affairs for the College of Veterinary Medicine, offers K-State more than just knowledge in research and teaching; he also has his own nationally syndicated column called "Points on Pets."

The former head of Texas A&M University's section of theriogenology, the veterinary study of the birthing process, Elmore has been writing the pet column for almost eleven years.

He started the column while a faculty member at the University of Missouri-Columbia. Elmore said he came up with the idea for a newspaper question-and-answer pet column when he started thinking of ways to get involved with the public.

"I planned to syndicate myself," he said.

After running the weekly column in two newspapers for three years, Elmore decided to branch out. He sent samples of his column to Copley News Services in San Diego, Calif. At that time, the service was looking for a veterinary column to syndicate.

"It was great timing," Elmore said. "I informally agreed I would write the column once a week."

That was eight years ago.

The column is currently part of Copley's family and variety syndicated packages.

"I don't know where it goes," he said. "I just get letters from all over."

Some letters Elmore has received have come from readers on both coasts, the Chicago area and Oklahoma.

The column is geared toward information of interest to people about domestic animals, Elmore said.

"One of the columns that I wrote that got more response than others was a column on snakes," Elmore said.

He has written columns on exotic animals and wild animals which people easily catch and then try to domesticate.

"I try to show why these animals are not good for pets," Elmore said.

In addition to writing the pet column, he has written columns for two cattle-breed association publications and published more than 100 popular and scientific papers concerning studies in veterinary medicine.

Carolyn Roberts, assistant dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine, said Elmore has become involved quickly in many aspects of the college.

"Dr. Elmore is a very positive addition to the College of Veterinary Medicine," Roberts said.

Elmore said he is enjoying his new home.

"I am looking forward to being here at Kansas State," he said. "The school has a good reputation nationally, and it is fun to be a part of it."

New Jardine unit to benefit families

By Dan Scott
Collegian Reporter

The Jardine Community Building, scheduled for completion in fall 1991, will serve mainly as a meeting facility for the Jardine community.

"Basically, it's a multipurpose building," said Chuck Werring, director of the Department of Housing. "The main focus of the building is to provide a place where programs can be activated that cater to the families that live in Jardine."

Jardine currently has no such facility, Werring said.

Located in the northwest corner of campus, the family housing complex has 540 apartments and about 1,000 residents.

"We have many non-traditional and international students," said Susanne Tunstall, family housing coordinator. "We will certainly have programs geared to their needs."

The building, measuring about 100 by 120 feet, will be in the center of the Jardine community between Kerr Street and Jardine Drive, Werring said. Just south of the building site are basketball courts and a playground.

The building will have four rooms. One will be a large meeting room that can be divided into three rooms by curtains. Another will be Tunstall's office, now in the Pittman Building. The third and fourth rooms will be an industrial kitchen and the mayor council's office.

"Each conglomeration of buildings has a person called a mayor that represents the tenants' concerns," Werring said. "Right now, the council uses a vacant apartment in one of the buildings."

The kitchen will be used by the hotel and restaurant management program as a teaching facility, Werring said.

"We've talked about having theme dinners," Werring said. "Dinners of different nationalities could be prepared in the kitchen, and other tenants could share in the program. Afterward, they could recreate at the basketball courts."

Besides residents of Jardine, Werring said traditional residence hall students will be able to use the building for programs and activities.

Contractors are now constructing the frame of the building. The outer shell, which includes sidewalks, electrical and plumbing leads and air conditioning, will be completed sometime around Thanksgiving, Werring said.

Computer labs, services offered

Campus access available 24 hours for students, faculty

By Eric Robison
Collegian Reporter

K-State offers the use of computer labs and computer services to faculty and students.

"The machines are used in different learning programs offered by the University, and they can be used for sending electronic mail, statistical programs and various other tasks," said Tom Gallagher, director of computing and telecommunications.

The computer labs are spread through campus. The microcomputer labs are in Fairchild, Dickens, Seaton and Justin halls. The Seaton and Fairchild labs are open 24 hours a day, and the Dickens and Justin labs are open 12 to 15 hours a day on weekdays and eight hours a day on the weekends.

"Students can tap into the mainframe on campus, and there is no direct charge unless they are doing something with high-quality paper and want their document letter-perfect. Then they get charged for the paper," Gallagher said. "The only thing they need to tap into the computer is a modem which hooks up to their phone and connects them to the mainframe."

Virgil Wallentine, head of the Department of Computing and Information Science, said, "We try to offer a lot of services to students to introduce them to computers, but our most popular class is the Intro to Personal Computers where we try to introduce them to the power of a computer, bookkeeping skills, word processing, spreadsheets and communications through electronic mail."

He said viruses can affect computer programs.

"Viruses are computer codes that attach themselves to another program that acts as a host and then when that program is run, it can wipe out the document, change it or replicate it." Wallentine said. "Some viruses just print something funny on the screen and then go away. Others spread themselves through phone lines and can wipe out programs."

"The viruses hit somewhere else first, then they get here and eat memory or whatever they are designed to do. The best chance we have of stopping a virus is to catch it before it gets to us," Gallagher said.

K-State tries to take precautions to prevent tampering with the computers themselves and the software that runs them.

K-State's mainframe is an IBM 3084 and can do 27 million instructions per second, Gallagher said, and is a little above-average for a mainframe.

Greeks, Collegian staff need to bury hatchet

Many of you have probably been following the recent Collegian/greek mudslinging match with curiosity, amusement or even highly partisan sentiment.

I have been watching this conflict develop with a feeling of dismay. Nothing about this conflict is new. No new arguments have been presented by either side. It has been, in my opinion, a sophomoric rehash of all the greek and anti-greek rhetoric we have heard many times before.

So why did the Collegian instigate the whole mess? To answer this question, I need to explain how editorials get on the editorial page. Editorial Board is a group of Collegian staff members that meets twice each week to determine the editorial stance of the newspaper.

At these meetings, topics for possible editorials are presented, discussed and debated until at least agreement by a simple majority is reached. Editorials are then assigned to be written by Editorial Board members. After being written, the editorials are edited for Associated Press style, grammar and spelling and are then published. Collegian editorials represent the opinion of the Collegian Editorial Board. The members of the Editorial Board are listed on the editorial page at least once each week.

The Collegian maintains a policy of publishing unsigned editorials. In this way, editorials can be presented as the opinion of one body — the Editorial Board. Different newspapers have different policies about printing unsigned editorials. The Collegian's policy will remain as is.

The Editorial Board takes sole (and, simultaneously, collective) responsibility for the opinions presented in editorials. But because an individual must write the editorial, the editorial may contain the personal biases of its writer.

The question then follows — why aren't written editorials approved by the Editorial Board before being published? Obviously, the chances of the Editorial Board reaching agreement on the specific wording, writing style and manner in which the editorial is presented is slim. Even if the Editorial Board were able to reach agreement about an editorial before being printed, the amount of time involved in this process would be prohibitive. This process would also create, in my opinion, an element of prior restraint that goes against the very reason newspapers print unsigned editorials in the first place.

Just as some have seen fit to send letters to the editor or purchase expensive advertising

Eric Henry
EDITOR

space to express their disagreement with the Sept. 17 Collegian editorial about greek diversity, I would be remiss if I didn't try to clear up a few misconceptions furthered by Friday's full-page "Rebuttal" paid advertisement.

First, the Editorial Board is accused of libeling K-State greeks in the Sept. 17 editorial. This is simply not so. Yes, the Collegian did print negative comments about the greek system at K-State. This commentary does not, however, constitute libel under the law. Actually, we should all be glad this is the case. We are all still free to speak out against large groups of people. Lawful criticism of the government is a good example of this freedom. The precedent set in Kansas courts is that groups of 100 or more cannot successfully sue for libel.

Second, the claim was made that the Collegian staff and the Collegian advertising staff does not appear to be diversified. Student Publications has made a concerted effort to have diversified staffs. It is in our best interest to do so.

By striving to have staffs representative of as many different races and ethnicities and backgrounds as possible, Student Publications, and you the reader, benefit from having the collective experience and vision of diverse staffs. Minority participation in Student Publications is not only encouraged, it is vital. The notion that diversity can be discerned on the basis of appearances is misleading.

Third, the statement was made that greek monies "helped pay for the computers the editors use at the Collegian." This is only partially true. Money from student fees constituted 19 percent of Student Publications' income last year. Obviously, a percentage of this money comes from tuition paid by greeks as well as non-greeks. This money is becoming increasingly important as Student Publications now enters a time of financial crisis due to increasing operating costs and expensive maintance costs to an old, deteriorating computer system.

Last, the heading on the "Rebuttal" advertisment claims that the articles printed therein were not published by the Collegian for "obvious reasons."

So far this semester, the Collegian has received 127 letters to the editor. Of those, 58 have been published.

The Collegian received 6 letters in regard to the Sept. 17 editorial. Of those, three were published. Even if one assumes that all letters received about the Sept. 17 editorial denounced the Collegian, the publication rate of letters in regard to the editorial remains proportionally higher than the publication rate of all letters.

Also, it must be noted that two Collegian columnists spoke out against the editorial.

Today is an excellent day to bury the hatchet. Today is the first day of Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week. Let us all embrace this opportunity together. I think we have all tired of the senseless name-calling and finger-pointing. Let us move towards happiness and harmony together.

Campus safety should be made top priority

There is an ever-present problem on this campus that needs attention immediately, not tomorrow or next week.

No, it's not more parking spaces or bigger and better facilities. It is campus safety.

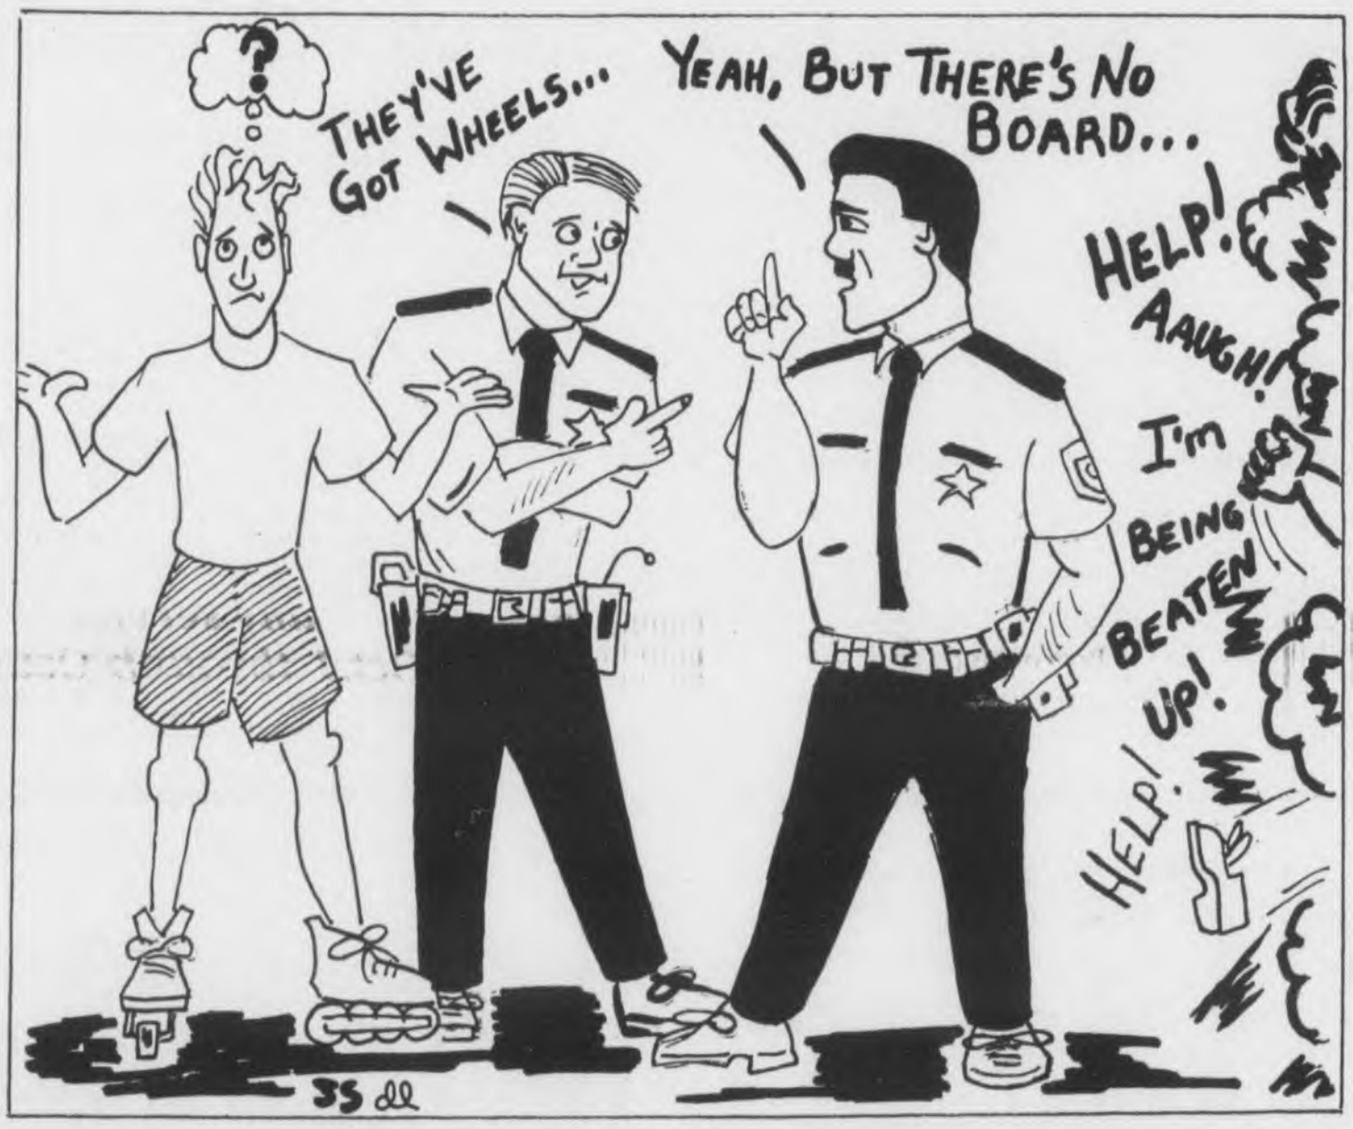
This issue is brought up time and time again, and it will continue to be a hot topic of discussion until the problem is under control.

Better lighting on University streets and sidewalks is a deterrent for thieves, muggers and rapists, but the real solution is more people — well-qualified people — to patrol the streets and sidewalks and to be visible to the campus community.

Ideally, more campus police officers would be the most effective solution. If that is not feasible, then the installation of campus-safety action groups would be a great contribution.

More people are needed in the streets, on the sidewalks and in the alleys to look out for potential problems and to be ready to respond when an incident occurs.

If the K-State Police had more officers, greater emphasis could be placed on keeping the campus safe.



With the addition of more police officers, patrol units could walk the streets instead of just driving around in their cars wasting increasingly expensive fuel.

It is sad when three officers stop a student for something that isn't even illegal, as in last week's skating incident.

It is sadder when a 6-foot-6, 280-pound man can be assaulted by three men and not one officer can respond.

The priorities seem to be in the wrong place. This campus needs less occurrences of three officers responding to a minor incident and no officers responding to a major incident.

The Department of Public Safety needs to change its procedures for patrolling campus or increase its patrolling force or it will continue to jeopardize the safety of the public it aims to protect.

LETTERS

Black greeks unique

Editor,

This letter addresses a few statements made by Steve Patton in an ad in Friday's Collegian.

First of all, I am a black American woman. I am also a proud member of Delta Sigma Theta sorority. I became a bit perturbed when I read that "the problem is that some minorities aren't interested or feel intimidated by the greek system."

Before I begin, Patton, you and other K-State students must realize something. Delta Sigma Theta is not part of the traditional white greek system — it is part of the black greek system. Besides Delta Sigma Theta, there are seven other black greek organizations represented on this campus: Omega Psi Phi fraternity, Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity, Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity, Phi Beta Sigma fraternity, Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority, Zeta Phi Beta sorority, and Sigma Gamma Rho sorority.

There is a substantial difference between the white greek system and the black greek system. I have come to notice that being in a white greek system is synonymous with being in a "house." I did not pledge Delta Sigma Theta for a temporary living arrangement. I pledged because of its unique sense of sisterhood and its devotion to public service. I take great offense when I wear my letters and someone refers to my sorority as a "house." Due to the poor minority enrollment at K-State, black greeks are unable to finance a house for each group. Yes, black greeks do strive for high academic endeavors, but it is much more than that. Membership is not just while you are attending college, it is also for the rest of your life. It will never be "Oh, I was a Delta back in my college days." I am Delta Sigma Theta to the end. I was not interested in the white greek system for the simple fact that it had nothing to offer me. And I certainly did not feel intimidated by the white greek system. How can anyone feel intimidated about a rush process that is comparable to picking oranges out of a fruit bin?

Obviously, Patton, you did not do all of your research. I am referring specifically to your failure to mention the established black greek organizations. I would be more than happy to divulge information about my sorority to you or anyone interested in knowing more about Delta Sigma Theta. I am sure that my fellow black greeks take the same stand. I pose a challenge to the members of the white greek system to go out and learn about the black greek organizations that exist on K-State's campus. Take it upon yourselves to learn the function and structure of the historic black greek organizations. It is quite evident that some students are unaware of our existence.

Contrary to popular belief, black greeks have been around since 1906 when Alpha Phi Alpha was founded.

Editors dodge issue

Editor,

In last Thursday's editorial commending the administration's handling of the demotion of Thomas Isenhour, the editors continue to insult their readers in using informal, offhand vernacular. In a flippant tone, the writer condescendingly accuses us, "the college folk," of showing "a lack of real-world vision," whatever the hell that means. The writer then commends the administration because it has not "stooped to the back-stabbing, mudslinging level that often accompanies such affairs." While this may be true, Coffman uses typical administrativ-ese, using a lot of ambiguous words without saying anything relevant to the issue to explain the situation. Both Coffman and Wefald have frequently and eloquently displayed their proficiency in administrav-ese, especially in regard to the University's "restructuring."

Although the author of the editorial seems to think the affair was handled in a professional manner, I am still wondering why it happened. Why was the dean demoted? Was he not doing his job? Was the college suffering due to his leadership? And, if so, shouldn't we be told? Or was it a political move? These are questions the Collegian, the watchful press, should be asking.

It seems convenient that the College of Arts and Sciences will not have a dean during the critical process of restructuring. An interim dean will not have the same vested interest in the college and will be more likely to bow to the wishes of the administration in matters of restructuring.

It would be nice to see the Collegian get its hands dirty and take a more critical look at the affairs of our University instead of continuing its policy of backing the administration's every move. While I have no idea of Isenhour's abilities, I am skeptical about the timing of his dismissal. As the voice of the students, maybe the Collegian should be also. I would like to remind the editors to do something they seem to have forgotten: question authority.

Wamego attracts skating teens

By Rob Batchman
Collegian Reporter

Mix 150 teen-agers, seven wooden ramps, a bunch of skateboards and lots of excitement and you get a Skate Jam.

Wamego's Oktoberfest was the site of this year's third annual Skate Jam. Skateboarders from across the area came together to practice, perform and just have a good time.

"Everybody just gets together and skates," said Mike Peek, 18, Wamego. "People come from Topeka, Manhattan and Riley to use the ramps and work on different moves."

Peek, along with Travis Piper, 18; Zach Roose, 15; and Matt Wells, 14, all of Wamego, organized this year's Skate Jam on Lincoln Street in Wamego. Roose said that the event was designed to get skateboarders together to share skills and learn new stunts.

"It's a way for all skateboarders in the area to get together," Roose said. "People are here to do what they like to do and skate however they want."

The skateboarders performed stunts off ramps one-, two- and three-feet high. A five-foot ramp, called a quarterpipe, was the main attraction as the skateboarders tried their skills at such stunts as launches, kick flips and air walks. Nearly 100 spectators watched the skaters.

"It's just like any other sport," said Steve Schierholz, 17, Fort Riley. "I just do it for the fun — there's no pressure here at Skate Jam."

Schierholz has been skating for three years. He practices near his home in Fort Riley, and he said skating takes up most of his spare time.

"I practice whenever I get a chance," he said. "You have to be dedicated and love the feeling of different stunts. You have to have an open mind because you need to develop your own style."

Mike Shanks, 12, of Manhattan described this year's Skate Jam as rad.

"It's easy-going. The other skaters don't make fun of you when you wreck," he said. "The whole event gets you hyped up, and it helps you to learn new stunts."

Shanks said he started skating because he was bored and could find nothing else to do.

"I was tired of riding bikes and stuff, so I tried something new," he said. "Now it's hard to quit."

Ricky Gondura, 12, Manhattan said many skaters think other people look down on them because of the way they dress and act.

"We're just the same as other people," he said. "People accuse us of breaking the sidewalks and destroying things, but we don't do anything wrong."

Steve Bachman, Manhattan, said that he is glad his son Aaron, 14, has chosen skateboarding.

"It's an unique hobby," Bachman said. "Aaron's been involved with it for three years. It's practically a sport."

Second half dooms 'Cats' upset hopes

Mike Venso/Staff

Nebraska free safety Tyrone Byrd and strong safety Curtis Cotton block a pass intended for K-State's Michael Smith in the third quarter of the Cornhuskers' win in KSU Stadium Saturday afternoon.

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

The final score read Nebraska 45, K-State 8.

The 35,757 fans that attended K-State's Big Eight Conference opener, however, knew the outcome did not reflect the game.

For the entire first half, K-State's defense put Nebraska's No. 1 rushing offense in the nation in its place. K-State forced a punt on each Nebraska possession except two and trailed 3-2 until the final seconds of the half.

Then, in the second half, Nebraska showed why it is the eighth-ranked team in the country.

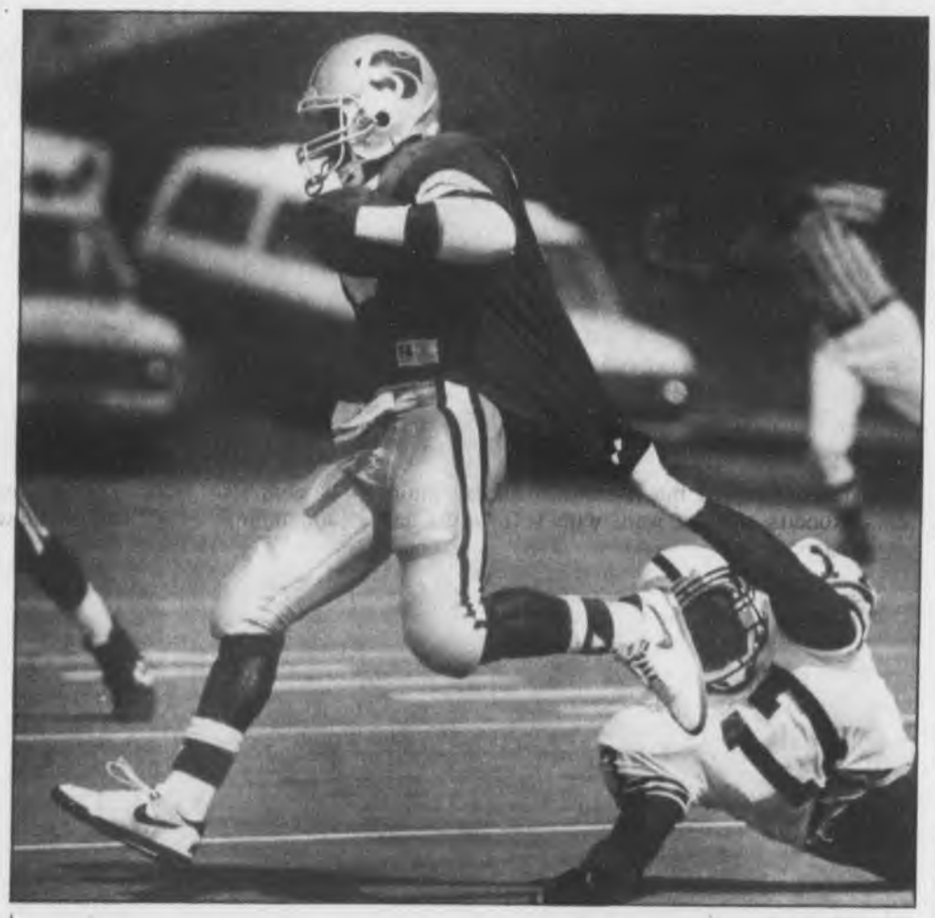
The 'Huskers scored two touchdowns in the third quarter and three within four minutes in the fourth quarter. Tate Wright hit two field goals for the 'Cats, but they were too little, too late.

"I was proud, and our defense played so well in the first half and played very well in the third quarter," Coach Bill Snyder said. "We put our defense in a real bind most of the ballgame."

Throughout the second half, K-State's offense could not muster any ball movement, and as a result the defense was on the field most of the half.

"I think the score is indicative of two things," Snyder said. "Number one is our inability to move the football with any consistency whatsoever through the entire ballgame, our inability to protect our passer, inability to create any running lanes for our running game up front, and consequently our inability to control the clock."

Nebraska's NCAA-leading defense accomplished its tasks by stopping K-State's offense in its tracks. K-State recorded 40 yards rushing on its way to 159 yards total offense and an average gain of 2.3 yards per play.



"It is one of the best defenses I have ever played against," K-State quarterback Paul Watson said. "We have a young offensive line, and that is a learning experience for them. It's a credit to Nebraska's defense. They can stop anybody when they want to."

One of the largest contributors to Nebraska's scoring was in their punt and kickoff returns. The 'Huskers averaged 21.3 yards on punt returns and amassed 153 yards on three kickoff returns, including a 99-yard touchdown return by Tyrone Hughes.

"The kicking game was instrumental, I think, in field position all day," Snyder said. "They ran back kicks pretty much at will. Kickoff and punt return coverage was not good."

K-State got their only two points in the first half from a blocked punt by William Price that rolled out of the end zone for a safety. The score remained 3-2 until Nebraska went 81 yards in 2:09 to increase their lead to 10-2 at halftime.

SAEs, Edwards Hall win wrestling titles

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

The conclusion of the weeklong intramural wrestling meet was last Friday's all-University championships.

The wrestlers from the independent division claimed every all-University championship in the 10 weight classes.

"It was a real fine tournament because of the quality of wrestlers. They are good athletes as far as their sport goes," said Steve Martini, director of intramurals. "The spectators were great. All the bleachers were filled, especially in the fraternity division, where they usually have a large following of about 60 guys."

The all-University championships are not worth participation points, however, and many wrestlers tired of a full week of wrestling did not compete.

"I can't say anything negative. There were a large number of quality wrestlers," Martini said. "Some of them were wrestled out. There are no points given to the all-U champion, and sometimes the drive to go on and win is gone.

"The independent division is pretty salty. I wish all the wrestlers wanted to wrestle on Friday because it would be very exciting," he said.

In the points division that concluded last Thursday evening, Sigma Alpha Epsilon successfully defended its title in the fraternity division, Edwards Hall captured the residence hall title and Aggieville Athletic Club emerged as the independent champion.

The SAEs posted the largest margin of victory of any of the three divisions by outdistancing second-place finisher Pi Kappa Alpha 117-92. The SAE's qualified five wrestlers for the finals and four emerged champions. Beta Theta Pi was third with 57.

Individual champions for the SAEs were Mark Schmidt, who captured the 142-pound weight class; Kurt Schmidt, who won the 150-pound class; John Walker, the champion in the 158-pound class — which had the most participants of any class — and Mark Wentzel, who won the 177-pound class.

Thom Babbitt and Charles Lunkwitz led the way in the residence hall division. Babbitt and Lunkwitz posted victories in the 167- and 177-pound weight classes, respectively. The finishes helped the men of Edwards Hall capture the overall championship 32-24 over Goodnow 4.

The independent division was dominated by Aggieville Athletic Club, which had three individual champions en route to 84-63 victory over the Ironmen. Charles Anderson, J.D. Hand and Jon Ray were the champions for Aggieville Athletic Club in the 126-, 158- and 190-pound classes, respectively.

There were 240 wrestlers that competed in the week-long tourney, six more than competed last year.

Other winners:

Fraternity — 118 — Tom Nguyen, Pi Kappa Alpha; 126 — Chad Carter, Pi Kappa Alpha; 134 — Doug Neuschafer, Pi Kappa Alpha; 167 — Preston Underwood, Sigma Nu; 190 — Kevin Kolbeck, Pi Kappa Alpha; Heavyweight — Jake Bodine, Delta Sigma Phi.

Riniker bests elements, foes

By Todd Fertig

Though unaccustomed to the cold, windy conditions, K-State freshman tennis player Michelle Riniker won the top singles bracket for the top 1-4 players from each school.

Playing at home on a weekend that concluded with bad weather for the finals, the team withstood the elements to show improvement over its showing at Nebraska last weekend, Coach Steve Bietau said.

The home meet was added to the schedule when the Missouri Valley Intercollegiate Tournament at Springfield, Mo., was cancelled. Bietau was pleased that the team had the opportunity to gain the experience from several matches in spite of the cancellation.

"I was very impressed with our efforts," Bietau said. "It was the second consecutive week we had a chance to play, and I'm impressed that we're maturing mentally and are controlling our destiny on the court."

Riniker began the tournament on Saturday with a 6-0, 6-1 win over Janice Ferreira of Tulsa. Riniker then edged Laura Hagemann 7-5, 7-6, winning the tie breaker 9-7. Riniker dropped the second set in both the semifinal and final matches, but beat Karen Theck of Wichita State 6-4, 2-6, 7-5 to reach the finals, where she defeated Renee Raychaudhuri of Kansas 6-2, 1-6, 6-2.

Bietau said the meet was Riniker's first in such unfavorable conditions, but he said she focused on her matches well and didn't let the weather affect her play.

"I think this is the best she's played since she's been here," Bietau said of Riniker. "She's a real talented player with a willingness to listen and improve."

Riniker, a freshman from Switzerland, recognized Bietau's guidance as crucial in the championship match.

"Coach brought me back with confidence throughout the match," Riniker said. "I think she (Raychaudhuri) got used to my playing, and I had trouble with my concentration. In the third set, I was more confident."

Raychaudhuri, the second-place finisher, knocked K-State's No. 2 player, Thresa Burcham, from contention in the second round of the tournament. Burcham defeated Tulsa's Kelly Ward 6-3, 6-3 before losing to Raychaudhuri 6-2, 6-0.

She then bounced back after dropping the first set in her match against Hagemann, winning 4-6, 6-1, 6-4. In the match for fifth place against Abby Woods of Kansas, Burcham won 6-2, 6-2.

Suzanne Sim won two matches in the consolation bracket and placed 10th, losing to Giaocarla Di-Laura of Wichita State in the consolation finals.

The two doubles teams in the top bracket from K-State reached the semifinal round. Riniker and Neili Wilcox lost to Kansas in the finals 6-3, 6-2. Sim and Burcham, playing together for the first meet this year, beat Tulsa and took a set from the eventual champions from Kansas, losing in the semifinals 6-3, 4-6, 6-1. The duo forfeited its match against Wichita State for third place to protect Burcham, who was playing on an injured ankle.

Though it was a successful weekend for Riniker, she said her performance left plenty of room for improvement.

"I got frustrated at times, and I shouldn't do that," Riniker said. "I can make fewer mistakes and concentrate better, and that's important to winning."

Athletes inducted into hall of fame

In the words of K-State radio announcer Mitch Holthus, it was "a big, big, big, big evening."

More than 50 years of greatness was celebrated at the K-State Sports Hall of Fame Induction Ceremony Friday night. Eight great contributors to K-State athletics were honored as the inaugural class.

Ward Haylett, Elden Auker, Jack Gardner, Ernie Barrett, Thane Baker, Veryl Switzer, Bob Boozer and Lynn Dickey were honored in the ceremony at Bramlage Coliseum.

Athletic Director Steve Miller opened the ceremonies by describing the creation of the hall of fame and the inductee-selection process. Miller headed the development of the hall, which became a reality in 1989, when selection processes and guidelines were formulated.

To be selected, the inductees' names had to appear on 12 of the ballots submitted by a 16-member selection committee. Various accomplishments and contributions to K-State athletics were taken into consideration.

Introducing the inductees were sportscasters from the history of K-State athletics. Holthus, K-State's current play-by-play voice; Bob Hilgendorf, a revolutionary in sportscasting and K-State announcer from 1947-54; Dev Nelson, long-time sportscaster at K-State and sports information director from 1966-72; and Fred White, announcer for the Kansas City Royals who broadcast K-State sports from 1967-79 were all there.

Holthus opened the presentations by honoring Haylett as the "trunk" of the K-State sports family tree.

"A hall of fame, to me, means a family tree of success, a passing of generations of excellence," Holthus said. "It is only fitting then that our first inductee is Ward Haylett."

Haylett guided the K-State track program from 1928-63 and helped coach several international and Olympic teams.

Ward Haylett, Jr. of Kansas City accepted the honor for his father, whose health wouldn't permit him to attend the banquet.

Holthus introduced the next inductee as an athlete who lived the dream of most sports fans, the dream of being the best all-around athlete.

Elden Auker starred in football, basketball and baseball at K-State before going on to a 10-year career with the Detroit Tigers. Auker commented how sports have changed and on the attitudes and behaviors he finds in athletics on many campuses.

"I feel there are too many athletes and too many colleges that have established the wrong priorities," Auker said. "I'd rather have K-State win two or three ballgames each year and have all of their seniors graduate with a bona fide college degree. I think that's better than any national championship this University could ever win. I'm proud of my alma mater for maintaining a high level of athletic achievement and keeping the name clean."

Two of the men responsible for K-State's second-place finish in the 1951 NCAA basketball tournament were the next inductees honored. Jack Gardner, remembered as the leader in the drive for the building of Ahearn Field House, often called "the house that Jack built," coached the Wildcat basketball team for nine seasons and won 649 college games overall in his 36-year coaching career.

"I imagine all the great players that I had the pleasure of coaching are feeling a little like the horse that ran his heart out in the race only to see the jockey stand up on the winner's platform afterwards," Gardner said.

Ernie Barrett captained Gardner's 1950-51 team and led the squad in scoring, earning him All-American status that season. He played two seasons with the Boston Celtics before returning to K-State to hold various positions in the athletic department, including athletic director from 1969-75.

Often referred to as "Mr. K-State," Barrett expressed his appreciation for being honored for his contributions in the past, but he vowed to play an active role in the future as well.

The next two inductees, men recognized as much for their contributions off the field as on, expressed appreciation to others, particularly Haylett, who made contributions to their lives while at K-State.

Baker, a collegiate track champion who won four medals in two Olympic games, works with several projects and organizations benefitting the community and in 1977 was honored as one of college athletics' top 10 contributors to society.

Switzer, a football and track star in the early 1950s, expressed appreciation for the contributions of others in helping to lift racial barriers in the Big Eight. Switzer, one of the Big Eight's first black athletes, noted that K-State was the first school in the conference to permit blacks to compete.

Conference long jump champion in 1952, an All-American in football and the fourth player chosen in the 1954 NFL draft, Switzer has held various positions at K-State and currently serves as associate director of athletics and assistant vice president for institutional advancement.

Fred White introduced the final two inductees: Bob Boozer, the third-leading scorer in the history of K-State basketball who led the 1959 Wildcats to the top ranking in the season's final national poll; and Lynn Dickey, the all-time leading passer in the history of Wildcat football who twice was named all-conference at quarterback.

White recognized both as athletes who possessed the ability to control their respective sports and named them the players one would choose first when putting together a football or basketball team.

Elden Auker, former K-State football, baseball and basketball player, was inducted into the K-State Sports Hall of Fame at Bramlage Coliseum Friday. Auker joined seven other inductees in the first hall-of-fame class.

Spikers split matches

The K-State volleyball squad came up short in its first five-game match of the season, losing to Iowa State Friday night in Ames. The team then won Saturday at Drake.

K-State and Iowa State traded games before the Cyclones won the match 15-4, 13-15, 15-6, 15-17, 15-7. K-State, 0-2 in the Big Eight and 5-7 overall, was led by senior Valery Roberts, who hit .343 for the match, served four aces and had 13 kills. Iowa State improved its record to 2-1 in the Big Eight and 10-6 overall.

The spikers posted their second win over Drake this year in the second match of the Iowa road trip, sweeping the Bulldogs in three games, 15-11, 15-11, 17-15, in Des Moines. Junior Rhonda Hughes led the K-State attack by hitting .478 with 13 kills. Roberts also hit well, with seven kills and a .400 hitting percentage.

A's take commanding lead

BOSTON (AP) — Maybe Babe Ruth still has a curse on the Boston Red Sox, and maybe not. But the Oakland Athletics sure do.

Bob Welch shut down the Red Sox for 7⅓ innings and Dennis Eckersley finished them off Sunday night as the Athletics won 4-1 for a 2-0 lead in the American League playoffs.

Two days, two wins for the Athletics. They won their eighth straight postseason game.

Too little talent for the Red Sox, apparently. They tied a record with their sixth straight loss in the playoffs, including a four-game sweep against the Athletics in 1988.

Colts down Chiefs

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Albert Bentley's second touchdown, a 10-yard run with 5:53 to go, rallied the Indianapolis Colts over Kansas City 23-19 Sunday despite the Chiefs' constant pounding of quarterback Jack Trudeau.

Nick Lowery kicked four field goals and Derrick Thomas had four of the Chiefs' seven sacks against Trudeau. But a fumble by Christian Okoye set up the winning touchdown midway through the final period.

Game ends in controversy

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — It looks like it'll be a final: Colorado 33, Missouri 31.

The Big Eight Conference on Sunday said a complete review of the officiating, which allowed Colorado an extra down that resulted in the winning touchdown on the game's last play, would be made. But a Big Eight spokesman doubted if the outcome could be changed by league commissioner Carl James.

"I don't think the commissioner has the power to change the outcome," Jeff Bollig, a Big Eight spokesman said Sunday.

Referee J.C. Louderback, meanwhile, said a touchdown, regardless of error, would be called back "only if there would be a penalty.

"Our record on the field as officials is that they scored on fourth down," Louderback said.

Golfers successful early

The K-State women's golf team moved to an early lead in a rain-shortened first round at the Huskie Invitational golf tourney in DeKalb, Ill.

The Wildcat women lead the tourney by two strokes. Chris Adams posted an 82 to lead K-State. The final 18 holes will be played today. Those teams that failed to finish their initial 18 will complete their opening rounds before the final 18.

The K-State men are fifth in the 19-team field in the 22nd Falcon invitation in Colorado Springs, Colo. Rice leads the tourney with a 613 after two rounds, and K-State's score is 627. Brett Vuillemin's 154 total is good for ninth overall and leads the Wildcats.

The final 18 holes of the 54-hole event will be played today.

NL series to resume

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Cincinnati Reds and Pittsburgh Pirates will resume play today in the National League Championship Series at Three Rivers Stadium.

Game time is slated for 2:18 with Danny Jackson (6-6) on the mound for the Reds, and Zane Smith (12-9) for the Pirates.

The Reds won the second game 2-1 to knot the series at one game each.

Ceremonies stir various emotions on special night

I walked with the giants Friday night.

As a member of the media covering the $100-per-plate induction ceremonies for the K-State Sports Hall of Fame, I felt a bit out of place surrounded by the legends of this University.

After all, I hadn't forked over the big bucks to be there, and I hadn't really done all that much to make K-State any better athletically down through the years.

Yet, there I was, rubbing shoulders with Ernie Barrett, Bob Boozer, Lynn Dickey and all the rest.

There I was, listening to the golden tones of Dev Nelson, as he rattled off introductory speeches like he had never left the booth.

There I was. Wow! This, to steal a line from Mitch Holthus, was big, big, big, big ...
